It is urged by the Department of the Interior that the appropriation of $100,000 is necessary to properly and satisfactorily handle the Indian affairs in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. There are now, in round numbers, about 101,000 Indians in Oklahoma. The State of Oklahoma has a population of about 1,600,000 inhabitants, 101,000 of whom are Indians. It is a very small per cent of them that are restricted—that is, Indians that can not sell their property without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. Many of them are intelligent, upright business men and women, fully competent to manage their own affairs, highly educated, and do not need the assistance of a Govern ment officer to look after their affairs. Anyone familiar with the conditions in the Five Civilized Tribes knows that these Indians do not need the daily assistance of a Government officer. There are about 15,000 or 16,000 full-blood Indians in the entire Five Civilized Tribes.

When the act of Congress of May 27, 1908, was passed there was a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate parties in different parts of the Five Civilized Tribes to assist in winding up the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes and protect the property of the Indians. Four years have passed, all of the property in the Cherokee Nation has been allotted and sold, save and except an orphan school, the capitol building and grounds, the Cherokee Advocate Publishing Co. and grounds, and the jail site, thus leaving only four pieces of property in the Cherokee Nation to be disposed of.

Some of the fractional tracts of land in the Cherokee Nation were sold on credit and some of the back payments yet remain to be paid, but the work in the Cherokee Nation is practically closed, and there is no necessity whatever for the great number of Government officers in the said nation as heretofore.

The Creek Tribe of Indians have no surplus lands and necessarily do not need as large a quota of officers as have heretofore been used. Neither does the Seminole Tribe. In the Cherokee and Creek Tribes all the patents to their lands have been issued and delivered to all of the Indian citizens, save and except a few citizens who have opposed allotments from the start and refused to receive their patents.

A different condition exists in the Seminole Nation, and I regret to say that the Interior Department has refused to deliver the patents to any of the Seminole Indian citizens, notwithstanding the patents have been signed by the governor of the said nation and the Secretary of the Interior for more than four years. However, the patents are being held by the Secretary of the Interior, and he refuses to deliver the same. The question may be asked. Why does the Secretary do this? The answer is found in his contention that if the patents were de-Hvered it might in some way injure certain suits that have been brought against purchasers in the Seminole Nation. say that, under existing laws, it would in no way whatever strengthen the title to any purchase that might have been made in violation of law, nor would it aid anyone that has been sued in his defense. The truth is it is materially damaging the landowners and farmers who desire to purchase farms in that na-The Indian allottee who desires to sell a portion of his allotment can not get as great a sum for his land as he could should be be in a position to give a clear title. On the other hand, the purchaser who desires to buy a tract of land to make a permanent home for himself and family, upon which he might spend the remainder of his days, will not go into that country and purchase land where the title is not clear. Thus, you will see, it not only injures the Indian but also the honest farmer who desires to purchase a home. Yet you hear the cry from the Interior Department that they are trying to protect the interest of the Indian. Each step taken by the Interior Department is taken with a view of perpetuating their hold upon the Indian tribes and continuing their offices in the respective nation, for which the appropriation contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota is asked.

Certainly after more than four years, and with the affairs of the Indian tribes practically closed, there is no necessity for amply sufficient to employ a sufficient number of parties to perform the duties required in winding up the affairs of the said tribes. There is no necessity at this day and age to continue a bunch of officers scattered over the country for political purposes as in the past,

Not all of the district Indian agents have been actively engaged in politics, but some of them who have heretofore resided and been located at Westville and Vinita, Okla., just prior to election have spent a great part of their time in political work, and have not always had a high regard for the kind of political work they performed. I am opposed to the appropriation, and insist that it is unnecessary, and the amount should not be appropriated. In the remarks made by the gentleman from South Dakota, he stated something with reference to a statement I should have made before the committee as to how I would permit a ward to spend his money. I stated in substance that I would have the ward select what he would need, and then I would present the matter to our probate court, and get the court to approve the transaction. say now, that one of the serious objections that has been lodged against the district agents scattered over the country is that in making purchases for the Indian, which purchases are paid for out of the Indian's own money, they have not always gone to the store where the articles could be purchased the cheapest, but they have had certain stores with whom the Indian had to trade, and certain men with whom the Indian is required to purchase his horses and mules, and I have grown tired and extremely disgusted with receiving letters regularly from the different business men through the district complaining of this kind of procedure and asking why it was that the Indian was engineered to certain business houses and required to purchase their goods. I could not answer further than to say that I supposed it was because the Indian agent exercising jurisdiction over the Indian deemed it best to send the Indian to purchase his goods from some Republican who was engaged in business near the agent's office.

And I am not the only one that has received these kind of complaints; there are other Members whose districts border on the Indian Territory line receiving the same complaints. I am not objecting to the expenditure of the Indian funds nor where the money is spent, provided it is spent for the best interest of the Indian, but I do not believe that there should be a monopoly and the Indian required to go to certain specified places. I believe he should be permitted to spend his money where it would do him the most good.

It is not a question with me of the men who are appointed as agents in Oklahoma as much as it is the system they use after they are appointed. We certainly have reached the place where we can begin to retrench and cut down the expenditures and where the Indian citizenship can be placed upon a higher plain than being governed by a set of district Indian agents who are forced upon them for no other purpose than to hold a job.

It has developed during the discussion of this bill that many suits have been brought, about four years ago, to settle these land titles, and now, after waiting four years, no definite settlement has been reached.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] called the attention of the House to what would seem a very flagrant outrage upon the interest of an allottee in the State of Oklahoma in one of the counties of the State by the county court, and stated that this transaction occurred in 1907. If so, this occurred before statehood and while we had only the United States courts in the Indian Territory part of Oklahoma, but I will be fair with the gentleman and concede that he is honestly mistaken, because the truth is that the affair mentioned occurred after statehood and under the very nose and observation of the district Indian agents, and the occurrence is one of the best reasons presented for not continuing these agents throughout the district, because that up to the present the conditions have not changed in the least. Perhaps, in some instances, the agents have been of some benefit to the Indian citizen, but taking them as a whole they have been a far greater drawback to the Indian than the good they have done, considering the expense.

I have been unable to arrive at an accurate detailed statement of the expenses of these agents. In making an effort to secure an accurate statement from the Indian superintendent at the Union Agency, Muskogee, Okla., he advised that the expenses for the current fiscal year averaged for each district Indian agent $6,250. He further states that in some instances special probate work has been done and is being done, so that the expenses in the different districts vary a great deal. This is as nearly an accurate statement as I have been able to get as to the expenditure of any of the Indian funds or the funds appropriated by Congress. They always ring in something that is will.

There is absolutely no reason why this appropriation of 00,000 should be added at this time. The general appropria-$100,000 should be added at this time. tion included in this bill for the Five Civilized Tribes is amply sufficient to carry on this work, and besides there is a very large appropriation made for special agents. If it becomes necessary, let some of these special agents be assigned to the Five Civilized Tribes.

We had up for discussion the other day a provision making appropriation for the Indian police. I opposed that provision, as Oklahoma has ample protection for its citizens, and these Indian police were not needed. I oppose this $100,000 appropriation on the same ground. Oklahoma has a complete State organization, and the offices are filled by as competent officers as any State in the Union, by men of high integrity, educated, and who desire to see the law enforced as rigidly as any living man. We also have a department of charities and corrections, which is doing excellent work in our State, and daily looking after the interest of the citizens in the State, and this department is assisting the county courts to perform their probate work, and is doing as valuable service as the Government officers in Oklahoma.

There has, perhaps, been some unfair dealings with the estates of the Indians, but this condition not only exists in the Five Civilized Tribes, but exists in any State in the Union where estates are to be adjusted by the courts and the landed interests are to be sold through the courts or partitioned. But it would seem that because we are in Oklahoma and in an Indian country all the controversies arising out of landed estates are charged up to the incompetency of the Indian. It is untrue and should not be so construed.

The Indian citizen in Oklahoma should be placed on an equal plane with the citizens of that State or any other State, and the courts in Oklahoma and its officers are as well qualified and competent to take care of its citizens as any Government officers sent down there by the Interior Department, and I respectfully submit that the amendment providing for $100,000 should be defeated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Dakota use some of his time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How much time has the gentleman on the other side used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has used 15 minutes and has 57 minutes left.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Inasmuch as the gentleman has 57 minutes left and I have only 20 minutes, I think the gentleman from Texas ought to give some of his time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CABTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, an Irishman fresh from the Emerald Isle landed in one of the new towns in western Oklahoma during a campaign on the cow law-a proposition to determine whether old Bossy should be kept in the pen or left to termine whether old Bossy should be kept in the pen or left to browse upon the public domain. Pat had never heard of such an election, but finally one day he ran into the corner drug store and said to his friend, the drug clerk, "Begorrah, I'm beginning to understand this bloody cow law at last." "What do you know about the cow law?" said the druggist. "I know this," says Pat, "I can always tell which man owns the cow be the end of the argymint he takes.'

In this instance I own the cow. I am one of the Five Civilized Tribes, and if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is correct in his estimate of the value of the property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, I and each of my family would be entitled to about $1,200 to $1,500 from this estate.

The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] made one statement which I do not think I can afford to let go unchallenged. The gentleman may not have intentionally attempted to implicate anyone of wrongdoing, but by inference he certainly left that impression. The gentlemen in a colloquy between himself, myself, and another gentleman, said that this restriction, defended by myself and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] would take from the Five Civilized Tribes every vestige of protection they now have and that Members of the House might draw their own conclusions as to why we favor it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield neither to the gentleman from South Dakota nor to any other man on the face of the earth in my loyalty to the Indian people and their interests. I yield to no man in fidelity to my own race of people, and no man is willing to make a greater sacrifice than I in order that the helpless Indian may be protected in every possible way, so that they may in the end be merged into this great American citizenship and take care of themselves, as I verily believe they eventually Recurring to the paragraph under consideration, I venture the assertion that never were trust funds handled by such devious and irregular course as is pursued in the administration of the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma by this Government.

Here we are administering in a fiduciary capacity upon an estate worth many millions of dollars, paying salaries and expenses, buying, selling, bartering, exchanging, and receiving royalties, rents, and sales moneys, running up to the milliondollar mark on both sides of the ledger every year, for all of which the responsibility rests solely upon this Congress, and yet we do not take the precaution to put the slightest restriction upon our disbursing agent.

The purpose of this amendment is simply to bring the expenditure of these tribal funds under the same careful rules and regulations as are required with the funds of the Federal Government. To require regular submission to the proper committee of estimates necessary to cover the expenses of administration, so that this committee may pass upon the justice of these estimates and recommend the necessary appropriation to Congress before the money is spent.

If you will run back over the Indian appropriation bills for the past few years, the items for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma are sure to arrest your attention, for you will immediately notice that this is the one lone State in which there seems to have been a gradual decrease, year by year, in the expenses of administering the affairs of Indian tribes. To the uninitiated it might look as though at last some progress were actually being made toward a real settlement of at least a portion of Indian affairs. But if you will investigate more closely into these conditions you will find that as we blew out the candle at one end we simply lit the other and started it burning in full blast, for as the regular appropriations of funds from the Federal Treasury have been cut down just in that proportion has the use of tribal funds been correspondingly increased.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, if any expenditure is made in the Indian Territory after this last proviso has become a law, does Congress then pass upon the expenditures made-that is, the expenditures in the year ending June 30, 1913?

Mr. CARTER. That is the only object of the proviso-to bring these expenditures to Congress for appropriation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. You can not spend a dollar. Mr. MURDOCK. I wish the gentleman from Oklahoma would answer that question. Would we provide for it in a general deficiency bill?

Mr. CARTER. Let me say this: Under the present law the Secretary and the Comptroller of the Treasury have rulederroneously, I think-that they have plenary power to go into these tribal funds and expend them without any restriction whatever, except as regards schools, and even that is a very limited restriction.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman. Mr. COOPER. Do I understand the gentleman from Oklahoma to say that there are officials who have authority without restriction to use the funds of these tribes?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely true, and the only thing we seek to do by this amendment is to stop that practice. That is absolutely the only purpose of this amend-

Mr. COOPER. Does the gentleman mean that the officials in the office at Muskogee use those funds to suit themselves, without any limitation?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, they are limited by the Secretary of the Interior, but not by Congress.

Mr. COOPER. Has the Secretary of the Interior the authority under existing law to use those tribal funds absolutely in his discretion?

Mr. CARTER. He claims to have the right, and he exercises the right; so that answers the gentleman's question completely.

Mr. COOPER. Then I am free to say that I do not think any man, any executive officer, should have unlimited control over Government funds or trust funds.

Mr. CARTER. Yes, Mr. Chairman; and every fair-minded Member of this House thinks the same way; and thinking that, they can not possibly be consistent and still vote against this restriction.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. Mr. JACKSON. Th The gentleman had in mind the funds collected and used by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, Mr. J. George Wright, and Assistant Commissioner Ryan as having been applied to the payment of their salaries as an illustration of what the gentleman from Wisconsin asked

Mr. CARTER. I have not the figures at hand, but-

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman can approximate the amount. Mr. CARTER. There was paid out last year $660,000 under the supervision of the Indian Office from the funds of the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, about all of which Congress knows nothing on the face of the earth. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs first stated that there had been paid out some $900,000 of these funds; but he afterwards corrected that statement, at the suggestion, I understand, of my friend from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], and reported the amount as only $660,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman seriously make that statement?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, sir; I have the authority of the gentleman from South Dakota for making it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The amount of tribal moneys expended out of the tribal trust funds to tribal officials was only $56,000, and then $17,000. Not one dollar of it went to Commissioner Wright or any Union agent.

Mr. CARTER. Oh. Mr. Chairman, I said not one word about the money going to Commissioner Wright. I said that $660,000 had been expended of the tribal funds without any authority, and I got my information from the gentleman from South Dakota himself.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. "The gentleman from South Dakota" never gave the gentleman that information.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman state whether or not $660,000 was expended out of those tribal funds?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was not.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I find that there was $1,-177,000 used of all funds last year, according to the most recent report of the commissioner, and of that amount Congress appropriated $277,000. I think that with the exception of a few small items, if you will deduct $277,000, the amount appropriated by Congress, from the total amount consumed, you will get a fair estimate of the amount expended from the tribal funds.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The congressional appropriation was over $360,000. Why can not the gentleman state the figures correctly?

Mr. CARTER. I understood the gentleman in his remarks to-day to say $277,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; I did not say so. Mr. CARTER. How much does the gentleman say? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I say $370,000.

Mr. CARTER. Very well; we will accept that statement; and that will leave considerably more than $660,000 expended from tribal funds.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there has developed right here in this debate a situation which ought to convince this committee of the necessity of Congress taking direct supervision of these The three or four different Members who have attempted to give the expenditures of these funds for the last year all seem to differ. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] makes one statement, $900,000; the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] makes an entirely different statement, and I myself seem to labor under a different impression from both the other gentlemen. All three of us are members of the Indian Committee and have, I assume, done our utmost to get the proper information. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the principal officer charged with the responsibility of administering these funds, has made several different and distinct statements as to the amount expended out of the tribal funds for the last fiscal year. I called attention to these discrepancies before the Indian Committee, and offered these errors in the commissioner's statement as sufficient reasons why Congress should take immediate supervision over the expenditure of these funds

Certain members of the Indian Committee took exception to what I had to say and indirectly accused me of making charges against the commissioner. I deny that I made any such charge. The fact remains, however, Mr. Chairman, that the commissioner did make several gross errors in his statements about these funds. But it is only human to err. It is but natural that such mistakes should be made by any man given such un-bridled use of trust funds. So, without any reflection on the gentlemen who have given these conflicting statements, I still insist that these discrepancies in the commissioner's statements, these conflicting ideas in the minds of members of the Indian Committee, should be sufficient evidence to convince the most skeptical of the necessity of Congress taking supervision of these funds, as it does with the funds of the Federal Government, and all other funds for which it is responsible.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman say that the $217,000 spent by way of equalization is an expenditure not authorized by Congress:

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, it does not matter whether the expenditures are authorized or not; that has nothing to do with the case. It is not material whether the money was spent for a good or bad purpose. It does not matter whether it was spent for salaries, for per capita payments to Indians, for equalization payments, for expenses or what not. The point is that the money is spent in a loose, haphazard manner, without any safe check by Congress.

Since Congress is solely responsible for the administration of these funds, does the gentleman think there is any valid reason why Congress should not take some kind of supervision over Would any man attempt to justify the contention that trust funds might be handled more loosely than one's own individual funds? Is it not the duty of every member of this committee and of this House, no matter what his other views may be, to see to it that no such charges of loose administration and wanton extravagance might be brought to our door in the future?

Congress is to-day facing a responsibility which it can no longer evade or put aside. It is no defense to say that this Congress did not pass nor construe the law under which these abuses have grown up, for we well know that Congress has the power to change the law whenever it desires to do so. Then, suffice it to say, that since Congress has this day been served with ample notice of the condition of the funds of our helpless wards, henceforth and forevermore the responsibility solely upon the shoulders of the Members of this House.

I have no desire to cut off any necessary expense, but I do say there should be some system in handling these tribal funds, and that since Congress is responsible for administration, not one single penny should be expended without specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And yet the proviso which the gentleman is in favor of excepts the amount which may be expended for education, and $371,000 was expended last year for that.

Mr. CARTER. O Mr. Chairman, the amount used for schools is the one single amount that is limited by law.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. You think there is a difference between them?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There is not a particle of Mr. CARTER. But there certainly is such difference and the department recognizes it and so construes it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not a particle of difference. Mr. CARTER. O Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is clearly mistaken about that. I ask him to simply refer to section 10 of the act of April 26, 1906, and he will find that it specifically provides that there shall not be spent for the schools of any of the respective tribes more than was spent in the year preceding the passage of the law, and that is the only restriction upon these funds, which the gentleman should know if he does not know.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma another question, because this statement is one of the most significant that I have ever heard in debate recently in this House. As far as the expenditure of funds is concerned, does the gentleman know of any other executive officer in this Government who can without limitation draw on the funds in the United States Treasury, or any funds, without authority of Congress?

Mr. CARTER. I never heard of any such outrageous handling of any kind of trust funds in my life.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the gentleman heard of the Reclamation Service?

Mr. CARTER. I am not familiar with the Reclamation Service. If it is conducted in that way, it should not be.

Well, it is. Mr. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CARTER. It does not matter. It should not be.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the Forestry Service. Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] speaks very confidently of the Five Civilized Tribes being on the verge of a final settlement of their affairs. My friends, we have heard that seductive statement on the east side of Oklahoma for the last 18 years, and yet we seem to get no nearer the coveted final settlement. The gentleman from South Dakota ought to know that our affairs can not be finally settled up until all moneys are collected, and that will not come about for several years yet, for the proceeds of the sales of lands already disposed of will not all fall due for two or three years, and we will never get a settlement of our tribal affairs until the departments are jarred loose from the free and untrammeled use of these funds. It is but natural that we should not get a settlement under present conditions, when we have a horde of officials, honest though they may be, given absolute and free access to the funds of the tribe.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman does not wish to tell the House that expenditures have not decreased in the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. CARTER. That certainly is my belief. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman knows that they have substantially decreased, notwithstanding we are carrying $100,000 for district agents.

Mr. CARTER. I am speaking of appropriations.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Expenditures. I call the gentleman's attention to the statement which will appear in the Record in my remarks.

Mr. CARTER. Well, before you took supervision of our affairs it did not cost $1,300,000 to administer them.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Heaven knows how much it

Mr. CARTER. Heaven knows how much it costs now. It never cost any such amount as that to manage the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. That would be a physical and financial impossibility, because the tribes did not have that much annual income.

Gentlemen on that side of the aisle rail at this amendment because, as they say, it will disorganize the Indian service; because, as they say, the service will not be able to do sufficient work, for the reason that it will not in the future have sufficient funds if this restriction is retained in the bill. The man that makes such a statement as that assumes that Congress will not do its plain duty, and makes the charge that this Congress has not the energy nor the ability to make the appropriation necessary for such service.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I proposed this amendment to the subcommittee considering the Indian appropriation bill more than six weeks ago, and during all that time the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs has not furnished the committee with any estimate as to the amount that should be appropriated if this amendment was retained in the bill. And why? Ah, there is the rub. If these estimates had been furnished our committee, all necessary amounts would have been placed in the bill and that would have deprived the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] of the last vestige of misleading argument at their command. That would have deprived these distinguished gentlemen of parading before this House this very statement about disorganizing the Indian service.

The gentlemen are unduly alarmed when they think that this Congress will adjourn without making these appropriations if the departments of this Government do their duty. The gentlemen have not yet gotten away from Washington for this session of Congress and may not get away until far into the dog days. It should only take a few short hours' committee work, and less time on the floor of this House to put through an appropriation for all the items necessary to this service, and Congress will have ample time to do it and will do it. Then the result of this restriction will be not to impede the administration of Indian affairs in Oklahoma, but to facilitate and improve such administration and prevent a repetition of the wanton extravagance that seems to have been so freely indulged in during the recent past.

Now, with regard to the district-agent amendment I have only time to remind this committee that Oklahoma has been a State for almost five years and she is as fully equipped to protect and care for her minors as the average State in this Union. Our courts are vested with full jurisdiction of probate matters and the judges have the right to appoint attorneys for incompetents. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, we have in Oklahoma a State board of charities and corrections, presided over most efficiently and courageously by that fearless defender of the weak and helpless-Miss Katie Barnard. There has been created in her department a special bureau for this very purpose-the care of Indian minors-with an attorney at its head, equally capable and enthusiastic, in the person of Dr. J. H. Stolper, and I would like to see the color of the grafter's eye that puts any shady deal across the plate when these two crusaders are on watch.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I will also yield five minutes to the gentleman. How much time have we remaining on this tleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, getting time from both sides, I suppose I owe a divided allegiance in this matter. That is exactly the situation, for I am on both sides of the pending propositions. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the mere reading of the proviso in question is a sufficient argument in its favor:

Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, no money shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, except for schools, without specific appropriation by Congress.

The inference which it is necessary to draw from the language is that heretofore these moneys have not been specifically appropriated by Congress. That is certainly a very bad business method. It seems to me that such discretion should not be ledged in the hands of any man unless he be an angel, and there are very few of them in the Indian service. It seems to me, however, that the phrase "except for schools" should also be stricken out, and that all these moneys should be specifically appropriated.

I think, therefore, that the mere reading of that proviso is sufficient argument in its favor, and I shall vote for it. At the same time, what little experience I have had in these matters convinces me that the 16 district agents are among the most useful men to the real Indians that there are in the service. This question involves only the real Indians, not the "near Innot those who are practically white men and who are capable of attending to their own affairs.

There are down there about 40,000 real Indians, and they represent property assets of about $40,000,000. My understanding of the situation is that these 16 district agents have been giving real attention to the rights of those real Indians, and that if they are removed those real Indians will be a prey to white men and "near Indians," who desire the possession of their property. I have in my hand a statement from a citizen of that State in which he says that in the county court of Seminole County there are now over 1,400 probate cases involving the rights of real Indians. The custom down there has been for some white man, in case of the death of an Indian who has property, to go to those who would inherit his property, and through them apply to be appointed guardian. For a consideration the natural guardian gives to this white man the right to qualify as the guardian. As soon as he does that he advertises his ward's real estate for sale, and it is sold, very often for a sum of money that would not be more than its rental value for one year. I have an instance before me of an Indian boy whose guardian had rented two allotments belonging to the boy for $79 a year, and of the $79 only $17 went to the child and the rest of it for expenses, $27 of that amount going to some man who went on the request of the guardian simply to look at the land and nothing more.

mply to look at the land and nothing more.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. I could not very well; I have not the time.

Mr. CARTER. Just for a question.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman get me more time?

Mr. CARTER. I shall do my best.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is not enough. I have in my hand the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, filed on the first day of this month, in the case of Heckman and Owen v. The United States, involving this very question and these very lands. I read from a statement in the opinion of the court by Mr. Justice Hughes:

The Government states in its brief that between July 14, 1908, and October 12, 1909, the United States brought 301 bills in equity against some 16,000 defendants to cancel some 30,000 conveyances of allotted lands, made by as many or more grantors, members of the Five Civilized Tribes, upon the ground that the conveyances were in violation of existing restrictions upon the power of allenation.

The court in this case decides that the case was well taken, upholds the petition of the attorney for the Government, and cancels the conveyance. That case stands upon the same footing practically with 30,000 other cases of similar character. Now, where there are 40,000 real Indians and 30,000 conveyances have been made, which should not have been made, according to the Supreme Court of the United States, is that not sufficient evidence to prove that those Indians need somebody | Dakota use the rest of his time?

to stand between them and the would-be grantees who want possession of their allotments?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there? We will get him some more time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I repeat, that under these circumstances somebody is needed to look after the rights of not the "near Indians," but the real Indians; that 40,000 Indians, 30,000 of whom have made conveyances which the Supreme Court has declared to be void. My understanding of the situation is that these 16 district agents have been doing that kind of work, have been in touch with the probate courts, have been watching the proceedings in those courts, and representing those Indians and preventing them from losing or sacrificing their rights. If that be so, I say it would be a very unwise act of Congress, by cutting off an appropriation from which they get their salaries, to deprive the real Indians of the services of those 16 men who are doing real work for the real Indians.

So, while the proviso recommended by the majority of the committee may be a wise one, and I shall vote for it providing that no moneys of any considerable amount should be taken out of the tribal funds without appropriation of Congress, yet, on the other hand, I say that these 16 district agents are the saviors of the real Indians, standing between them and those who would deprive them of their inheritances, deprive them of what the Supreme Court says is theirs and ought to be theirs under the law.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it was exceedingly apropos that both sides should yield me time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I know how fair-minded the gentleman is on matters of this kind, and I know that he desires to be fair-minded at this time. These Indian agents, if they perform any service at all, perform it in connection with the probate courts. These 30,000 suits to which the gentleman referred are suits brought by the Department of Justice, for which we appropriate $50,000 each year from the Appropriation Committee, and have done so for four years. They have made an estimate for it These suits are handled exclusively by the again this year. Department of Justice.

Mr. GRAHAM. I was aware of that and I mentioned the fact that there were 30,000 suits pending merely to illustrate the other fact that there must have been 30,000 instances in which the grafters were after these real Indians to get their lands away

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman allow me to state that two such suits were brought to cancel conveyances which I myself gave, and that a majority are those kinds of cases?

Mr. GRAHAM. Then the whole 30,000 are not like the ones decided by the court.

Mr. CARTER. Certainly not, but nobody knows how many of them are; probably a couple of thousand of them are meritorious suits

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not refer to you, my friend, as an Indian, and if I had my way you would not appear on the books as an Indian at all. There are now men classified as Indians who are little more Indian than I am, and their presence among the real Indians is a serious trouble and that trouble will never be removed-

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps the gentleman would like to have me removed from the rolls in order that he might take my place. Mr. GRAHAM. I have no desire to go on the rolls, but if I did I would think I had as much right there as some gentlemen who are on the rolls now. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is but little more I want to say. I think I have made my position clear on the matter. I am as convinced as I can be that Mr. Valentine, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was correct when testifying in this matter before the Committee on Investigation of the Interior Department that if these 16 Indian agents were removed there would be 16 White Earths down in Oklahoma. He qualified that by saying 8 White Earths, because each agent represents 2,500 Indians, so 2 agents would represent about as many Indians as there are in the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota, and what he meant was this, that if those agents are removed then the real Indians and their property are liable to become the prey of every designing knave down in that country who wishes to get the Indians' property, and the result will be 8 White Earths down in Oklahoma and that means an unbearable condition, a condition that is a stench in the nostrils of every honest American citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from South

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I only have 22 minutes remaining, which I am going to divide up between two speakers only, and I believe I have the closing, and I would prefer the gentleman should use some of his time, unless he is to have only one speaker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock] five minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, this second—that is, the last proviso in this paragraph appeals to me because it is, to my mind, a rather momentous chapter in the story of the American Indian. Some 20 or 30 years before the Civil War several of the southern Indian tribes, afterwards known as the Five Civilized Tribes, were transported to the Indian Territory, and under a treaty made with the white men it was literally prescribed that as long as grass grows and water runs these Indians were to hold this new, duly described land. Now, it happened that I lived in my youth next to the Indian Territory, where I could observe, in a way, its development. Some 25 years ago a citizen of my city, a man by the name of Payne, whose memory is much revered in Oklahoma, a man who for a period served, by the way, as one of the Capitol police at this end of the Capitol, started an agitation for the opening of a tract of non-Indian land in the center of all the rest of the Indians' reserve, namely, Oklahoma, and finally David Payne, pioneer, a man of much repute and worth, succeeded in opening Oklahoma to settlement. We all knew in that day in my part of the country that here was the beginning of the end of the American Indian; that here was the entering wedge. knew that you could not put a white population in the center of the Indian country without dissipating finally the last resting place of the red man. And so it proved. Only a few years after the opening of Oklahoma the people of the country began to realize the dreadful state of affairs that obtained in the Five Civilized Tribes. Crime was rampant. Congress appointed the Dawes Commission. I remember the members of the commission well; I interviewed them as a young newspaper reporter. They were five grave, august eastern statesmen. They took a very cursory view of the condition in the Indian Territory and promptly impeached it. There followed their recommendation an appraisement of the Indians' lands and allotment. The more recent history the gentleman from South Dakota has given to you, and correctly. Now, as revealed in this provise, we come to another chapter, almost the last-the proposition that Congress shall surrender the control over the expenditure of money in the conduct of the affairs of these Five Civilized

So far as the mixed blood is concerned I have little sympathy I believe him as capable in the management of his affairs, almost in every instance, as I am in managing mine, but as a westerner who has watched the migration of the Indian and his gradual disappearance, I do have concern for the full blood, and I do not believe that this Government, in its right of rigid control and audit of expenditures, should take its protecting arm away from him. Now, the way to keep that protecting arm over the American Indian as we find him in the Five Civilized Tribes as a full blood is to retain this last That proviso means that no expenditures shall be made for these Five Civilized Tribes unless this Congress, not the Secretary of the Interior, not some impossible, ridiculous, tribal council, not some special agent in Oklahoma, but this Congress, acting through the House and the Senate, shall specifically appropriate for all the expenditures in the tribes. [Applause.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER. I wanted to address myself to the question before the House for three or four minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. We have not very much time. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. COOPER. Not more than two or three minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I will say that every bit of the time has been promised, and numerous requests have been turned down.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] use some of his time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I vield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE].

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I shall address myself principally to the proposition to discontinue the employment of what is known here as "district agents." But before I enter upon that feature of the discussion I will say that I am a little bit afraid that the House has some misunderstanding about the so-called enormous expense of the agency at Muskogee, which controls the Five Civilized Tribes, half the area of the State of Oklahoma, and about one-half of all the Indian business of the United States. When you come to understand, gentlemen, that right here in a section of country as big as the average State of the Union is nearly half of all the Indian business of the United States, and employs only 216, and does involve but a small portion of expenditure outside of these reservations in connection with the Indian business, you will see that it may not necessarily be such extravagant administration. The statement was made here the other day that the expenses of the commission at Muskogee had increased over what they were in the time of the Dawes Commission; that the first appropriation for the Dawes Commission was $16,000, whereas to-day it was $150,000. Gentlemen, that may be misleading. In fact, it is misleading. Why, I can remember the day when Sitting Bull was costing the Government nothing except to guard the frontier. There were no Indian minors there to supervise, and consequently no expenditures. remember distinctly when the expenses in connection with the Five Civilized Tribes were comparatively little. When was that? When they held their land in common, when there was absolutely nothing to do by that Indian agency save and except to pay these annuities twice a year. Oh, how things have changed, gentlemen. There is not one single acre of land in Oklahoma to-day, save and except the reserves, that is not embodied in an Indian allotment-that is, so far as it may concern the Indians. That which is the case with the Five Civilized Tribes is absolutely the case with every Indian tribe in the State of Oklahoma.

Take the Pawnee Tribe, for instance, in my own county. few years ago an agent and two clerks could transact their business. Why? Because they held their land in common, and all they had to do was to keep an account with the Government of the United States. Ah, but the country was open to settlement, and some gentlemen say then certainly the expenditures ought to decrease. Is that true? Every Pawnee took an allot-Then followed the local government; then followed 50 guardianship cases in my county, and a number of those guardians appointed by reason of political favoritism. Some left the country, some settled their accounts squarely and honestly, others met with misfortune, some moved away, and it was finally discovered that these cases required attention from the Department of the Interior. And then it was a special agent was sent there to look over those cases. And that which was true in that county was true in every county wherever there were Indians in the State of Oklahoma. Hence the necessity of appointing the district agents they want to dispose of here. Some of those agents have made mistakes. There may be men among them who are incapable and who are dishonest. but the practice is right, and the principle ought to be adhered to by this House and by this Congress.

Ah, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham] gave you a volume of information when he told you that in one county—think of it—in one county among the Five Civilized Tribes there were 1,400 guardianship cases.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield.
Mr. CARTER. I just wanted to ask the gentleman where the district agents were when that was done?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I will get to that. trict agents when some of that was done were on the ground. But the guardianship cases were so numerous they could not get to them-they needed more agents; and I say instead of decreasing the agents you ought to increase them. It was found to be a necessity at the east end of the State where the Five Civilized Tribes were after we had the first experience in the western part of the State, which was settled up by the white

Now, they say there has been some graft. There has been some graft; some graft that I regret exceedingly. It was stated by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] that there had been an attorney's fee of $12,000 paid to an attorney practicing here in the city of Washington. I remember that very distinctly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to his colleague?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman.
Mr. CARTER. Can the gentleman give to the House the name of this attorney and any information about why he was appointed?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Regretting it as I do-I do not like to mention names—the gentleman referred to, who was kind it has been made in the end right. I say that things have been done down there that ought not to have been done; but let me tell you that if you discontinue those agents who are now in every county, the interests of the Indians will not be as well protected as they are now. The government at Muskogee can not reach every section of that State, 150 miles away. Do you realize, gentlemen, that Muskogee is 150 miles away from some sections of the Five Civilized Tribes? I say that that local government can not reach out 150 miles and take care of 1,400 guardianship cases in one county, and what is true in this county is true in practically every other county.

Now, if a probate judge is overtaxed, or, if in some instances, he should be showing political favoritism, there can be no harm in having some additional supervision. Then if the Indian agent should happen to be incompetent, or should happen to be dishonest, in any case there can be no harm coming from having him superintended or watched by a good, honest probate judge. The least you can say, gentlemen, is that this is putting up a further guard against the destruction of the minor and the incompetent Indian in that country. I say, again, there are 27 or 28 counties within the Five Civilized Tribes, with 14 agents-a little more than one to each two counties-and I undertake to say that there is not one of those agents who is not having all he can do. If one happens to be dishonest, if one happens to be incompetent, relieve him. gentlemen, do not relieve those incompetent Indians down there of this service that is absolutely necessary for the preservation of the property of those Indians who have to cope with the white man on every side of them. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] three minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word only concerning the surprising fact developed here that the Secretary of the Interior has had unlimited discretion in the expenditure of the trust funds of those five tribes. I am sure that nowhere else in the United States is such power over trust funds or public funds of any kind vested in any executive officer. The constitution of the State of Wisconsin expressly prohibits the payment of any money out of the State treasury except in pursuance of an appropriation by law. Of course, no man ought to have access to public funds, to expend them, without restrictions, in his discretion; much less should he have access to the funds of a cestui que trust, to expend them without limit at his pleasure. Therefore I am uncompromisingly in favor of fixing by statute the maximum amount which can be expended by the Secretary of the Interior in behalf of these Indians for

As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGuire] suggested, there ought to be officials there to see that the interests of the full-blood Indians are thoroughly protected against adventurers seeking to rob them. But the maximum possible amount that may be expended for district agents and the maximum amount that can be used for any other purpose should be fixed plainly and absolutely in the statutes of the United States beyond the mere discretion of any officer of the Government.

We should by law protect the trust funds of helpless Indians as the constitutions of the respective States protect their public funds against unrestricted expenditures by executive officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How many speeches does the gentleman from South Dakota expect to have on his side?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I shall use the balance of my

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] such time as he may desire. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, what time is

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota has 12 minutes and the gentleman from Texas has 22 minutes re-

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the whole debate has resolved itself into the question as to whether or not this amendment leaves enough officials down there to transact legitimately and properly the business that the Federal Government has reason to expect to be transacted. I shall sweep aside all matters not pertinent to this one proposition and address myself to it.

This bill carries $150,000, and that has been agreed to. amount can be used for administrative purposes in the Five Civilized Tribes in any way the Indian Office desires. It is without restraint, without limit; it is theirs for district agents, special agents, or anything they desire.

Mr. COOPER. I want to ask the gentleman one question right there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. FERRIS. I do. Mr. COOPER. Wil Will that permit the employment of these district agents?

Mr. FERRIS. Precisely; and they can spend any part of it or all of it for that purpose, if they so desire.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not unless you strike out this proviso.

Mr. FERRIS. This proviso has nothing to do with the text. The text appropriates $150,000 for administration, and they can use it for any purpose they desire. Let me follow out this line of thought. The $150,000 carried in this bill will employ 60 people, at $2,500 per annum each. They can be used for any purpose desired.

This bill, in addition to this $150,000 specifically designated for Oklahoma, carries $200,000 for Indian police, which is a field service, and can be used wherever desired in the field. In addition to that an item has already been agreed to, carrying $85,000 for district agents, the very same class of service that is now under consideration. Of course they are not by the bill specifically designated for Oklahoma, but the department can send them there if they desire. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] will listen to this, because I want him to hear it.

This bill carries $85,000 for district agents, precisely the class of employees referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM]. Further, the Indian commissioner and the Interior Department can designate any or all of that $85,000 for district agents to Oklahoma, if that is desired. They can send any part of that $200,000 worth of police to Oklahoma if they desire. I want everyone to understand there is no limitation or restraint on the expenditure of these funds mentioned.

In addition to that, the bill is full of appropriations for Indian farmers, for Indian matrons, for all kinds of field service, and for the protection of Indian wards generally.

In addition to that-and I want this committee to have this fact before it-the Department of Justice has exclusive control of these 34,000 suits that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham] refers to. The Indian Office has nothing to do with that. For the last four years we have appropriated each year $50,000, through the regular Committee on Appropriations, for the Department of Justice, who go down there and take this matter in hand entirely independent of the Indian Office or Interior Department.

So, in addition to the $150,000 here appropriated, in addition to the $85,000 here appropriated, in addition to the $200,000 here appropriated, which items are already agreed to, we appropriate, through the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitzgerald] is chairman, $50,000 each year to carry on these suits.

Now, I want to repeat what I said last Friday. I said then that I was not one of the control of the con that I was not one who wanted to withdraw protection from the full-blood incompetent Indians of Oklahoma, and I say so now. I do not advocate it now, nor will I next year, or the next year if I am here, or wherever I may be as a private citizen. We have a little handful of full-blood Indians who need some protection, but $150,000 will employ 60 people at a salary of $2,500 a year for each one of them, and that amount is carried in this identical bill. An item of $85,000 is already agreed to, and that will employ a lot of district agents, and the Interior Department can send any or all of them to Oklahoma if they

There is in the Committee on Appropriations—and I went to see Mr. Courts, the clerk of that committee, to ascertain this now estimated for and going to be allowed $50,000 for the Department of Justice again this year. I say here on my responsibilty as a Member, with a knowledge of this country and these Indians covering 25 years, that 60 people are probably too many rather than too few. Sixty people, at $2,500 a year, are enough for full and complete administration for the little handful of full-blood Indians who remain there, and the rest of them do not need supervision. They come to you and they say, "We have 101,000 allottees." That is true. But they do not tell that they are made up of white men, negroes, intermarried citizens, men who are not even vaccinated as Indians. let alone being helpless incompetents, as some of these people would have you believe. The closing up of these affairs in Oklahoma is like the ever-recurring Japanese war that we hear about every year when the Army and Navy bills are up for passage. The prophesied trouble is feigned for the purpose of merely perpetuating themselves in office.

Their fears are not well grounded. Those people are nearly all competent in the Five Tribes part of our State. Of course, this does not apply to the backward Indians of other reservations, but it is certainly true over there. Some of the so-called Indians, why, if they were even vaccinated for Indians it would not "take." Men like Senator Owen, like the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter], leading bankers, leading merchants, are Indian allottees, are a part of this 101,000 allottees. what propriety can the American Congress put minute and detailed administration upon such people who do not desire it and do not need it? Twenty-five hundred dollars apiece for 60 men, I again repeat, is apt to be too much administration rather than too little. Already the State is reeking, groaning, and complaining and asking to be relieved from it. The Indians are asking, When will we get our property? When can we be free to manage our own affairs? They say that it is because we seek to defend men who are irregular. have not more citizens in Oklahoma that are irregular than in other States. But, my friends, over in the grand old State of Virginia the other day a little irregularity has recently transpired. It brought a pain in the heart of every good man to know that the grand old Commonwealth of Virginia should be so blighted by such a terrific crime. We have a few things in Oklahoma, but nothing in comparison with that which took place in Virginia. We have some few people there that are not good people, but because we have a few people there that are not good are you going to indict and challenge all? Are you on a false theory going to gobble up in salaries and trips to Washington all of the Indian funds and make great drains on the Federal Treasury by sending 211 people down there to hold jobs that are not needed?

But even if I am mistaken when I say that we have too much administration rather than too little, this amendment does not for one moment keep this Congress from bringing in a bill here to-morrow or the next day or the next day to provide for any people that may be needed on the pay rolls. I will be entirely frank with gentlemen. I think that each one of these tribes should have an attorney if they want it. I will support such a bill. I think perhaps they ought to have a chief. I will support such a bill and help get it out of the Indian Committee. think each chief should have a secretary. I will help support that and help get it out of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I will, and some of the other Members will, display some activity to get those things out of the committee, but to let present conditions go on and let over a million dollars be expended in salary and expenses annually ought not to longer prevail. You may roll it under your tongue until you are tired and these stubborn facts will not down. You may assert that you spend this for certain purposes, and that for another purpose, and this for an additional purpose, but, my friends, they do expend the Indian money and they ought not to expend it. I call your attention to the printed hearings, on pages 275, 276, 277, and 278, which show what is going on down there. I will print for the benefit of the House the pages of the hearings for their information:

Mr. Ferris. You are acquainted with the organization of the Muskogee Agency, are you not?
Commissioner Valentine. Yes, sir.
Mr. Ferris. You are acquainted with the commissioner, Mr. Wright, also Dana H. Kelsey?
Commissioner Valentine. Yes, sir.
Mr. Ferris. I ask you if these agencies are not pretty highly organized with reference to heads and subheads?
Commissioner Valentine. I should state substantially so.
Mr. Ferris. How much disaster and havoe would be wrought if we cut off that $74,000 and appropriated $100.000 for carrying on the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes and placed it under the direction of the Interior Department, so that the Secretary could cut the expenses and direct that the expenses down there should come within the appropriation?
Commissioner Valentine. I should say that that would be a little drastic for the first year, until they saw, bout the the second commissioner valentines.

Commissioner Valentine. I should say that that would be a little drastic for the first year, until they saw how the organization worked out.

Mr. Ferris. But is it fair to say just the first year, when for three consecutive years the incoming Congress has directed, in terms as positive as it could write them, that those affairs should be closed up in one year?

Commissioner VALENTINE. Not in that sense, but during the first year in which a very substantial change in reorganization has been made.

Mr. FERRIS. But it would not be without ample notice?

Commissioner VALENTINE. I think anyone can concede that it will be

Mr. FERRIS. But it would not be without ample notice?
Commissioner Valentine. I think anyone can concede that it will be ample notice.

Mr. Ferris. I will read from the act of 1908; and I find this language on page 24 of that act (Public No. 104); the title was "For completion of the work":

"For the completion of the work heretofore required by law to be done by the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, $143.410, said appropriation to be disbursed under the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior is directed to so disburse this appropriation as to complete said work by July 1, 1909."

Commissioner Valentine. That is very clear standing by itself, Mr. Ferris, but I think it only fair to call your attention to other provisions in some of those bills which made it substantially impossible to comply with them. There were not only those provisions in the bill, but sufts pending which made it absolutely impossible to comply.

Mr. Ferris. The suits are being handled by the Department of Justice, are they not, for which specific appropriations are made?

Commissioner Valentine. This is not the point; but we could not wind up the affairs of these tribes until we knew how the suits were decided.

Mr. FERRIS. But inasmuch as that matter is being handled almost exclusively from the Department of Justice—I think I am right about that—don't you think it fair to say that these expenses ought to be diminished and that this agency force ought to be cut down?

Commissioner VALENTINE. I have no quarrel with you on that point. I think it ought to be cut down and terminated as early as practicable.

Mr. Ferris. The allotment work done there is nearly completed in all of these tribes, is it not?

Commissioner Valenting. Substantially completed.

Mr. Ferris. Authority of law has been given for the sale of all the surplus lands excepting the segregated lands, has it not, and legislation is pretty well under way for that now, as far as the surplus is concerned?

surplus lands excepting the segregated lands, has it not, and legislation is pretty well under way for that now, as far as the surplus is concerned?

Commissioner Valentine. Yes, sir.

Mr. Ferris. Then, don't you think there could yet be a marked decrease in the official force and in the amount the Federal Government has got to expend to carry on those affairs down there for the present? Commissioner Valentine. I do, sir.

Mr. Ferris. And no havoe er disaster would be the result if a marked cut was made, would there?

Commissioner Valentine. I think not.

Mr. Ferris. He does use some money from the leasing division and some from the surplus-sales division?

Commissioner Valentine. I think he does.

Mr. Ferris. They have at the Muskegee Agency what is known as the leasing division, a royaity division, sales and accounts division, restriction division, field and intruder division, and pipe-line division. Pon't you think that is an unusually highly organized concern down there, and could not a great lot of those divisions be dispensed with and economy practiced there?

Commissioner Valentine. I think, while they look rather numerous on paper, that Mr. Kelsey, superintendent of the Union Agency, has his office pretty well organized; I think the really unnecessary expenses. If I am correct in thinking that there is some, lies not so much internally in his office, or even internally in the office of the commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes, perhaps, as in the duplication that exists between the two offices, and that the substantial saving which could be made would be made in combining those two offices under one head, in splitting them up as suggested in response to the question of you gentlemen here.

Mr. Ferris. J. George Wright's division spends a great deal of tribal money.

Mr. Ferris. You would not care at this time to indicate which one of the all money.

Mr. Ferris. You would not care at this time to indicate which one of the all money.

Commissioner Valentine. Mr. Wright, I think, spends a great deal of tribal money.

Mr. Ferris. You would not care at this time to indicate which one of those divisions could be best dispensed with?

Commissioner Valentine. No, sir.

Mr. Ferris. You think it would be better to cut the appropriation and let him divide it as he thinks best?

Commissioner Valentine. I think that should be left to the administration office.

Mr. Ferris. There were, at the beginning of 1908, 2.800,000 acres of land, and they have been selling a great deal of that, have they not, Mr. Commissioner?

Commissioner Valentine. That is as I recall it.

Mr. Ferris. That leaves about 1,200,000 acres not disposed of; that includes the surplus land, does it not?

Commissioner Valentine. I do not think it includes either the segregated area of 1,500,000 acres of timberland. We generally handle those reserve lands under three items: Segregated coal lands over 400,000 acres, and the so-called forest reserves, about 1,500,000 acres, and the rest of the surplus lands.

Mr. Ferris. There is no legislation provided for to dispose of all those lands?

Commissioner Valentine. Except the segregated lands.

Mr. Ferris. There is no legislation provided for to dispose of all those lands?

these lands?

Commissioner Valentine. Except the segregated lands.

Mr. Ferris. You are using the funds from the proceeds to pay for the expenses of the sale?

Commissioner Valentine. Yes, sir.

Mr. Ferris. And of the segregated lands?

Commissioner Valentine. We can not completely pay the expenses, because the compitoller has limited us as to what we can use that money for.

Mr. Ferris. But there is authority in the legislation to use the proceeds of the funds from the sales?

Commissioner Valentine. We are asking wider authority than we now have.

now have.

Mr. Franis. If the segregated surface bill becomes law (it has just passed both Houses), it provides that there shall be sufficient funds deducted from the proceeds of the sales to carry on that expense, does not? Commissioner Valentine. I have not read the bill. That is my understanding.

Mr. Ferris. Well, that is a fact. And do you think there could be considerable economy practiced at the Muskogee Agency?

Commissioner VALENTINE. There is no question in my mind.

Mr. Ferris. That is all.

The lieutenant governor of our State is an allottee; the speaker of the legislature is an allottee, one of the 101,000 that we hear so much about here in debate. We have men in the legislature; we have sheriffs, county officers; we have men, even, who are nonresidents of the State that go to make up the 101.000 people. I do not charge a thing against a single man down there. I presume they are good men; I do not know them all personally, but I know a good many of them. I do not make any inflammatory charges against any of them in the Interior Department. I do desire to say, and we all recognize it, that by negligence or good nature, or both, and by a desire of men to hold positions these pay rolls have grown and grown and grown and climbed and climbed until last year, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, the expenses reached the high-water mark of $1.308,023.98. For the year 1908 they were $743,000; for 1909 they were $716,000; and for 1910 they were about $900,000—I have not the exact figures. For many years it has been too much. I have the names and the salaries on this sheet of every man that works at the Union Agency. It appears in the earlier part of my remarks. There are 211 of them in one town, at one agency, to administer upon a little handful of Indians like Senator Owen and Representatives Carter and Davenport. time has come when the Federal Government ought to take off its hands, segregate these white men, segregate the freed men, segregate the men who are only vaccinated Indians, and draw the agency down to a small affair and to an expense of less than $100,000 a year in the operation of it; and then they can do full justice and full credit and have removed from Indian administration people who are not entitled to be considered as Indians at all. The word "Indian" has no meaning when applied to men with scarcely no Indian blood in their veins.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Mr. FERRIS. Certainly. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTEIL. I want to ask the gentleman if in the list of 211 persons are included tribal chiefs or attorneys or other officials of the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think not, although there is an item of $57,000 for attorneys; but I presume those are special attorneys. They do not contain tribal officers proper, I am quite sure.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield to me? Mr. FERRIS. I will.

The gentleman says that he is in favor of Mr. MILLER. having attorneys for each of the Five Civilized Tribes to look after their interests, involving many millions, before all the courts up to the Supreme Court of the United States. If this provision should become a law that employment will have to cease, unless some other provision is made by Congress

Mr. FERRIS. That is true, but that does not frighten or appall me in the least. We can provide for them.

Unless there is some legislation between now Mr. MILLER. and June 30 the tribes will be without chiefs and attorneys and without all other tribal authority of a tribal government. Does the gentleman think, and is he willing to state, there is any reasonable certainty there will be any legislation by Congress between now and June 30 providing for that?

Mr. FERRIS. I think so, and I think it will come in much less time than the gentleman expects. I anticipate that the Senate will strike out this provision and insert the whole proposition, and I think then we will take care of the attorneys, one for each tribe; but if I have my way, which I seldom have, they will not spend $57,000 for attorneys next year. They will spend about $5,000 a year for each of the five tribes, which will be a total of $25,000 a year for the whole five tribes, and while I shall probably support it as vigorously as will the gentleman, because I am willing to have a good attorney for each tribe share the responsibility with the delegation in Congress, for they may do some good—probably will; have in the past and may in the future—yet much money has been squandered for attorneys' fees in the past. We should see to it there is no repetition of it or a possibility of a repetition of it. We can ill afford to allow Indian money to be used up in attorneys' fees.

They have in the past paid $750,000 to one firm of attorneys for fees, which shall never prevail again if I can be heard to protest against it and the Congress or the department heeds my protest. They probably should have one attorney, but not a dozen. They should not have their property fled up under a 5 per cent contract or a 10 per cent contract or a 20 per cent contract or a 50 per cent contract, and I shall protest every time I can be heard, wherever I can be heard.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. CONNELL. The gentleman stated that there were 211 employees looking after a handful of Indians.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. CONNELL. Can the gentleman state how many Indians are in that handful which it takes 211 employees to take care of?

Mr. FERRIS. I can reply to the gentleman that there are 101,000 allottee

Mr. MURDOCK. How many restricted Indians?

Mr. FERRIS. The Indian Office records show about 35,000; but many of those are as competent as I am, or as able to be here as I am, are as able to present their case in any forum of the United States as I am. Let me call your attention to the fact that Senator Owen and Congressman Carter are two of those 101,000 allottees, and could not even sell their land when they came to Congress, and that was only about five years ago. There are many men who have not been fortunate enough to get into Congress, and hence they are still tied up, at least some of them are. They are still held to be incompetent; they are still supervised; they are compelled to be paid their own money in $10 monthly payments or not at all. Such work is wrong ab initio and should not longer prevail.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. FERRIS.

Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Do the Indian agents under the law possess police authority, and, if so, would that obviate the necessity for employing so many policemen?

Mr. FERRIS. It might work out in that way. I do not know just how that would work out. The police roll is authority that prevails throughout the United States, and it is the same service that prevails everywhere in the United States. It is a general appropriation of $200,000 for police not specially for Oklahoma, but can be used anywhere in the States. The service they are trying to inject into this bill prevails nowhere in the United States, except in the Five Civilized Tribes. As a specific proposition we do appropriate generally $85,000 for district agents, but they may be designated anywhere in the United States. There is no special designation anywhere except in eastern Oklahoma, where Indians are more competent than any-where in the United States.

Mr. JACKSON. Is it not true that the number of allottees, as the gentleman stated, is 101,000?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.
Mr. JACKSON. And is it not true that that includes 16,055 allotments made to the Potawatomi Indians of Kansas, very few of whom ever went to the Territory?

Mr. FERRIS. I can not answer as to the number. There were some of that kind. For instance, I am informed that Senator Curtis, of Kansas, has an allotment in our State, and he has never lived there.

Mr. JACKSON. And is it not true that, according to the Federal census of 1907 and of 1910, there are only about 75,000 Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think there are that many; I do not think it even approaches that number. I think that the real truth of the business is that there are not over 5,000 or 6,000 Indians that need supervision in that Five Tribes part of the State, possibly 10,000 at the outside. There are so many white men on the rolls by intermarriage, adoption, and so forth; that is why the totals are so large.

Let me draw a comparison here; it may be of interest to the House. I live right in the middle of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians. They are full-blood Indians, and they really need an agent and a detailed supervision that these gentlemen speak about. They have no district agents. At that agency they expend only about $25,000 annually, and I think no one complains of the sufficiency of the service there. We have a good agent and a few good men to help him, and everything gets along all right without field agents.

Mr. MANN. But they have trachoma.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; and through the gentleman's generosity we gave them a hospital the other day that should have been They have needed it some time. given them sooner. Mr. MANN. Maybe if they had district agents they would not have trachoma.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the district agents are not very effective trachoma operators. Let me proceed a little further. me read from the report of the department—the last one issued by the commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes to the Secretary of the Interior-and let me show you what he says he took in and what the Secretary says they expended, by tribes. That ought to be interesting information; that ought to be information that would interest everyone here.

The figures I will quote are from the current reports of the commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes and from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There are five of these tribes, and I will refer to them one at a time. The receipts of the Choctaw Nation were $318,616, and they expended $454,650.22—pretty In the Chickasaw Nation the receipts good administration. were $102,219.44, and they expended $175,111.08-pretty good administration. In the Cherokee Nation, of which Mr. Daven-PORT is a member, they collected $13,028.87, and they expended $138,128.90. In the Creek Nation they collected $42,643.39, and expended $117,002.11. In the Seminole Nation they reached the high-water mark of ridiculousness; they collected the magnificent sum of $292.95, and they expended $28,170.86. There were some additional receipts, but they consisted of proceeds from land sales, the transfer of tribal money from the Interior Department to local banks through the union agency and do not properly belong as receipts. Some of the totals I have quoted do not belong there as receipts. Remember, this is all independent of the general appropriation that is carried in this bill aggregating nearly $8,000,000; this is independent of the $50,000 that we appropriate through the Committee on Appropriations for the Department of Justice; this is independent of the $85,000 that this bill carries for agents; and independent of the $200,000 that this bill carries for police. We ask to be relieved from the officers that we do not need. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Camp-BELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, we are fast approaching the last chapter that shall be written on the American Indian. The final word of the gentieman from Oklahoma was we protest against the officers of the United States coming into his State to help supervise the Indian. The Government of the United States is the guardian of the Indian and the Indian is its ward. There are 35,000 full bloods in the State of Oklaits ward. There are 35,000 full bloods homa and in the Five Civilized Tribes-

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman does not mean full bloods, but restricted Indians. Many of those are mixed bloods.

Mr. CAMPBELL. About 18,000 full bloods. It has been the ambition of the State of Oklahoma, since it has become a State, to con-rol everybody within its borders. The people who made it a State got in there in spite of those who were endeavoring to protect the Indian. The Indian is there now struggling for his last rights. By the provision of this bill he will be for his last rights. By the provision of this bill he will be without even an attorney to appear for him. The grafter on every hand is waiting for the passage of this bill so that he can exploit the Indian. I have been in Oklahoma among the Five Civilized Tribes. I have been alone among them; I have been there with a committee. The disposition shown toward the Indian is this: If you can get his property, get it; it does not matter how. If you can get the property of an Indian child. matter how. If you can get the property of an Indian child, get it; it does not matter how you do it. Within recent months the most horrible murder has been perpetrated in order to get the property of Indian children—helpless children.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Those were negroes, were they not?
Mr. CAMPBELL. They were enrolled under the Indian laws.
They had valuable land, and the persons who wanted it could not get it until they put dynamite under the house occupied by those innocent children and dynamited the house and killed the children.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That was the Taft incident. I would like to ask the gentleman-

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I can not yield to the gentleman.
Mr. DAVENPORT. The gentleman has reference to—
Mr. CAMPBELL. I have reference to the case of Herbert and Castella Sells, in Muskogee County.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Well, the Taft incident in Muskogee

County, I know all about that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know all about it. I know that the man who perpetrated that infamous murder would never have been brought to justice if it had not been for the district agents which you drop out of this bill. That is not all. Some of the probate courts, under the laws of the State of Oklahoma, have worked with these grafters and have aided in the robbing of Indian children. I shall give some of the cases:

Elisha Hodges, a half-blood Choctaw Indian child, 11 years of age, had 320 acres of land. A guardian was appointed. Later his guardian made application to the court to lease 26 acres of that land to a man by the name of Buell. The land was leased as a stone quarry for 10 years, at $25 a month, payable in advance. The same day the guardian of this Indian child filed with the same probate court, before Judge Phillips, of Bryan County, a petition to sell 320 acres of land, alleging it was necessary to sell the land to get money to pay for the support of the Indian child-Mr. CARTER.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. CARTER. I yielded to the gentleman when I had no more time than the gentleman has.

The child's

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have only a few minutes. The child's property was ordered sold-the 320 acres, including the tract that had been leased at $25 a month. The property sold for $420 to the lessee, Buell.

One hundred dollars was taken of this as court expenses; the child got $320-$20 more than he would have gotten for one year's rent. The probate judge approved that sale.

That probate judge on the 30th day of December, 1907, appointed I. K. Pool, a white man, as guardian of his own child by an Indian mother. A few days after that he filed a petition to sell 320 acres of land that this child had inherited from its mother. It was stated the sale was necessary to pay for the keep of the child and improve the child's homestead. The court ordered the land sold, and it was sold. I will give the report of the administrator on the sale of the land and thus show how honestly the property of Indian children will be cared for if gentlemen from Oklahoma can keep Government agents out of that State.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not yield.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is making a serious assault that ought not to go in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNELL. Does the gentleman think that judge ought to be recalled?

Mr. CAMPBELL. He was defeated for renomination. pears from the record that L. W. Rushing, J. L. Austin, and W. J. Kendall were appointed as appraisers. They appraised the laud at $2,560. The land was sold for $2,000 to one of the appraisers, Mr. Rüshing. It further appears that on February S, 1908, the guardian filed a petition to sell his ward's interest in the allotment of Bensie Bobb, deceased. Now, let us have the final report:

On December 2, 1908, the guardian filed his report, as follows:

Receipts: From sale of Summle Pool's surplus allotment From sale of Summle Pool's homestead allotment From sale of Bensie Bobb's estate From rent of ward's allotment in 1908	950, 00
	2, 830. 75
Expenditures: By cash to Julius Campbell, for allotment By cash to Julius Campbell, for allotment of S. B. Pool_ Clearing and breaking 140 acres, at $10 per acre 2 sets of houses, cribs, wells, lots, etc Court costs, publication, attorney's fee, cfc Time, traveling expenses, witness's fees, etc 3.636 bois d'arc posts, set at 12½ cents each 66 spools of galvanized barbed wire, at $3.80 per spool	1, 400, 00
Less court reduction	4, 967, 90 75, 00

The court cut off $75 of that, which left this child indebted to this guardian in the sum of $2,062.15 on that transaction. The court ordered the sale of the child's homestead to pay the guardian for this balance. And yet Oklahoma protests against Government agents going into that State to protect Indian children and Indian wards. Let me say this, that the conscience of Oklahoma about judges has been aroused, and the 40 probate judges have asked that district agents be not discontinued, but that they be furnished to act as guardians ad libitum to all incompetent wards of the Government who come in their

Mr. FOSTER. What were the district agents doing?

Mr. CAMPBELL. They were not appointed at that time.
Mr. CARTER. What was the date?
Mr. CAMPBELL. In December, 1907, and the district agents were not appointed until May 27, 1908.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let it be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from South Dakota is to strike out the proviso, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, beginning with line 20 and ending with line 24, strike out: "Provided further, That during the fiscal year 1913 no money shall be expended from the tribal funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes, except from schools, without specific appropriation by Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 24, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk rend as follows:

After line 12 add the following as a new paragraph:

"For salaries and expenses of district agents for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma and other employees connected with the work of such agents, $100,000."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, that amendment should follow the proviso and not come in after line 12. The proviso not going out, the amendment should follow the

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of the funds of the Chickasaw Indians now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, to Douglas H. Johnston, governor of said nation, the sum of $3,000 per annum from March 1, 1910, to March 1, 1912.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. It is quite apparent on the face of the proceedings here that this is an expenditure not authorized by existing law. If there is any doubt about it, the reading of the committee hearings at pages 309 and 310 would convince one that it is not authorized by existing law, because it is there stated, in a statement made before the committee by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter], that-

The Chickasaw governor originally drew $1,500, but the Chickasaw Legislature passed an act raising the governor's salary to $3,000. The succeeding August an election was held, Gov. Johnson was elected, and inaugurated in September. The bill came to the President, Mr. Roosevelt, and he disapproved it. The bill dld not become a law.

In other words, the very authority that is sought to be quoted here as a basis for this appropriation—a bill passed by the Chickasaw Legislature—is stated not to have become a law. Then, further on in the hearings, on the next page-page 310a statement appears to the same effect. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter], in response to a query by the chairman. says:

I do not know what was in his mind about it. He has told me he always thought Congress would pay him $3,000.

In other words, it appears that we are to appropriate this amount because somebody thought Congress was going to do it. I think there should be an explanation. I reserve my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is conceded. There is no doubt but that the paragraph is subject to a point of order. I can not state any more fully the facts than they have been stated in the hearings as read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis], but I will repeat just briefly.

The Chickasaw governor originally drew $1,500. 1902, as I now remember, the Chickasaw Legislature passed an act increasing that salary to $3,000. Previous to that time the act of June 28, 1898, required the approval of all bills appropriating money from the tribal treasury by the President of the United States. That bill was sent on to the President for his approval. At that time the President was a little out of humor with the tribal chief and disapproved the bill. Whether his disagreement with the chief had anything to do with this disapproval I know not, but that has been charged. rate the act did not become a law. But the tribe by that act expressed their willingness for their chief to have $3,000.

I can see no impropriety in paying it to him. He is still serving the tribe as chief.

I offer this as an evidence of my good intent and good faith to assist in providing for the Five Civilized Tribes such officials as they need if they will only leave that to be done by Con-

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. Mr. WILLIS. Does the fact appear that the council of this nation still believes that the governor should have $3,000? Have they done anything or taken any action to that effect since this bill was vetoed by the President?

Mr. CARTER. Not since then. I think that is the last action taken.

Mr. WILLIS. When was that? Mr. CARTER. That was in May, 1902, and if I am not mistaken the act of July 1, 1902, took away from the tribal council the right to increase salaries. I am not sure about that.

Mr. WILLIS. If they are anxious that the governor shall have this salary, it is curious that they did not pass the bill again and put it up to the President for his signature.

Mr. CARTER. The tribal council can only meet when the Secretary of the Interior permits them to meet, and he has not permitted the council for the Chickasaw Nation to meet for several years.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not desire to be contentious about this matter. I have no doubt that this is a worthy governor. certainly has an able and distinguished advocate here, and I do not make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 600 Indian pupils, including native pupils brought from Alaska, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., and for pay of superintendent, $102,000; for general repairs and improvements, $9,000; for construction of industrial building, $6,000; in all, $117,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply for the purpose of getting some information. What is the reason for requiring that these pupils shall be brought from Alaska? Why can they not just as well be taken care of in Alaska as to bring them at great expense to Oregon for education?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit me, we have no Indian schools in Alaska, and we do not wish at the present time to enter into the making of appropriations for that purpose. I understand that there are very few Indians in that country, and it is cheaper to bring them down to Oregon.

Mr. WILLIS. Is that the idea of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that they shall be brought down to Oregon, rather than be educated in schools in Alaska?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have numerous requests of that kind, and it has been done for several years at the request of the Department of the Interior. There are some Indians there, but not enough to warrant the establishment of an Indian school there.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of the Modec Point irrigation project, including drainage and canal systems within the Klamath Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, in accordance with the plans and specifications submitted by the chief engineer in the Indian Service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior in conformity with a provision in section 1 of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, $50,000 appropriated in the act of March 3, 1911, is hereby made available until expended: Provided, That the total cost of this project shall not exceed $155,000, excluding the sum of $35,141.59 expended on this reservation to June 30, 1910, and that the entire cost of the project shall be repaid into the Treasury of the United States from the proceeds from the sale of timber or lands on the Klamath Indian Reservation.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. FOWLER. I reserve a point of order on the last paragraph, especially on that portion which relates to the $50,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1911, and which reads as follows:

Is hereby made available until expended.

The words "until expended" are too broad. This committee is providing for appropriations for Indian affairs, and has a right to make appropriations for the next fiscal year, and that I suggest that an amendment be made to that part of alone. the bill, so that it may provide for a reappropriation of this sum. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman, with the view of getting some information from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. If my colleague will yield-

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly. Mr. MANN. It is customary in all these appropriations for irrigation projects, river and harbor improvements, and things of that sort, to have the appropriations remain available until expended. I think it is usually not necessary to include those words in the act. Just what the difficulty was here, of course, I do not know; but it is customary, when an appropriation is made for a permanent improvement, that that shall continue available until expended.

Two years ago we passed an act covering everything back into the Treasury that was not expended, thereby repealing that law which made these appropriations available until ex-We found that that interfered with appropriations for pended. river and harbor improvement, and we passed a special provision, providing that river and harbor appropriations should remain available until expended. I presume that by reason of the first act which I have just referred to this appropriation was not so intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague [Mr. FOWLER] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. FOWLER. It is not contended that the Congress has the authority to make an appropriation beyond the coming fiscal year? Mr. MANN.

Congress has the authority, without any question, but I think the item is subject to a point of order on the ground that this committee is only authorized to report appropriations for the next fiscal year.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not mean Congress, but this Appropriations Committee

Mr. MANN. I think it is likely that it is subject to a point of order, but it is customary to have appropriations of this character remain available until they are expended.

Mr. GARNER. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask him if it is not also the custom in river and harbor work or contract work, where a certain authorization is made, and part of it is made available for that fiscal year, to contract with reference to the final appropriation for the whole amount to complete the work?

That is undoubtedly the custom.

Mr. GARNER. And that is the only economical way in which it can be done?

Mr. MANN. I think so.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure but that if this amount was reappropriated it would serve the purpose intended by the language here

I am inclined to think, from my limited experience with these appropriation bills, that this language is subject to a point of order, because of the fact that the authority to appropriate under such circumstances is confined to the coming fiscal year; and, while I am not intending to obstruct or intending to try to defeat any legislation, I would like very well to have it reappropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment?

Mr. FOWLER. I will offer as an amendment the following: Strike out the words "is hereby made available until expended" and insert "is hereby reappropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18, strike out the words "is hereby made available until expended" and insert in lieu thereof the words "is hereby reappropriated."

Mr. FOWLER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman, The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not necessary to withdraw the point of order before this vote is taken?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman did not make the point of order; he reserved it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order with the amendment pending. What is the reason for inserting the proviso here which is apparently the existing law?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say that the existing law uses the word "including," and this uses the word "excluding." If the word "including," which appeared in the last act, was not wrongfully put in, which I am not prepared to say whether it was or not, the project could not be completed within the limit of cost as the existing law reads. This is simply to change it, and it must be changed if we do the construction for the $185,000.

Mr. MANN. I notice also that it provides "excluding the sum of $35,141.59 expended on this reservation June 30, 1910. The language in the last law was "expended on this project."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is because there was some money used on the reservation many years ago which had no value.

Mr. MANN. The change then was made deliberately?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; it was money that had been thrown away

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not necessarily thrown away. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The CHAIRMAN. The next paragraph of the bill has already been passed, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the construction of lateral distributing systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Uncompangre, Uintah, and White River Utes, in Utah, and to maintain existing irrigation systems, authorized under the act of June 21, 1906, to be expended under the terms thereof and reimbursable as therein provided, $75,000.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment as an independent section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 22, as follows: "For support and education of 120 Indian pupils at the school at Hampton, Va., $15,000."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to restore to this bill a part of an appropriation which the annual bill for the support of the Indian Service has carried for more than 30 years, an appropriation which for a third of a century has not been omitted from the Indian bill. There is located at Hampton, Va., what is known as the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, a private institution. This well-known school has had a contract with the United States Government which, as I have said, it has existed for more than three decades, and under which it is provided that as many as 120 Indian students shall be received for the sum of $167 each. At present there are 83 such students attending this school.

The Hampton School may be said to be the pioneer in industrial education-that is, education in the trades-in the United States. Carlisle, a Government institution, is but an offshoot of Hampton. The reason for the existence of this contract is that the Hampton School is the only one in the United States where Indians can receive equally as good normal and industrial training, where they can be equally as well trained to teach and equally as well taught the domestic sciences. It is diffi-cult for me to understand, Mr. Chairman, upon what theory the Committee on Indian Affairs has eliminated from this bill an appropriation which for many long years has been shown to have been of inestimable benefit to the young and ambitious Indians of the whole country.

The report which I hold in my hand assigns but one reason.

It says:

It is the opinion of a majority of your committee that there are adequate facilities provided for the higher education of the Indian pupils now being educated at Hampton on or near their reservation.

And then adds:

Your committee is therefore of the opinion that a considerable saving to the Government could be made by educating these children in Government schools already provided for the higher education of Indians, thus saving the needless expense in the transportation of these pupils, and otherwise incurred, in taking them from their reservations in the West and educating them at the farthest point in the East, and paying $167 per capita for their education at that point, while it is shown that schools with equal facilities and advantages are educating pupils similar to these being educated at Hampton at much less than $167 per capita,

Mr. Chairman, I have read every word that appears in the hearings bearing upon this subject, and, so far as I can discover, the only witness who appeared before the committee was the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Valentine, and I can not find one single word in his testimony which in the slightest degree bears out the statements contained in the report of the committee which I have just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have not before participated in the debate upon this bill, which has now been in progress for three days, and inasmuch as this is a very important matter to a great school in my State, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the committee for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that he may address the committee for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can we not reach an agreement as to how much time shall be expended on the amendment?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have it confined to 20 minutes—10 minutes to be used by the gentleman from Virginia and 10 by myself.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five or six minutes on the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield that to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, there are other gentlemen who wish to speak upon this proposition. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall] desires to be heard.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to cut off any gentleman

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is now the usual time for the committee to rise, and I would like very much to have the bill passed this evening.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, there is no regular time for adjournment, and I hope there will be no objection to my request for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I shall submit a request for unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph, on the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia, close in 25 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that request.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think there is but one more controverted item in the bill-

Mr. MANN. There are several amendments to be offered, I am told.

Mr. FERRIS. I think if there could be an agreement had as to the Pima item, that it may go into the bill as agreed upon by the committee-

Mr. MANN. The committee amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; the amendment offered by the committee. Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to agree to that. I reserve the point of order upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur at this time to page 9 of the bill, line 12, for the purpose of offering the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unantmous consent to recur to page 9, line 12, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we pass over for the present the Hampton School item and proceed with the reading of the bill, and then we can consume such time as is left upon the Hampton item.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from Wyoming has an amendment to offer which will probably take 15 or 20 minutes, and I think there will be one or two other amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph, following line 11, page 9, the following:

"For maintenance, including purchase of electricity for irrigation wells already completed and the completion of the lateral irrigating ditches thereunder in connection with the irrigation of the lands of the Pima Indians in the vicinity of Sacaton, in the Gila River Indian Reservation, $15,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to convene a board of not less than three engineers of the Army of wide reputation and large experience to make the necessary examinations, borings, and surveys for the purpose of determining the reasonability and practicability of constructing a dam and reservoir at or in the vicinity of the Box Canyon, on the San Carlos Reservoir, on the Gila River, Ariz., and the necessary irrigation works in connection therewith to provide for the irrigation of Indian, private, and public lands in the Gila River Valley; said board of engineers to submit to Congress the results of their examinations and surveys, together with an estimate of cost, with their recommendations thereon, at the earliest practicable date. The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof of as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose of conducting said investigation."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the other day I reserved the

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the other day I reserved the point of order upon this amendment. I will withdraw the point of order. I have only one regret in respect to it, however, and that is that the committee has seen fit to use such a word as "reasonability," thereby enlarging the English language.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this suspends the action of the department in respect to the irrigation develop-ment of the Gila River in Arizona. The committee has gone through the matter very carefully, and this amendment has been suggested and written in the department and it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. There is no objection to it from any source and I ask for a vote.

ment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak to the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I shall offer no objection to the adoption of the amendment, but I want to make a suggestion in regard to it, and that is it is very doubtful whether the investigation proposed is at all necessary. There have been a number of investigations of the situation on the Gila River in the locality referred to. The Reclamation Service has made a full and exhaustive examination of the situation. One was made by the hydrographic branch of the Geological Survey before the reclamation act was passed, and since that time I think there has been another investigation made by the Indian Bureau. So there is now practically all the information that is obtainable with regard to the Gila River, the amount of water it carries, the amount of silt-as to the feasability of a dam at the point proposed, as to the amount of land that might be irrigated. There have been many people who have been much exercised on behalf of these Indians and some people have thought that they were more exercised on their own behalf than they were on behalf of the Indians. The probability is, after we get through, we will discover we could buy for these Indians 100-acre farms at $100 an acre much more cheaply than we can undertake to supply them an uncertain water supply from the Gila River. I say we have the facts, but they are somewhat scattered in various documents, and I think the Army has not yet investigated the question. I think all the other branches of the Federal Government that could by any possibility have anything to do with these matters have investigated it, but perhaps it will be well to call in the Army engineers and have them get together the information we have and seek further information, and at the end we will probably discover that it if we build it it will fill up inside of a few years with silt. If there is anything further to be done for these Indians, who, by the way, have one of the most expensive irrigation plants in the world, a pumping plant, if there is anything more that should be done for them, it will probably be to take them from the reservation and buy farms for them. That would seem to be much cheaper than to build a reservoir and canals.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote. The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew my request that I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes upon this proposition.

The CHATRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of this committee to one or two pregnant facts. As I was proceeding to point out when my time expired, it is claimed in the report of the committee accompanying this bill that there are schools located on the Indian reservations and supported by the Government at which the Indian children can be taught all the branches which are taught at Hampton, and much cheaper. Stress is laid in this report on the fact that the distance to be traveled by the Indian children from the reservation to Hampton is very great and therefore entails considerable cost to the Government. I am informed, and I believe the statement can not be questioned, that the normal courses at one time taught at the reservation schools are no longer taught there, and that it is not now pretended in any quarter that the Indian students at the reservation schools are trained in the art of teaching. There is not, I am told, a reservation school which attempts even to fit its scholars for teaching. So much, then, for the claim that the reservation schools are equipped to take the place of the Hampton school. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, there is no school in the United States which has the same appliances and which can afford the same facilities for giving Indian children normal, industrial, and agricultural education. This much must be conceded, I think. No less a distinguished educator than Dr. Eliot, late president of the great University of Harvard, is upon record as saying that there was no school, no university in America which presented the same or an equal combination of academic and industrial teaching as Hampton, and Dr. Gilman, president of the great University of Johns Hopkins, has declared that we could better spare any two universities in the United States than the Hampton Institute. And Gov. Woodrow Wilson, when president of Princeton University, indorsed the Hampton school in terms of commendation and praise scarcely less strong. I think, therefore, we may dismiss the proposition that there is any other school in the country possessing equal facilities with those of the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, and where the Indian student can receive the training of which he stands the greatest need.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. In this connection will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES.

Mr. JONES. Yes; for a question.
Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I was just going state, before the gentleman left this point of his discussion, that this is the cheapest school for Indians in the United States—that is, it costs less per annum per capita to educate the Indians here in this school than anywhere.

Mr. JONES. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for this information; I was not informed as to that. I do know, however, that the Hampton Institute does not derive any profit from the $167 which the Government pays for the education of the Indian children which attend that school. With the authorities of this school it is not a question of making money out of the Government. The Government receives far more than it gives.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CONNELL. For just one question.

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. CONNELL. Does the gentleman believe that the removal of the Indian from the Hampton School will cripple the work of the school or make it less effective than it was or tend to its disruption?

Mr. JONES. I do not believe that the loss of these Indian students will impair the efficiency of the school, but what I do say is that, in my judgment and in the judgment of those who are far better qualified than I am to speak upon this subis impossible to build this great dam on the Gila River, and that | ject, the Indians who attend the Hampton School are being better fitted to take their places in the world than it is possible for them to be elsewhere. I base this opinion not only upon what has been said by the distinguished educators from whom I have quoted, but also upon what was said by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the committee which prepared this measure. But the committee not only maintains in its report that the Indians can be as well educated at the reservation schools as at Hampton, but it states that they can be more cheaply educated there, and assigns as a reason for this that it costs a great deal to transport them from the reservations to Hampton. Upon this subject I appeal from what is said in the report to what my friend, the distinguished chairman of the committee, who doubtless wrote the report, said on the floor of the House on Friday last. On that day, in reply to something said by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsten], the chairman of the committee is reported to have said-I read from the Con-GRESSIONAL RECORD:

There is a measure pending that will, I hope, transfer the 120 students at Hampton, Va., to Carlisle or some other school. I do not think the Hampton School is any better than the Carlisle School. I am simply making the statement of the reasons why I will agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] to meet him halfway.

If, notwithstanding what is said in the report upon this subject, it is now the purpose to take the Indian students from Hampton and transfer them to Carlisle, I fail to see how the Government is to save the traveling expenses dwelt upon in the It is just as expensive to transport Indians from the reservations to Carlisle as to transport them to Hampton. I submit that the chairman of the committee has himself effectually disposed of the economy argument attempted to be made For it now seems that it is not the purpose to educate the Indians, who would prefer to go to Hampton, in the fine schools we have been told so much about on the reservations and at a considerable saving to the Government, but to send them to Carlisle where there can be no traveling expenses saved. The distance from the reservations is just as great to Carlisle as it is to Hampton.

Mr. CARTER rose.

Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. The CHAIRMAN. Jones] yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Carter]? Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. CARTER. Just a short statement. There is a saving by transferring the children from Hampton to Carlisle, because, as the gentleman has already stated, it costs $167 per capita at Hampton and only $138 at Carlisle.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman hardly wishes to be understood as saying that the difference between $167 and $138 would be saved in the matter of transportation in sending the Indians to Carlisle rather than to Hampton. I have said nothing as to the cost of educating Indians at Carlisle, because I possess no knowledge on that subject. I have been trying to show that, in the light of what was said on this floor on Friday last, the economy argument of the report had no legs to stand upon. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGurre] made the statement a few moments ago that the Indians are being educated cheaper at Hampton than at any other schools. leave that matter to the two gentlemen from Oklahoma for settlement. I have no information in regard to it. My contention is-and it is one that is supported by abundant testimony-that the reservation schools are not to be compared to the Hampton school. If excellence is to be considered, then Hampton Institute, in my opinion, is a much cheaper school than even Carlisle.

As I have said, the Government has even abandoned the normal courses in the reservation schools. Hampton, therefore, is practically the only school in the country-certainly the only one outside of Carlisle-where Indians are prepared to teach their own race. It can not be contended that even Carlisle is anything like as well equipped as Hampton to turn out competent Indian teachers. Having in mind what is said in the report as to the saving to the Government in educating the Indians at the reservation schools rather than at far-away Hampton, and the frankly avowed purpose of the chairman of the committee to transfer the Hampton Institute students to Carlisle and not to the reservation schools, I am at a loss as to how to meet the various and conflicting arguments of those who are opposed to restoring the appropriation for educating a certain number of Indians at Hampton.

I have heard it whispered around that there were negroes educated at the Hampton school as well as Indians. I wish to say in respect to this that whilst this is true, it is also true that the negro students and the Indians occupy different dormitories and are not even brought together in the mess halls.

I wish to state further that the State of Virginia, which I have the honor to represent in part upon this floor, has been !

appropriating for years out of the land funds considerable sums toward the maintenance of the Hampton School, and to-day is the first time I have ever heard this race question raised. There is not in all this land a community where there is more of culture and refinement than is to be found at Hampton. It is one of the very oldest cities in America, and there is no educational institution in America which is surrounded by more uplifting influences. A year spent in Hampton upon the beautiful grounds of this institution, and amid such elevating environments, is in itself an education for a poor Indian child whose whole previous life has been spent upon a reservation. Indians who have been educated at Hampton are the best proof The Indians have never objected to the presence of negroes at this school. No complaint has ever come from the white inhabitants of Hampton and the State of Virginia has never withheld from this school her bounty because Indians and negroes met together in the lecture halls and shops and on the experimental farms. Moreover, in the space of a third of a century this is the first time this argument has been advanced here in support of the proposition to take from the Indians the very best educational facilities they have ever enjoyed. There has never been the slightest friction between the two races in all these years at Hampton. They are not brought together in the dormitories or in the dining rooms, and there has never been complaint on the part of any Indian because of the fact that they meet in the classrooms, the shops, and the fields.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Noss] yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Mc-JONES] CALL

Mr. JONES. I will.

Mr. McCALL. And the question has not been raised for 30 years in Congress before. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The history of this school dates back to 1868. At that time Capt. Pratt, of the United States Army, and others captured a hostile band of Indians in the Many of them were young Indian men and women.

They were carried in captivity to some fort in Alabama.

In order to test the question of the practicability of Indian education, these young Indian prisoners were sent to Hampton and put into that negro school, while the older Indian prisoners were kept in captivity in Alabama. This school had been organized a few years after the Civil War by Gen. Armstrong, and for the purpose of educating the negro children of the South. This school was, as I understand, organized and chartered by the missionary societies of the United States. were several hundred negro students in the school at the time these Indian prisoners of war were put by force in the school. They could not help themselves, as they were prisoners and had to adapt themselves to their surroundings.

Congress at the next session made a small appropriation to pay for their instruction. Capt. Pratt, now Gen, Pratt, of the United States Army, retired, was placed in charge of these Indians, and also of the Hampton school for a few years, and later he organized the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., and remained there for possibly 20 years in charge of the school.

This was strictly a school where only Indians were then and now taught. I can say without fear of successful contradiction that it is one of the best and cheapest Indian schools in the United States, as is shown by the Government reports on Indian schools. That statement shows that it costs only $128.36 per capita per annum for each student in this Carlisle Indian School. No one will deny but that they have a very capable and competent corps of professors there, and this school being constantly attended by a large number of Indians, the capacity has been increased, so that now it can accommodate two or three hundred more pupils. I have this information directly from Government reports and from the officers of this school.

When the idea was first originated by Capt. Pratt of educating the Indians, we had no nonreservation Indian schools in The education of the Indian children was prothe country. vided for in contract schools. Those contract schools have all been abandoned except the one at Hampton. This Hampton School is therefore the last of that system of schools. Every Indian pupil instructed at that school costs the Government $167 a year. We make a contract with the officers of the Hampton Negro School to pay $167 for every Indian that goes there.

For many years that amount of money has been paid to these contract schools. They provide at Hampton for 120 Indian students. There are only 83 reported as enrolled and there are only 71, as I understand it, in average daily attendance at that school. That fact shows that the Indians themselves, dropping from 120 down to 83 or 71, whichever computation you desire to make, do not desire to attend that school and will not do it.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to The CHAIRMAN. Does the the gentleman from New York?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.
Mr. REDFIELD. Did the gentleman's committee consult the principal of Hampton Institute before making this recom-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He was here and made a written statement in regard to the matter for use by the committee. The committee was not in session when he was here; hence he had no opportunity—and asked for none—to appear before it. Mr. REDFIELD. Was he asked to appear before the committee?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The facts are as I have stated and are not disputed.

Mr. REDFIELD. Is it not a fact that he was afforded no opportunity to present the facts concerning the institution?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not a fact. He did not appear before our committee, because it was not in session when he left his statement with me.

Mr. REDFIELD. Is it not a fact that the reason why, as you say, these pupils do not want this education is because at the Hampton Institute they conduct this system of education on a higher plane of normal teaching than is the case in any other school, Carlisle included, and that, therefore, as is the case in every other educational institution, those drop out who can not meet the standard?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is another cogent reason, in my opinion, why these Indian pupils should be educated in the schools in the West and not in Hampton. It is this: We have many first-class Indian industrial Government schools built and in operation there now, including the Sherman School in California, the Haskell School in Kansas, and the Chilocco School in Oklahoma, and this is the first time I have heard these Government Indian schools lightly or disparagingly spoken of. I do not think the gentleman from New York has the correct idea with regard to these western schools. They are, as I have stated, Indian industrial schools, and they are equipped fully with all the up-to-date appliances, and they have the best teachers that the Government can get for the work in those Indian schools.

Several of these western nonreservation schools have been abandoned and sold or used for other purposes; and I can not conceive of any valid reason why these Hampton students should not be transferred from this negro school, where they are educated with 600 negroes, and educated in our own Government Indian schools in the West or at the Carlisle Indian School in Pennsylvania.

Why should we keep up at great expense to the Government these schools in the West for the purpose of educating Indians, and send these 83 Indians to the farthest point in the East, at Hampton, as stated in the report, for the purpose of educating them, at great cost for transporting them to Hampton and then back home?

There is another objection to Hampton School. The Indians as a race are subject to diseases of the lungs. Many of them die with the white plague. They are raised on the western plains and in the western mountains, and when they are brought to the East the damp, cold climate only hastens and develops this disease. These Indian boys and girls do not have the same strength, the same capacity, and the same health that they have on their native heath in the West.

For all these reasons I apprehend that the committee were right in striking from this bill this appropriation. No legitimate reason can be given why these 120 Indians should remain at Hampton at great expense to the Government when we have Indian schools taught by Government employees. Why humiliate the Indian boys and girls, our wards and dependents, by educating them in the same schools with negro children? seemed to your committee that we should use our own schools, our own teachers, and separate these two races, and thus elevate the red race to the level of the white race and not degrade and humiliate him by sinking him to the low plane of the negro race.

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I believe that the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. STEPHENS of Texas] is the one who is under a misapprehension as to the facts about Hampton Institute. Unless 20 years' time spent in touch with this institution and with the gentlemen who are responsible for this institution and visits to it have taught me nothing at all, the chairman of the committee seems not to be informed as to what Hampton Institute is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was at Hampton less than two months ago, and was among those students.

Mr. REDFIELD. I am glad to hear it. It is a pity the gentleman did not use his opportunities better.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, yes; but I have been there. Mr. REDFIELD. Hampton is a normal school. It does not teach as Carlisle teaches. It does not aim to teach as the west-ern schools teach, and does not desire to do so. Hampton Institute teaches teachers. It produces, not Indians well trained in industrial arts, but Indians who teach industrial arts; and all over America, in the various schools of which the chairman of the committee has spoken and which I admire, there are to-day the graduates of Hampton Institute, teaching their own people. That school stands upon an utterly different level from these other contract schools. It is a strictly normal school. It stands as the Teachers' College in New York City stands to the high schools of that city. It teaches its pupils to be instructors of their own people, and in the absence of a definite statement as to the precise nature of its work from the officers of that institute it is not proper for this committee to make their present report. Only to-day the principal of the school told me he had had no adequate means of placing before the committee the facts as to the normal training which all of us know who are interested in Hampton Institute is the peculiar work of that school.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Jones] will be carried. It practically carries an appropriation which we have made every year for 30 years or more. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Jones] is one of the oldest Members of this House, and this appropriation has been made every year during his term of No good reason whatever has been shown why service here. the Government should abandon this institution. There is one thing in regard to it that has not been stated in the debate. and that is that it is one of the best endowed schools in the whole South. It has a plant of over $1,000,000 in value, and it is especially fitted to give a high grade of instruction. It does not imply any criticism of schools that are run upon a different plan to speak a good word for this school. President. Eliot, who is one of the most distinguished educators in the world, has said that he knows no place where there is such good combination of academic and industrial training as at

The chairman of the committee [Mr. Stephens of Texas] at one moment is attempting to show that this school should be discontinued because the number of pupils there is only 80, when it should be 100 or more, and in the next breath he tells us that some Indian schools in the West are absolutely going out. So, evidently, there is a broader reason than that which he gives. The return that the Indian gets from that school, from the income derived from investments and from the use of the industrial opportunities there, is much more than the Government contributes toward his education. I think it would be a great mistake to drop this historic institution. It is doing great work for both races, and I submit that if a State like Virginia does not object the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] certainly should not object. If you weaken that school by taking away this appropriation, you weaken that school by taking away this appropriation, you weaken it for all the scholars who go there, and I think it would be a very narrow policy for this House of Representatives, after it has been engaged in this beneficent work for 30 years, to discontinue its appropriations.

The people of the North are interested in this school. They have given hundreds of thousands of dollars toward its maintenance and toward its funds and its appliances. I believe all denominations would regret to see the House take the action which is proposed by this bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. McCALL. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that this is not an industrial school, as is the school at Carlisle, Pa.; that it is rather a school for the training of teachers.

Mr. McCALL. It is both an industrial and academic school. Mr. FINLEY. I want to ask the gentleman if conditions in Oklahoma and other States have not changed vastly in the last 10 or 25 years, and could not the teachers now be trained in their institutes of learning?

Mr. McCALL. That has not been developed yet. I say that you will have better schools in Oklahoma and in other States where the Indians live if they have an opportunity to educate their children at the Hampton Institute.

Mr. JONES. I want to say that they had a normal course in these State institutions and it has been abolished.

Mr. FINLEY. There are institutions of learning, colleges and schools, in Oklahoma and elsewhere, and why can not the teachers be trained there? I think if anything should be done for the Indians it should be largely along industrial lines, so that they may be qualified to make a living.

Mr. McCALL. If the gentleman from South Carolina does not believe that we should give them an academic training, perhaps he would vote to discontinue the school, but if he does he will vote to discontinue the highest training school for the Indian race in America.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the argument that this appropriation should be continued because it is a high-grade institution and that the appropriation should not be taken away from it, I can not concede as sound. The State of Oklahoma has colleges, it has institutions of high learning, it has training schools where Indians and white people and citizens of that State can go and be trained to teach, the same is true else-

I do not think that the facts warrant the statement that Hampton Institute should be maintained and supported because it is a training school for Indian teachers. I think the teachers for the Indians can be trained elsewhere. I think the Indians should largely have industrial training. Of course there should be teachers among the Indians properly trained. The Indians are a great race and have made great progress, and I hope they will make more progress, but I do not think that sufficient has been shown here in the way of facts to warrant Congress to continue the appropriation for maintaining and supporting this institution of learning.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FINLEY. I will. Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall] to say that if it was the idea of the gentleman from South Carolina that the Indian should not have an academic training then he should vote against this amendment. I want to know whether that suggestion is accurate, whether they can not have both an academic and an industrial training in the vicinity of their homes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I made no statement that will bear any such construction. The Indian should have an academic training, and he should also have an industrial training.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think the gentleman from South Carolina misunderstands me.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Floyd of Arkansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 278):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected Augustus O. Bacon, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office this day in the absence of the Vice President.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, each year the Government expends a large sum of money for the education of the Indian. To my mind this is simply a question as to where the money can best be expended and produce the best results. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] has just stated that his objection to this amendment for the education of the Indian children at Hampton Institute is that there are provisions in the various States from which these Indians come for their education at home. If he will look into the subject for a moment, he will come to the conclusion that he is under a misapprehension of facts. It is true that in the various States from which these Indian children come there exist normal schools, colleges, and other institutions of learning, but in none of them is there provision made by the Government for the education of Indian children. In none of them is provision made by the Government to pay the expenses of educating a single Indian boy or girl. The thing to be considered here is whether the Government shall expend a certain amount upon the education of the Indian children at Hampton in preference to expending the same amount upon the education of Indian children somewhere else. I for one take it as exceedingly un-wise to discontinue the education of the Indians at Hampton.

For more than a generation Indians have been educated there with pronounced success.

It is generally accepted among people engaged in educational work that it is more than ordinarily desirable for children, white or Indian, to be taken from the immediate surroundings in which they may be born and in which their early roundings in which they may be born and in which their early life has been passed, taken from thence to another portion of the country, there to be educated, that they may have the benefit of the customs, the culture, the ideas, the society there to be found. It is a part of a liberal education, and a most important part. While it is true as a general policy that we should restrict our educational institutions to Indian reservations, there should be some exceptions. The only two exceptions of any practical benefit to-day are those at Carlisle and Hampton. The advance of the whites has gradually pushed the Indians farther and farther, till now most of the Indians are located in Western States. It is of the utmost value that a part of them, during the formative period of their lives, should be schooled in the East. The East has much to give them that they need. I hold that no American boy can behold Plymouth Rock or Bunker Hill without being a truer patriot and a better man. No youth, either white or Indian, is there whose love of country would not be advanced, whose manhood or womanhood would not be strengthened, by dwelling in the classic atmosphere at Hampton, the spot where American civilization was first born and where three centuries of American history have been written.

I believe in Carlisle, but I also believe that institution is already large enough and that you will injure the institution, that you will injure the children sent there, if you increase the number to be educated there by taking those now at Hampton. Let Carlisle stand in all her glory; let Hampton continue her splendid work of upbuilding American Indian manhood and womanhood.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have investigated that matter, and they can easily take care of this number.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated that these Indians all come from the far West, and that the cost of transporting them to the East is great and should be stopped. facts do not bear out that contention in any particular degree. I have here the statistics showing the States from which these children have come during the past 30 years. I would, in this connection, call the attention of the committee to the fact that from Florida 16 have come, and this institution is located the nearest to Florida of any Indian school in the land.

Three have come from Maine, 1 from Massachusetts, and from the Empire State of New York have come 159, a number exceeded by no other State in the Union, excepting alone the States of South Dakota and Wisconsin. Also, Mr. Chairman, there have come from the State of North Carolina 51, and today there are many Indian children in North Carolina who have no place to go to school unless they go to this school at Hampton. Hampton is performing a great work in the education of the Indian. It is teaching the Indian how to live by his hand and how to train his mind that the brain and hand may work together. It teaches the Indian to be self-supporting, and in so far as it does this it solves the Indian question. Hampton does more. It trains Indian boys and girls in the art and science of teaching and instructing their kinsmen, teaches them to be teachers, trains them to be instructors. No other Indian school in the world does this. No system of Indian schools is complete without it. We need Hampton. The other Indian schools need Hampton. The Indians need Hampton. Every consideration for the welfare of the Indian demands that we retain Hampton. I sincerely trust, I fervently entreat, the committee to vote for the offered amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, Hampton is a school attended by Indian and colored children only, in the State of Virginia, where mixed schools are prohibited.

I disayow here and now any prejudice against the colored ace. I have known the negro from infancy. From my earliest childhood he was my daily companion and playmate. As I grew up he was my co-worker on range, field, and ranch. In later years he has been my faithful servant and stanch adherent and follower; and through all I have found him to be grateful to a fault, faithful in his friendship to me, and responsive to a trust when once you made him clearly understand the responsibility of that trust. But notwithstanding the kindly feeling that I have for the colored man, experience has taught me the utter futility of any and all efforts to bring the negro into any closer social relationship with the white man.

Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Jones] if he expects to elevate the Indian by practicing upon him a policy to which he himself will not condescend?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that the answer to his question is to be found in the character of the Indian graduates. The very best educated, the most prominent and influential Indians to be found in the United States to-day, were educated at Hampton, and they all praise the course of education there and indorse the school.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not embarrass the gentleman from Virginia by pressing the question, because we all know full well his views upon this subject.

Much has been said first and last about the wonderful things we have done for the Indian, but let us not forget what the Indian has done for the white man. Let us not forget that this land of liberty-this great Republic, one of the greatest in area as well as otherwise on the face of God's moral vineyard-has been carved exclusively from the former domain of the red man, and in most every instance without an adequate considera-

There was a time when the will of the North American Indian was supreme upon this continent-a time that when his sacred rights were infringed upon he entreated not nor asked for quarter, but rushed out upon the bloody warpath and waged cruel and relentless war, just as civilized nations are wont to do to-day. [Applause.] But that was before the white man started his benevolent assimilation steam roller. [Laughter.]

The history of the contact of these two races—the red and the white-reveals to us that ever since the great Genoese navigator landed on the sunny shores of San Salvador the white has been demanding and the red has been conceding. The white man began by asking for a night's lodging. The Indian consented, and before the dawn of day the white man planted a cross and in the name of a pretended Christianity claimed the lodging place for his own. He asked for a few acres of land on which to plant a small patch of Indian corn. The Indian consented, and the white man claimed a State. The Indian was then told that his presence in the State was undesirable, that he must move on westward, to a reservation, and, as was truthfully stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Milles], promised that the reservation should be his, free from intrusion by the white man, so long as grass grew and water ran, but hardly had the ink dried on the instrument of your plighted faith when you informed the Indian that he must select a small allotment from the reservation and surrender the residue for homes for his white brothers. You asked him to give up his tribal government, his chief, his council, and all his revered, traditional tribal institutions. The Indian responded by assuming the responsibilites of your United States citizenship. He was next asked to give up his free, wild, untrammeled life. He answered by accepting your mode of living, your book learning, and joining in your march of civilization and progress.

You then asked the Indian to give up the religion of his forefathers. He responded by surrendering the Great Spirit and happy hunting grounds and accepting faith in your God, your heaven, and all that the Christian religion implies; and finally, Mr. Chairman, the white man has demanded and the Indian has conceded until he has nothing left but his self-respect, and now you come to him with Hampton school and ask him to surrender that self-respect by placing his children on a social equality with an inferior race, a level to which you yourself will not deign to descend. [Loud applause.]

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is anything compulsory in my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it. On a division (demanded by Mr. Jones) there were-ayes 33, noes 65. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON.

Sec. 23. For support and civilization of the D'Wamish and other allied tribes in Washington, including pay of employees, $7,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making a request. The American word, for the purpose of making a request. The American Congress, I think, is especially fortunate at this time in having with them a Member who is particularly familiar with the disease known as trachoma. This House very generously and very righteously, I think, adopted an amendment providing for a hospital for the treatment of those affected, and at my request the Member from New York, Dr. Kindren, has presented a chart here. I trust he will be allowed to proceed for a few minutes, and I hope the committee will hear him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is now 5 minutes to 6 o'clock. Does the gentleman intend to move that the committee rise after the gentleman from New York concludes?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] have 10 minutes in which to address the House on the disease of trachoma, with the understanding that after that the committee shall rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have 10 minutes in which to address the committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so

[Mr. KINDRED addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I make a similar request. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] makes a similar request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I also make a similar request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Ste-PHENS] also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the Record also.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. KINDRED] this question: Does this trouble of which he speaks attack anybody but Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. KINDRED. If I had the time I would be very glad indeed to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I move that the committee do now rise, Mr. Chairman. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BARNHART, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20728-the Indian appropriation bill-and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 96. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River," approved April 3, 1912.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to House resolution adopted March 12. 1912, findings of the Kansas City court of appeals in the matter of disbarment of Leslie J. Lyons, United States district attorney (H. Doc. No. 685); to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior submitting estimate of appropriation for furniture and office appliances for the office of the Secretary and the bureaus of the department (H. SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 9, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D. The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Smoot and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEMOTED EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 548).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of January 22, 1912, a statement of the number of railway mail clerks and other post-office employees who have been demoted since January 1, 1912, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented resolutions adopted by the board of aldermen of the city of New York, favoring an appropriation for the deepening of the East River, N. Y., which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Citizens' Northwest Sub-urban Association, of Tenleytown, D. C., praying that an ap-propriation be made for the construction of a George Washington memorial building in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Baptist Church, the Presbyterian Church, and the Methodist Church South, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Stevensville, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Como, all in the State of Montana, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the Park View Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation authorizing the extension and widening of Spring Road, Washington, D. C., which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Rhode Island Avenue Suburban Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the proposed increase in water rates in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of Local Division No. 548, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Peru, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called employers' liability and workmen's compensation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Dakota, praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads Roads.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 709, Brother-hood of Railroad Trainmen, of Minot, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Winslow and Pleasant Grove Township, in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I present resolutions adopted by the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association, of the District of Columbia, in favor of the bill (S. 5494) to provide a site for the George Washington Memorial Building. I ask that the resolutions lie on the table and be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

on the table and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Approval of Senate bill 5494, to provide a site for the George Washington Memorial Building.

Whereas Senate bill 5494 provides for a site in Armory Square for the erection of a George Washington Memorial Building to serve as a convention hall for patriotic, scientific, professional, and other organizations interested in promoting the welfare of the American people, which will furnish ample accommodations for the small and large conventions of American and foreign representatives of numerous organizations, which are yearly increasing in numbers because the city of Washington is recognized as the center of American thought and activity and as the most beautiful and healthy city on the American Continent; and

Whereas the erection of this memorial building will gratify the national demand for a national convention hall in the Nation's Capital where no adequate facilities now exist; and

Whereas this bill provides that the erection and maintenance of this memorial hall shall be paid for by private donations and subscriptions, which we regard as too uncertain and difficult to obtain, as shown by the history of the Washington Monument; and

Whereas this association, on the 6th day of May, 1010, unanimously adopted a resolution for the erection of a national convention hall in this city by an appropriation from Congress of $3,000,000, which would make certain its early completion for the free dissemination of ideas, on the same patriotic policy which created the Congressional Library at a cost of $6,000,000 for the free distribution of books: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association in public meeting assembled this 5th day of April, 1912. That while we favor this

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Citizens' Northwest Suburban Association in public meeting assembled this 5th day of April, 1912, That while we favor this bill for the donation of the site, we strongly oppose the plan for the erection and maintenance of said building, and we unanimously petition the Congress of the United States in the name of the 90 per cent of the people of the District of Columbia and the Nation to amend said bill by appropriating $2,000,000 to construct and complete said George Washington Memorial Building, so that the people of this generation may enjoy the benefits thereof: be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution and petition be presented to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, and a copy to the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate and House of the Sixty-second Congress.

A true copy.

C. C. Lancaster, President.

C. C. LANCASTER, President. A. J. YOWELL, Secretary.

Mr. DU PONT presented memorials of sundry citizens of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Newtown, Cornwells, and Lumberville, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation for sale of beverages containing alcohol, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULBERSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Weatherford, Tex., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. STONE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of St. Joseph, Mo., remonstrating against the extension of the parcelpost system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. POMERENE presented a memorial of the Northeast Washington Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the proposed increase in the salaries of certain District officials, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THREE-YEAR HOMESTEAD BILLS.

Mr. BORAH. I present a telegram, in the nature of a petition, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD. The telegram relates to the three-year homestead bills.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPOKANE, WASH., April 8, 1912.

Senator W. E. Borau, United States Schate, Washington, D. C.:

Thousands discouraged homesteaders on temporarily nonproductive land watching anxiously fight for homestead bills. At present men with means commute and leave poor men with families of small children needing the land, who would make permanent and in time prosperous homes if requirements were reasonable; starved out.

IRA MACLAREN.

CHAS. VANDEWALKER.

W. C. SMITH.
E. A. POTTER.
F. C. VANDEWALKER.

Mr. BORAH. In the same connection I ask to have printed in the Record two editorials, one from The Oregonian, of Portland, Oreg., of April 4, and the other from the Washington Post of April 9.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The editorials are as follows:

> [From The Oregonian, Portland, Oreg.] KEEP AMERICANS IN THE UNITED STATES.

KEEP AMERICANS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Congress has at last awakened to the necessity of taking some steps to check the tide of emigration from the United States to Canada. The argument in favor of the three-year homestead bill which appealed most forcibly to eastern Members was the fact that in the year 1910 this migration totaled 125,000, and that the emigrants took with them about $125,000,000 to start their new homes in Canada. That country is gaining population at the rate of 1,000 a day, while the border States are yearly losing thousands of people, and Iowa has had a net loss of population in the last census period.

The explanation is the difference in the treatment accorded settlers on Government iand in the two countries. Canada holds out the hand of welcome to them, has liberal land laws, and gives them every aid and encouragement in making a start. The United States imposes on homesteaders arduous conditions, which exclude practically all except small capitalists, regards them with suspicion, and has special agents dogging their steps. Settlers are likely to have their claims contested and to be kept in ignorance of the grounds of the contest until too late to make an adequate defense. This condition exists, too, at a time when the whole Nation has become alive to the necessity of turning the proportion of food producers to food consumers.

By reducing the period of residence on a homestead from five to three years and by granting the settler five months' leave of absence each year, the three-year homestead bill will increase the inducement to settle on the public domain and stay the migration to Canada. A change in the Land Office regulations whereby a settler will have the same chance to know the charges and the witnesses against him as has a defendant in a court of justice—in fact, a change in the entire attitude of the Land Office to the settler—will still further aid in keeping Americans in the United States.

[From the Washington Post.] BARRIERS TO HOME SEEKERS.

Professedly the Government is administering the homestead laws in a more liberal spirit than during the height of the conservation craze, but Congress now knows that the barriers to the settlement of public lands to-day are. If anything, more obstructive than ever before. While the Government assents to the passage of a bill reducing from five to three years the time within which homesteads may be patented, it insists upon the retention of the other barsh constructions given the laws of 1906 and 1910, knowing full well that the door to settlement would be closed as effectually as now whether the time limit be three years or five.

As the only remaining public lands suitable for agriculture are covered by timber and lie within the national forests, would-be settlers are required to make entry under the forest homestead law. This law rests on the fallacious theory that in a pecuniary sense timbered lands are more valuable for their timber than for agricultural possibilities. Thus the Government argues that the standing crop of timber has a greater value than an endless succession of farm crops. Had such a lame policy been adopted in the early days, the development of the Republic would have been restricted to the fur and fishing industries. The virgin forests still would-cover the vast expanse of lands now profitably occupied by 90.000,000 people, and from which has been derived more than $75,000,000,000 of accumulated wealth.

The homesecker, under the present system of laws, encounters the provision that the timber on the 100 acres on which he has set his heart must first be sold to another and cut off before it can be listed for entry. "This precantion," we are told, "is taken to eliminate timber speculation and to encourage bona fide homesteading." Next' the Government leisurely sets about ascertaining, by a tedious process, whether the land is andapted to agriculture. Of the 5,216 applications for homesteads listed in 1910, 4,193 of these still awaited action at the close of the year.

Then comes the survey

MASON M. MAXON.

CHOCTAW AND CREEK TREATY LANDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16661) to relinquish, release, remise, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to all the lands held under claim or color of title by individuals or private ownership or municipal ownership situated in the State of Alabama which were re-served, retained, or set apart to or for the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians under or by virtue of the treaty entered into between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians on March 24, 1832, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. Curtis, Mr. McCumber, and Mr. Stone conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (8. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when the bill was up for consideration on last Friday I had reached the point as to what it would cost to distribute through the mails a million copies of the Congressional Record per year. From the report of the Postmaster General the amount would be $3,832,675.

I also requested the Public Printer to submit certain information for the use of the committee as to whether there were any obstacles in the way or any difficulties to overcome at the Government Printing Office in printing a million extra copies if Congress should so decide. I received a letter from the Public Printer, dated January 11, 1912, in which he makes this statement:

Dear Senator: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of January 9, requesting a statement relative to the cost of certain proposed changes in the printing of the Congressional Record. In reply thereto the following statement is submitted:

One million copies of the Record printed in its present form could not be produced in the buildings now occupied by the Government Printing Office.

An edition of 1,000,000 copies of the Congressional Record daily can be printed and produced in an economical manner by—

1. Printing the daily Record in newspaper form; size of pages 10 by 23, five column—

23, five column-

The Senate will note that that is an entire change from the form of the RECORD as it is printed to-day.

2. The installation of three octuple perfecting newspaper presses, with stereotyping and mailing equipment;
3. The construction of a building having an approximate floor space of 50,000 square feet, and not exceeding three stories in height, adjacent to the railroad yards in the northern or southern sections of the jacent to the railroad yards in the northern of city.

Ten carloads of paper would be consumed daily, and storage space for a 10 days' supply, or 100 carloads, would be necessary.

The daily mail shipment would amount to approximately 12 carloads. The cost of production in newspaper form, based upon the issues and average number of pages during the three sessions of the Sixty-first Congress and the gain or loss would be approximately as follows:

Number of issues: First session, 123; second session, 168; third session, 82.

Average number of pages per issue: First session, 56; second session, Number of issues: First session, 123; second session, 168; third session, S2.

Average number of pages per issue: First session, 56; second session, 00; third session, 64.

Cost of 1,000,000 copies of each issue, page 19 by 23, five columns, on paper at 3 cents per pound: First session, $5,348; second session, $8,858; third session, $9,460.

Cost of 1,000,000 copies each of all issues: First session, $1,026,804; second session, $1,012,150; third session, $776,212.

Cost of one copy of all issues: First session, $1.02; second session, $1.61; third session, 78 cents.

No increase in the composing-room equipment of the Government Printing Office would be necessary. The matrices would be made in the present Government Printing Office and taken from there to the Recond printing and plate-making plant.

The cost of new equipment would be approximately $140,000.

The matter appearing in the daily Record would be revised, remade-up, and reprinted for the bound Record in its present form, and the charge for composition placed against the bound Record.

Yours, respectfully,

Samuel B. Donnelly, Public Printer.

SAMUEL B. DONNELLY, Public Printer.

Mr. President, as will be seen from the report of the Public Printer, in order to comply with the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], the form of the RECORD would have to be changed; the size would have to be changed; it would have to be printed in five columns; and it would be almost impossible to accomplish the result.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair).
Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.
Mr. BRISTOW. Why would it be necessary to change the form or the size of the Record?
Mr. SMOOT. On account of the necessity for using presses form of the Record as it is to-day, it would be impossible to make the impressions necessary; that is, the number that would be necessary to print a million copies a day.

Mr. BRISTOW. But we have no assurance that a million copies will be required.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, if we pass the law, we would have to be in a position to meet the requirement if it came; and from what the Senator from Idaho has said, not only would the people be glad to subscribe for a million copies of the Record, but he thinks there would be 2,000,000 copies subscribed for. In order to provide for a million copies we would have to provide floor space for 100 carloads of paper so as to have 10 days' supply on hand. No printing office can run-especially the Government Printing Office, that is required to produce almost immediately after the daily adjournment of the two Houses of Congress the debates of the day-without at least having 10 days' supply of paper on hand.

Mr. BRISTOW. Does the Senator from Utah think there would be a million subscribers to the RECORD?

Mr. SMOOT. If I were going to offer any opinion, I would say I hardly think so; and yet that would only be an opinion. Mr. BRISTOW. May I inquire what kind of presses are now used in the publication of the Congressional Record? Mr. SMOOT. The presses that we have now at the Government Printing Office are as follows:

The Government Printing Office has three web presses upon which the RECORD can be printed. Web press No. 3 takes eight 8-page signa-

That would mean, of course, that there would be 8 times 8 pages, or 64 pages-

This press cost $38,500 and has a capacity of 150,000 impressions in 24 hours. Web press No. 37 takes four 8-page signatures, cost $23,000, and has a capacity of 150,000 impressions in 24 hours. Web press No. 938 takes four 8-page signatures, cost $25,000, and has a capacity of 150,000 impressions in 24 hours. These presses print, cut, and fold the signatures.

With our present pressroom and bindery equipment we can print and mail 100,000 copies of a 128-page RECORD in each 24 hours.

And that is only one-tenth of the amount for which the amendment provides.

This is our maximum capacity. The RECORD, however, seldom makes 128 pages, and an edition of 100,000 can be undertaken on our present equipment with safety.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah suggests that the amendment provides for a certain number. As I understand, the amendment does not provide for any number, but it provides that the price of the RECORD shall be $1 for the short session and $2 for the long session. Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was thinking of the original amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, wherein it is specifically stated that the price would not be $1 and $2 until there had been a million copies of the Record subscribed for. The Senator from Kansas is right in saying that the amendment which we now have under consideration does not provide for any specific number; but that is one of the dangers of this whole amendment, that we shall have to provide for the printing of a million copies; and if we only receive 100,000 subscriptions the figures of loss per copy will be greatly in excess of what are claimed to be the figures with the issue of a million copies.

Mr. BRISTOW. Allow me to inquire why does the Senator propose to provide for the printing of a million copies when he has not the slightest idea that they will be needed?

Mr. SMOOT. I will not say that I have not the slightest idea that they will be required.

Mr. BRISTOW. As I understand, there is now an equipment to print 100,000 copies of the RECORD. In my judgment, that is as many as will be called for in five years, and probably more. Why not wait, and not provide for the additional copies until they are needed?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we are now printing 32,000, indeed nearly 33,000, copies of the Congressional Record every day. So that would only mean an increase of about 67,000 copies to bring it up to the ultimate limit of what the Government Printing Office could print each 24 hours, providing they were furnished the extra presses that they have asked for in a communication addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BRISTOW. Can the Senator advise the Senate how many of the 32,000 copies are paid subscriptions?

Mr. SMOOT. I can tell the Senator exactly the number of paid subscriptions, and I will give the figures for several different sessions, as they vary slightly. In the first session of the that will run faster and make more impressions per day than those we now have in the Public Printing Office. Under the Sixtieth Congress there were 110 paid subscriptions; in the second session of the Sixtleth Congress, 145; in the first session of the Sixty-first Congress, 110; in the second session of the Sixty-first, 113; and in the third session of the Sixty-first Congress, 160.

Mr. BRISTOW. With the price at $4 for the short session and $8 for the long session there are practically no Records subscribed for—only 100 or so for each session. Does not the Senator from Utah realize that the reduction in the price to a dollar for the short session and $2 for the long session would not lead to any such enormous increase as is contemplated by the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMOOT. My opinion is that it would not reach a million copies. I can not tell whether it would or not, but in my opinion it would not.

Mr. BRISTOW. In my judgment it would not reach a hundred thousand. There will be several thousand citizens, I should say, throughout the country who would like to keep informed as to what is going on here in Congress, and the paid subscriptions might vary from 10,000 to 25,000. That would not cost the Government much, and I think it would be a good thing. It seems to me that we are anticipating dangers that are very remote indeed when we undertake to provide for any large increase in the subscriptions because we reduce the price to a nominal figure.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I really think that the Senator overlooks the fact that if the Record could be secured for a dollar, to begin with there would be perhaps very many people take it. I think that it being a new thing and the newspapers calling attention to it more than likely there would be, at least for a year or two, a great many subscribers for the RECORD; but I do not believe in four or five years from now that there would be as many subscribers. However, I do believe, if we adopted the amendment, that we would be put in a position of being compelled not only to provide extra room but extra machinery, and the cost to the Government would be very great.

In connection with the cost to the Government, I wish to call the Senate's attention to the cost of the paper used in printing one copy of the daily Record per session. The average number of issues for a session is 181; the average weight per Record is 4 ounces; the total weight for a session is 45½ pounds; the average price of the paper per pound is 3.5 cents; the total cost of the paper for one copy per average session is $1.583; cost, including blank pages, is $1.70. Senators understand that nearly every daily Record issued has a blank page on the back and pages containing the names and addresses of Members of Congress and a number of other items, such as the rules of the Joint Committee on Printing; all these go out of the bound or official Record, and the cost I have given also includes the blank

The total cost of paper for the Sixty-first Congress, second session, in which there were 10,602 pages in the Congressional Record, was $2.769; the cost, including blank pages, was $2.85. Now, under the amendment, if it should carry, for the short session the Government would receive 70 cents less than the actual cost of paper to every subscriber, and for the long session would receive 85 cents less than the actual cost of the paper for every subscriber.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the Government is not printing the Congressional Record as a business proposition any more than it prints agricultural bulletins, of which each Senator has 12,000 to distribute. They cost the Government a lot of money, but they are distributed free of charge for the purpose of disseminating information in regard to agriculture. It is for the general welfare of the country. Now, why should we not dis-tribute the Record at a nominal price, in order that the people who are interested in the action of Congress in the daily proceedings here may be informed as to exactly what is being done? It seems to me that there is no publication the Government issues, out of the many that are distributed free of cost. that could be more properly distributed than the RECORD, and, as has been suggested to me by a Senator sitting near by, if the capacity of the Government's present equipment is 100,000 copies, as the Public Printer states, we could limit the edition to 100,000 in order to prevent the embarrassment that might come if a very large number of subscriptions should be asked for; and then when the 100,000 limit has been reached Congress can take up the question as to further extending and enlarging the equipment. That would save the embarrassment which the Senator from Utah anticipates.

Mr. SMOOT. That would certainly be an improvement, Mr. President, over the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. I want to say to the Senator that if the Senate feels that it is incumbent upon the Government, or if it thinks it is a good thing to do to print and sell the Record at less than costa great deal less than half its cost-of course the bill ought to be amended to meet that desire of the Senate; but before the amendment is agreed to, I want the Senate to understand exactly what it is going to cost; and then, if they vote to amend the law, they will do so with their eyes open, and they will know just what it is going to cost the Government to do it. I would not put a straw in the way if that is the sentiment of the Senate, but the committee carefully considered this matter. The Printing Committee of the House met with the Printing Committee of the Senate, and we decided that it was hardly proper at this time to put that burden upon the Government. I have here an estimate which I will roughly state to the Senate of what a million copies would cost.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, Mr. President, if the Senator can do so, I should like to have him make an estimate on a hundred thousand copies. I think to estimate on a million is simply visionary

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, a hundred thousand extra copies would cost a great deal more in comparison than the figures given here for a million copies.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why?

Mr. SMOOT. For the very reason that in printing a million copies we would have to print it in a different form, and we are figuring upon paper here worth 3 cents. Another thing, we could run off a million copies within, perhaps, five times of what it would take to run off a hundred thousand copies, and we could run off 2,000,000 copies cheaper by 10 per cent than we could 1,000,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. There will never be a demand for two millions or one million. As I understand the Senator, a hundred thousand copies of the Recond as this one here [exhibiting] would measure the present equipment of the Government Printing Office. Of course, I do not think there would be a demand for a hundred thousand copies for some time at least, but what I should like would be an estimate of what an edition of a hundred thousand of these would cost. That would be 67,000 more than are now printed.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, a hundred thousand extra above what we are now printing?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; an edition of a hundred thousand all It seems to me that nothing could be more beneficial than to give an opportunity to the inquiring citizens of the United States who are especially interested in the proceedings of Congress to get the RECORD at a nominal price. Then they would know what actually transpires here.

A good deal has been said about the accuracy of the news-aper reports as to the proceedings in Congress. The truth is paper reports as to the proceedings in Congress. that the American newspaper does not print the proceedings of Congress. The American newspaper prints sensational things that happen in Congress. The papers print somewhat elaborate summaries of what happens when the whole public is aroused, but the everyday proceedings of Congress-appropriation bills and things of that kind-get no space in the American newspapers. In every State, in every county, there are a few men active in public affairs, active in business, who would like to know what goes on here, and if they could get the RECORD without any great expense they could inform themselves and secure accurate information. It would be, I think, an education to the public and certainly a protection to Members of Congress if they should be misrepresented by the public press in any way. It seems to me there is a good deal of force in the suggestion.

Mr. SMOOT. From an estimate of what the RECORD cost for the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, and taking that as an average, the 67,000 extra copies of the Record would

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course, as a matter of fact, the 67,000 additional copies would not cost the same proportionate amount as the 33,000 that are printed. The additional 67,000 would be very much less per copy, of course, than the initial 33,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that fact, and in so doing I did not take the long session into consideration, but I took the average of 5,636 pages, which would be a little more than the short The short sessions average about 5,400 pages and the long sessions sometimes as high as 11,000 pages. So I think I have etimated it low enough, at least in the $521,286.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think anything would bring the people in more close and intimate relationship with the legislative branch of their Government or give them greater information as to what is going on in Congress than to be able to get the Record cheaply, and I think they ought to know what we do. I think it is to the public interest that they should know, especially when the responsibility of passing upon questions of governmental policy is gradually being thrown upon the shoul-ders of the people themselves, more in these times than ever before. It seems to me it is time that Congress should make some provision by which a wide distribution could be made of the actual record proceedings of the two Houses.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator that to provide for his suggestion the bill should be amended on page 75, line 18, after the first word "advance" by inserting this:

Provided, That the edition of the daily Congressional Record shall not exceed 100,000 copies.

Mr. BRISTOW. I was just getting ready to suggest that at the end of line 11 of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho-

Mr. SMOOT. I think it better to leave the bill just as it is and to insert after the word "advance" these words:

Provided, That the edition of the daily Congressional Record shall not exceed 100,000 copies.

I think that will meet the case exactly.
Mr. BRISTOW. "Advance." On what line, please?

Mr. SMOOT. Line 18, page 75, so that the paragraph would read this way:

The superintendent of documents is authorized to furnish to subscribers the daily Congressional Record at $8 for the long session and $4 for the short session—

Or whatever we decide to make the ratesor $1.50 per month, payable in advance; Provided, That the edition of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shall not exceed 100,000 copies.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator would consent, then, to strike out "eight," in line 15, and insert "two," and to strike out "four," in line 16, and insert "one," I think it would be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask the Senator, would be go as low as $2 and $1?

Mr. BRISTOW. I would; yes. I would make a nominal charge in order to prevent men who did not want it ordering it simply because they could get it free. If a man pays $2 or $1 for the RECORD he wants to read it, and if he wants it and is willing to pay that small amount, I say he ought to have it.

Mr. SMOOT. In doing that I suggest to the Senator, instead of $1.50 per month, in line 17, it should be 50 cents per month.

Mr. BRISTOW. I agree to that. Strike out $1 and leave it 50 cents. I believe the Senator from Utah will find it is the sense of the Senate that these amendments to the bill should

Mr. BRISTOW. Of course there is a pending motion, and I would have to move it as a substitute for the pending motion. Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator had better move it as a substitute and allow the Senate to vote upon it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Kansas that it would be in order to amend the amendment, if he so desires.

Mr. SMOOT. All the amendment required would be to put in, after the word "advance" in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, these words:

Provided, That the edition of the daily Congressional Record shall not exceed 100,000 copies.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is all the amendment which is re-

Mr. SMOOT. That is all that would be required in the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BRISTOW. I move to amend the amendment by inserting, in line 11, after the word "advance"—

Mr. SMOOT. In line 18, you mean. The Senator has the wrong line.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have a copy of the amendment, Mr. SMOOT. I have not.

Mr. BRISTOW. Insert:

Mr. BRISTOW. Will the Senator from Utah restate the language he proposes to incorporate? I do not have it here. Mr. SMOOT. It is:

Provided, That the edition of the daily Congressional Record shall not exceed 100,000 copies.

Mr. BRISTOW. That is to be inserted in line 11 of the amendment, after the word "advance."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho.

The Secretary. After the words "payable in advance" it is proposed to insert:

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has

Mr. SMOOT. I have no further remarks to make upon this amendment now, as it seems the Senate desires the Record to be sold at that price, and therefore I shall say nothing more as to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho as amended. I should like to have the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary, without objection, will again report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho as amended.

The Secretary. On page 75, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "eight," at the end of the line, and insert in lieu thereof the word "two," so as to rend:

The superintendent of documents is authorized to furnish to subscribers the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at $2 for the long session.

On line 16, on the same page, strike out "$4" and insert "$1," so that, if amended, it will read, "and $1 for the short session"; in line 17 strike out the words "one dollar and a half" and insert in lieu thereof the words "50 cents," so that it will read, "or 50 cents per month, payable in advance"; after the word "advance" comes the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, to insert the following words:

Provided, That the edition of the daily Congressional Record shall not exceed 100,000 copies.

And after the amendment to the amendment just stated insert as a part of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho the following:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make, on or before the 1st of July, 1912, such rules and regulations as will enable all postmasters in the United States to receive popular subscriptions for the dally CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the aforesaid terms per year, and report all such subscriptions and account for and pay the amount received therefor to the Public Printer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether it would not be better to separate the Record from the documents generally which are to be charged against the amount of money allotted to a Senator. It seems to me if the Record is to be included with the other documents it will be very embarrassing indeed for Senators, because the demand for the Record will be very large, as we all know, and it will be difficult to make people understand why we can not send indefinitely until the entire amount of money allowed us is exhausted. I think it would be better, if necessary, to make some reduction in the amount of money against which we can draw, and leave the RECORDS out and have it arranged as it is now.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana? Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY, I thoroughly approve of the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts. It seems to me the RECORD ought to be distinguished from all these other documents relating to all sorts of public questions, and that they should not fall in the same category with the Record.

Mr. SMOOT. Since the price of the Record has been reduced as it has been, I think myself it ought to be arranged that the Record shall be distributed as it has been in the past and shall not fall within the valuation plan. I have the amendments to cover that question all through the bill. I will begin offering the amendments.

Before doing that, however, I want to say that I have had a number of conferences with a number of Senators who are in-terested in this valuation plan, and if the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is accepted then the amount allowed to each Senator and to each Representative should be reduced. My amendments will provide for a reduction for each Senator to $2,000 and each Representative to $1,400, or a reduction of $500 on the allowance to each Senator and $400 on the allowance to each Representative; and then, of course, the Record will not be charged, and the number that is allowed each Senator now, 88, will be continued.

Mr. LODGE. Does the $2,000 that the Senator proposes cover about the average value of the documents now sent out?

Mr. SMOOT. It a little more than covers it. The average.

Mr. SMOOT. It a little more than covers it. The average for 10 years of the Record, as charged under the valuation plan, would be $560 per annum.

Mr. LODGE. That is, on the old basis?

Mr. SMOOT. On the old basis. But by this amendment we will just take $500 off, and under the $2,000 plan it gives every Senator more than he has had in the past.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. I have yielded the floor. Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Kansas. Mr. BRISTOW. There is this difficulty which I see, and I want to submit it to the Senator from Utah. The full report of the Monetary Commission is valued at about $45 in cloth binding.

Mr. SMOOT. I should judge bound it would be that amount. Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; $45 is the value fixed on a copy of the Monetary Commission's report. Each Senator, as I understand, has been assigned two sets. I think I have had requests for a dozen sets or more. Now, all of those requests, except two, have been denied necessarily, because those were all I had to distribute. With a credit of $2,000 to me, if I complied with the requests for a dozen copies or more of a set of books that cost $45, it would make a big hole in my credit.

I received yesterday morning a request for a full set of the books which compose the report of the Immigration Commission. If I remember rightly, they cost about as much as the report of the Monetary Commission cost.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the last report to which the Senator

Mr. BRISTOW. The full set of the report of the Immigration Commission, a very large work, containing many volumes.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator ever received a request for the whole set?

Mr. BRISTOW. I received a request yesterday morning.
Mr. SMOOT. The only volume I have ever received a request for or ever had a Member of the House or the Senate ask about is volume 6. That is about the only volume that I have ever heard of any request for.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have received a number, three or four requests at least, within the last year for an entire set.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state that those documents would not come under the valuation plan.

Mr. BRISTOW. We have no valuation scheme at present. and when they are printed each Senator is assigned so many copies for distribution,

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator refers to the immigration report. Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. That was a commission report. Therefore the report would not be charged to the Senator's allotment

Mr. BRISTOW. But it is a public document, and it is distributed as other public documents are. The senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] was the chairman of the commission.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. BRISTOW. What documents would be charged to the $2,000 credit, and what would not be?

Mr. SMOOT. Only those documents that are printed by order of the Senate or House of Representatives. The Immigration Commission's report will not be charged to the allotment of the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. It has not been completed yet.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but when completed it will not go as an allotment to a Senator or a Member.

Mr. BRISTOW. It might or it might not. That would depend on the action of the Senate. The report of the Immigration Commission may be a public document, the same as the report of any other commission or congressional committee might be, and the assignment might be made, and in that event it would come out of the $2,000. It was this point which I feared the Senator from Utah did not fully consider. That is a valuable document. The distribution of it is limited to a few numbers. There are many requests coming to Senators for these documents, and they are declined, because Senators do not have them for distribution. Now, with this credit, they would have them for distribution, and this valuable document would soon absorb the $2,000, so the amount that has been used by Senators in the past will not be at all an accurate estimate as to what will be called for in the future.

Mr. SMOOT. In my speech I delivered in the Senate on this very point I called the attention of the Senate to this point, and

The estimates for each year include not only the standard publications to which I have already referred, the Congressional Eccord, and the Congressional Directory, but also every special publication that Congress ordered printed and distributed through the folding rooms, such as "Diseases of the Horse," "Diseases of Cattle," "Hinds' Precedents,"

"Tariff Hearings," "Jefferson's Bible," "Memorial Addresses on Lin-coln, Garfield, and McKinley," "Moore's Digest of International Law," "Charters and Constitutions," and the "Conference of Governors."

The amount estimated includes those special publications. would not include the immigration report nor the Monetary Commission report, but it does include every publication that is made a public document with a number and allotted so many to each Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to thank the Senator for explaining that, because I had supposed that all these valuable books would be taken out of the allotment, and in that event the $2,000 would soon be absorbed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.
Mr. JONES. What is there in the bill that eliminates those documents from the others?

Mr. SMOOT. They are not specifically mentioned in the bill, but they have been handled by the folding room.

Mr. JONES. But you are going to do away with the folding room hereafter?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the folding room is to be done away with, but there is a document room.

Mr. JONES. They will be charged up to us when we get them out of the allotment.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not out of the allotment.

Mr. JONES. What is there in the bill which says they will not be charged up against the allotment? We have to take the terms of the law as to what will be charged up against the allotment. In a hurried reading I do not see anything that eliminates those things.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I can tell the Senator exactly what will be charged.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that the average for each Senator of what is drawn is a little less than $2,500, as stated, including all the documents, the Record, and all. So even if you drew as many as you have in the past, or even more, your account would be sufficient to cover all these special documents.

Mr. BRISTOW. But, Mr. President, the objection I was making was that heretofore these valuable and expensive documents have been limited usually to two copies for each Senator, but sometimes as many as eight. When requests come as they do, as every Senator knows from his own experience, for these valuable books and we have a credit we must of course give them to our constituents or refuse to give them. If we furnish them, they will make our documents cost a great deal more in the future than they have done in the past.

Mr. SMOOT. Not unless the Senator distributes more, and the Senator certainly must take the responsibility as to how many of each shall be distributed. Here are the Monetary Commission reports, some 40-odd volumes, I think, in the whole issue, and it would not be fair for one Senator to distribute 20 or 25 of those and another Senator none.

In this valuation plan a Senator must use his own judgment as to how many he will distribute, and whatever is sent out is charged to him under the $2,000 valuation. That sum is sufficient to take care of everything that he is called upon to send It has done so in the past, and more. I do not think it should be materially increased for the future. Mr. BRISTOW. Now, to illustrate, a Senator will receive a request for the reports of the Monetary Commission. I have received a great many such requests for the full report from bankers and men interested in financial matters. I do not have them for distribution, except the two copies, and they have been already distributed. I will have them for distribution, and every Senator will, under this proposition, and he will have to refuse to send them or send a document that is worth $45 probably to 15 or 20 of his constituents. Then a request comes for the Horse book, the Cattle book, and other documents, and by the time the requests are exhausted for the valuable documents that we now decline to send because we have not got we will be very short of a credit for the ordinary distribution of the documents that are now distributed. That is an inevitable result.

Mr. SMOOT. No. Mr. BRISTOW. Unless you refuse arbitrarily to send documents to constituents whom you would like to favor. I think it is putting a responsibility on a Senator that would be exceedingly embarrassing and that none of us would care to assume.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator speaks of the Monetary Commission report. A publication like that does not come very often in a Congress. But under the valuation scheme, if this bill becomes a law, that particular document would not be charged in the allotment; but if a Senator wants more than the two copies, then of course Congress will have to order a reprint of it, and that is done here time and time again. There is hardly a day but that a Senator arises and asks unanimous consent that public document numbered so-and-so be reprinted, and that gives every Senator his two extra copies, or if it goes to the document room direct they are drawn from there as called for, irrespective of what a Senator is entitled to receive.

Mr. BRISTOW. That brings up the very point the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] raised. Where in the bill is the dividing line, so that we may know what does come within the allotment and what does not?

Mr. SMOOT. We will have to specify here when the Senate authorizes an edition printed greater than the ordinary number. The proposed law itself, in section 44, paragraph 2, provides Either House may by simple resolution order reprints or copies printed in addition to the usual number to the amount of $500; if the cost exceeds that sum or if it is proposed to make such publications available for congressional valuation distribution—

That is, if it exceeds that amount-the printing shall be ordered by concurrent resolution unless the resolution is self-appropriating, when the order shall be by joint resolution.

Then right in that connection is section 68, paragraph 4:

Documents specifically ordered printed by Congress for congressional valuation distribution and the following Government publications shall be subject to distribution by the superintendent of documents under the provisions of this section: Provided, That the superintendent of documents may supply, on the request of the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, not to exceed five copies each of any publication of the Government not authorized by this section which he may have in stock and charge the same against their respective valuation accounts.

Mr. BRISTOW. Then there is a provision in the bill by which publications, such as the report of the Monetary Commission, can be printed for distribution, the same as they are now, and not be charged to this allotment?

Mr. SMOOT. It rests entirely with the Senate as to what action shall be taken.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.
Mr. JONES. Is not that covered by the proviso just read, on page 72, that where there are documents not covered in the enumeration, then we can get five copies charged up to our allot ment.

Mr. SMOOT. Charged up to your allotment; that is, if the Senate directs that they shall be distributed under the valuation system.

Mr. JONES. This provision says:

Provided, That the superintendent of documents may supply, on the request of the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, not to exceed five copies each of any publication of the Government not authorized by this section which he may have in stock and charge the same against their respective valuation accounts.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the valuation. Mr. JONES. So if some document like the Monetary Commission report is printed and is not covered by the enumeration in this section, we get five copies and have it charged up to our

Mr. SMOOT. And five only. That is about the number of special publications that each Senator now gets.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah

yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask one more question. As I understand it, there is no provision, if the bill becomes a law, by which documents printed go to Senators and Representatives free?

Mr. SMOOT. As public documents? Mr. JONES. Yes. Mr. SMOOT. No; they will be charged to the valuation

Mr. JONES. If we want to get any documents we will have them charged to the allotment?

Mr. SMOOT. Charged to the allotment, except those that go to the document room.

Mr. JONES. That is what I want to get at. There will be a document room through which we will get some documents that will not be charged to the valuation account?

Mr. SMOOT. They never have been charged where they were not given a number.

Mr. JONES. We have not had this charging process hereto-

Mr. SMOOT. I mean as estimated in the account as being charged.

Mr. JONES. What I am trying to get at is, if the bill becomes a law, what are we going to get without having it charged against the allotment? Will we get anything?

Mr. SMOOT. Everything that goes to the document room under this valuation system will be charged to the Senator as drawn out by him or on his order.

Mr. JONES. But that does not answer my question. I want to know, if the bill becomes a law, whether there are documents we will get—I do not care where they come from—that will not be charged against the allotment; and if so, what documents?

Mr. SMOOT. What is called upnumber will not be charged, but anything above the upnumber which you are entitled to, if the first publication, will be charged to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Is there not a provision in the bill that gives us a certain number of each publication?

Mr. SMOOT. To begin with? Mr. JONES. To begin with.

Mr. SMOOT. That is called the upnumber.
Mr. JONES. They come to us without being charged to the allotment?

Mr. SMOOT. The law provides for that out of the 300 given to Senators of each issue— Mr. JONES. Three hundred? Mr. SMOOT. Not for each S

Not for each Senator, but for the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me ask a question. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] prompts me to ask whether the old custom by which Senators have been advised as to their credit of certain documents which they were at liberty to send out as they were requested to do will be still in vogue? We will be credited with $2,500 worth of these numerous documents?

Mr. SMOOT. Each Senator will be credited with $2,500.

Mr. SMOOT. Each Schalor will be credited with $2,000.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And if a Senator gets anything, he has just got to ask for it and specify the number of copies?

Mr. SMOOT. He has to-day the monthly catalogue of the United States public documents issued under the law. It is required to be issued. Every Senator has one of them furnished him, and he can select exactly what he wishes from the public documents.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Each Senator also has a statement from the folding room that there are to his credit certain documents, for instance, culogies on the life of the late Senator Daniel and documents of a similar character. Do I understand that there will be anything of that character standing to the credit of Senators after the bill becomes a law?

Mr. SMOOT. Two thousand five hundred dollars is credited to each Senator, and he can draw and have charged to his credit any publication.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand that instead of various documents being placed to his credit, as has been the custom for many years, he finds to his credit $2,500 a year, and if he desires to invest that money in documents he takes the catalogue that the Senator holds in his hand and selects from it what he desires. Is that correct?
Mr. SMOOT. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So the initiative is entirely with the Senator and Representative, and he finds nothing to his credit but this sum of money.

Mr. SMOOT. That is absolutely true. The Senator can then send to his constituents whatever documents they are interested in.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He can, but he will have to spend good deal of time to find out what he wants.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey? Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. As I understand it, Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Utah is to reduce our allowance by the cost of Records based on the old price of $8.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be more than we intend to reduce it if we took the full amount of the $8 and the $4; that is, the average would be $5.66 a year.

Mr. BRIGGS. Under this proposition the RECORD will cost $3 instead of $8.

Mr. SMOOT. Two dollars.

BRIGGS. Three dollars for two sessions—for a Con-It seems to me that that is the basis for the reduction Mr. BRIGGS. gress. that should be made in our allotment.

Mr. SMOOT. In granting $2,500 that is more than the allotment in the past which Senators have ever drawn.

Mr. SWANSON. More than we have sent out.

Mr. SMOOT. More than we have sent out, as the Senator from Virginia suggests. Certainly $2,000 will cover that, and more, too, provided the RECORDS are not charged to them. It was increased because of the very fact that there was a feeling that there should be more RECORDS distributed, but under this plan, now that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho has been adopted, you are going to receive the Records as you are receiving them to-day.

Mr. BRIGGS. But, Mr. President, we would be two or three hundred dollars better off if we did not have the RECORDS taken out and kept our $2,500 allowance.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that you will find that you will have more public documents to your credit than you can distributemore under this system than you have ever had in the past.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire of the Senator from Utah what is the use of skimping ourselves in the distribution of the valuable documents that we print? If they are printed by the Government for distribution, they ought to be distributed. If they are worth printing, they are worth reading, and why should we haggle over a hundred or two hundred dollars? not leave the $2,500 as it is and take the Records out, and then allow enough to make up for the additional demand we will have for the more valuable documents, which have been curtailed heretofore because of the limited number available?

Mr. SMOOT. It is only a question of expense. If the Senate feel that they want the allotment to remain at $2,500 for Senators and at $1,800 for Members of the House, in addition to the Record, it is for the Senate to decide.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I fully concur with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow]. I see no necessity for being parsimonious in connection with the publications of the Government. The Congressional Record and other publications of the Government are the only means 92,000,000 people have of becoming acquainted with the vast transactions here in Washington, covering vast expenditures and vast endeavors in governmental effort. It seems to me, after we ascertain what our constituents are interested in and know what they want, that, instead of $2,500 being sufficient, three or four thousand dollars would not be an excessive amount to provide publications containing information and education for the people in connection with governmental affairs. I wish to offer an amendment, on page 72, line 15, after the word "thereto," to insert the following:

To each Senator 88 copies; to each Representative 60 copies.

Mr. SMOOT. There will have to be a number of amendments

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to have determined the question whether we are going to have the RECORDS free or not.

Mr. SMOOT. That, as I understand, has virtually been determined; but I want to offer amendments that will cover the matter clear through the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, instead of reducing the amount from $2,500 to $2,000, I should like to increase it to $3,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia kindly restate his amendment? The Secretary did not get it

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Utah says he will offer an amendment which will apply throughout the entire bill, giving Congressional Records free to Senators and Members of the House as now provided by law. Then, with that provision in the bill, the only question of difference will be as to whether we shall have $2,000 or $2,500 worth of documents.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the only question; but, of course, if we have the $2,500 allotment, I shall offer an amendment to cover the whole question.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to say something in reference to having an allotment of $2,500. The Senator from Utah says

Mr. SMOOT. And the RECORDS also. Mr. SWANSON. And the RECORDS. The Senator seems to be very good on a trade.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I want to call the attention of my friend from Virginia to the fact that the 88 Records we now receive are furnished to us at the prices fixed for about $135, so that there is no justice in taking $500 off in order to supply that one item.

Mr. SWANSON. I was going to suggest that the Senator from Utah is about the finest trader on documents I have ever known. He seems to have readily consented, as soon as the amount of the allotment was decreased, for the Records to be furnished free. Mr. President, it seems to me that for documents and publications that are needed and desired by the people, $2,000 worth will not be sufficient; but there will be a demand for three or four thousand dollars' worth. I know I have demands for a great deal more than I can send. I have a great many documents to my credit that I do not send out, because the people are not interested in them and never read them; but of the documents the people want, such as are instructive to them, I could easily send out five or six thousand dollars' worth to the delight of the people and to their benefit, so far as information affecting governmental matters is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will find that $2.000 worth will furnish him with a great many public documents, because of the fact that they are published at a very low price. surprised to find how many he will receive. He will be

Mr. SWANSON. I could send the entire amount in agricultural yearbooks, which are instructive, beneficial, and desired. I wish to say that I do not believe any farmer gets a yearbook who is not benefited thereby; and not only that, but the country is benefited, because those books teach modern, up-to-date farming. I do hope that the Senator will be desirous of putting more information and valuable education amongst the people, rather than be endeavoring to limit us to $2,000 worth of documents. I should like to have the amount fixed at $3,000, for I could send even that amount out in yearbooks alone. They are not merely designed to suit a passing fancy or for mere political effect or benefit, as some people imagine, but they are valuable, for they bring better crops and they give the experience of the Agricultural Department in modern farming. As I have said, they are exceedingly beneficial, and the demand upon me for them far exceeds any possibility of my meeting it. Then, there are other publications relating to cattle, horses, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia withdraw his amendment?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Utah says that he will Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Utah says tl offer an amendment that will cover what I proposed.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 69, line 25, after the comma and following the word "section," I move to insert "except the Congressional Record."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. On page 69, line 25, after the word "section," it is proposed to insert the words "except the Congres-SIONAL RECORD.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 72, I move to strike out all of subdivision 2, down to and including line 21, on page 75. I desire to have that stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah propose to strike out the portion referred to as it has been amended heretofore?

Mr. SMOOT. As it has been amended, and then I will ask to have inserted provisions to conform to the suggestions that have been made by Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The Secretary. On page 72, beginning with line 13, subdivision 2, it is proposed to strike out down to and including line 21, on page 75.

The amendment was agreed to.

I offer the following amendment-Mr. SMOOT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. It is, on page 83, following line 17, to insert what I have sent to the desk as a new section 69, paragraph 1.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 83, following line 17, it is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

to insert as a new section the Ioliowing;
Sec. 69, Par. 1. The Public Printer shall furnish the Congressional Record as follows, and shall supply gratuitously no others in addition thereto:
To the Vice President and each Senator, S8 copies; to each Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, 60 copies; to be supplied daily as originally published or in the revised and permanent form bound on in half russia, as each may order, but not to exceed 5 copies of the Record shall be bound for the Vice President and each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, respectively, if more than that number of copies remain to the credit of each at the close of any session of Congress, unless specifically requested by the vice President, and each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner entitled to order such bound copies; to the Vice President and each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner there shall be furnished 3 additional copies of the Vice President and each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner there shall be furnished 3 additional copies of the Gallar (Commissioner there shall be furnished 3 additional copies of the Gallar (Commissioner there shall be furnished 3 additional copies of the Gallar (Commissioner there shall be furnished 3 additional copies of the Gallar (Commissioner there shall be furnished 3 additional copies of the Gallar (Copies) to the Senate, for the search of the Senate, for the search of the Senate, for the Senate, for the Senate, for the Senate, for the United States, the United States of the Senate, not to exceed 20 daily copies; to the Clerk and the Doorkeeper of the House, for office as the Senate, for the use of the Senate, not to exceed 20 daily copies; to the Cresident, for use of the Excentive Office, 4 copies of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the marshal and the clerk of said court, each 1 copy of the daily Recombination of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the marshal and the clerk of said court, each 1 copy of the daily Recombination of the Senate and the House of the Senate and the House of the Senate and the House, 1 copy of the daily Recombination of the Senate and the House of the Senate and the House, 1 copy of the daily Recombination of the Senate and the House of the Senate and t

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I shall not ask that the allotment be decreased from $2,500, but will consent that it may remain as it is in the bill.

Mr. KERN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 23, section 27, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the word "pressmen," and also to strike out the words "in charge," in line 21, on the same page.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment is to increase the wages of pressmen from 55 cents an hour, as provided by the bill, to 60 cents an hour. It has no other effect. The reason for the amendment, as given to me by the officers of the union who are interested, briefly stated, are as follows:

First, the increased cost of living since the rate of 50 cents per hour was established.

The present rate was established shortly after the Civil War was

The present rate was established shortly after the Civil War, was reduced 10 cents per hour during the panic of 1873, but was restored

Second, the remarkable progress in the design and construction of printing machinery in the last 25 or 30 years.

To operate the printing machines of to-day, with their enormously increased output and greatly improved quality of printing, requires much greater skill and imposes greater responsibilities upon the pressmen than the comparatively simple machines of 30 years ago.

It was then that the rate of 50 cents an hour was established.

Third. The danger of injury which is always present in the operation of complicated machinery.

In answer to the argument against the amendment which is based upon a report furnished by the Department of Commerce and Labor, which presents the rates of wages paid to pressmen in other cities, it can be said:

First. The rates of wages paid in other cities are provided for in agreements which cover short periods of from one to five years, and almost invariably increased at the expiration of the contracts covering them. On the other hand, if this bill is enacted into law, it will probably remain unchanged for many years.

Second. In all these agreements in the cities referred to between the employers and the employees the minimum rates only are stipulated, leaving the employer free to pay as much more as he sees fit. This bill provides the maximum rate which can be paid.

Third. A large per cent of pressmen in our large cities receive more than 60 cents an hour, the rate provided for in this amendment. For over five years the pressmen have been engaged in a struggle to have their compensation increased and several bills have been introduced in both Houses of Congress with this end in view, but up to the present time they have not secured consideration.

I understand this bill makes very liberal provision as to

I understand this bill makes very liberal provision as to working overtime, night work, and Sunday work. I am also informed that similar provisions equally liberal are made by other employers to their employees in the other cities referred to. These men claim—and they seem to be fair-minded men, reasonable men—that 60 cents an hour is a fair rate and, under the circumstances named, entirely reasonable and ought to be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have just as much sympathy for the laboring man as any Senator can possibly have. I have listened to the pressmen tell their side of the story a number of times. I was impressed with the statement they made, and in order to get at the facts as they really existed in this country I addressed a letter to the Department of Commerce and Labor relative to wages paid pressmen in different parts of our country and received an answer from the Secretary of that department dated February 21, 1911, in which he says:

Referring to your letter of the 2d instant and my reply, dated February 4, I beg to transmit herewith two tables, containing the results of the investigation made by the Bureau of Labor with regard to rates of wages and hours of labor in certain occupations in the newspaper and job printing industries.

In the following 15 cities inquiries were made by the agents of the Bureau of Labor as to the union scale of prices and hours, as well as the actual rates paid and the hours per week worked in the selected occupations on newspapers and also in book and job offices:

New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; Philadelphia, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo.; Boston, Mass.; Cieveland, Ohio: Baltimore, Md.; Pittsburgh, Pa.; Detroit, Mich.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Newark, N. J.; Washington, D. C.; and Jersey City, N. J.

Table 1 contains the data for newspaper offices in the 15 cities, the occupations covered being hand compositors, linotype operators, and web pressmen. A separate statement is made for the employees in these occupations engaged on day and on night work. The scales, wages, and hours of labor for pressmen's assistants, which are given in connection with the statement for pressmen, cover brakemen, tension men, ollers, and platers. and platers.

In order not to take too much of the time of the Senate, I wish to say that the present rate paid to pressmen is 50 cents an hour. The bill provides an increase to 55 cents per hour, or an advance of wages to the pressmen of $12,500 per annum. The Department of Commerce and Labor reports that in New York City the union minimum scale is 50 cents; the average actual rate, including union scale, is 51.2 cents.

In answer to the remarks made by the Senator from Indiana, as given him by the pressmen, wherein it is stated that the minimum scale only is quoted, I wish to say that not only is the union minimum scale given, but the average actual rate paid in the different cities, as reported by the Department of Commerce and Labor, is given.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KERN. Is it not true these outside wage scales are subject to be raised at any time?

Mr. SMOOT. It is true they could be raised, and it is also true we could amend the law and raise pressmen at the Government Printing Office, but I want to say that the wage scale that is provided in this bill, of 55 cents an hour, is higher than is paid pressmen anywhere in the United States, with the single exception of these working on the mammoth web presses that are used in New York and one other city in the list of cities reported.

Mr BROWN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah

yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.
Mr. BROWN. Of course, that is a very important statement if it is true. I have no doubt the Senator thinks it is true, but should like to know what information he has on which to base the statement that there is no place in the United States where higher rates are paid to pressmen than 55 cents an hour.

Mr. SMOOT. With the exception of those who are running the large web presses in New York City and Washington, D. C. I will say that in the 15 cities named we know it is true, and not only that, but I asked the representative of the pressmen if the figures reported by the department were wrong to let me know, and they have not reported to me that they were wrong.

Mr. BROWN. I do not suppose the pressmen or anybody else has the figures as to the cities outside of those quoted, but there are a great many other cities in the country than the cities quoted.

Mr. SMOOT. The report covered 15 of the largest cities in the country

Mr. BROWN. The rates paid pressmen in the moderately sized towns in this country are higher than 55 cents.

Mr. SMOOT. I should think-Mr. BROWN. I want to ca Mr. BROWN. I want to call the attention of the Senator further to the fact that in every instance he has cited the actual rate paid is higher than the minimum fixed by the union scale, and I should like to inquire of him why it would not be the right and the just and the fair thing to provide in this bill a minimum instead of a maximum rate.

Mr. SMOOT. We have to appropriate every year for the ressmen. They are provided for in the appropriation bill. pressmen. The men know exactly what they are getting. There is not a pressman in the Government Printing Office who is not well taken care of. He has 30 days' leave of absence. He is paid 20 per cent higher for night work, and he is paid one and a half times for Sunday work. He is paid double for holiday work. There is not a concern in the United States that gives a pressman 30 days' leave of absence.

Answering the Senator from Nebraska, I wish to say we had a representative of the pressmen before the committee and gave him a hearing, and he failed to inform the committee of any printing establishment paying pressmen more or as much as 55 cents per hour. I want the pressmen in the Government Printing Office to be the best-paid pressmen in the United States, and they will be under this bill. They have advantages that no other pressmen in the United States have, and I do not object to it, because I should like to see the Government Printing Office the most perfect printing office in the world, with the best class of men. We are giving them more than any other office that I know of for the same class of work. That is the reason I was in favor of the advance to 55 cents an hour.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield. Mr. BROWN. I do not understand why it is necessary in the case of the pressmen to fix a rate by a standard that is definite and certain, when the rate is left to the discretion of the Public Printer in cases of emergency as to some other employees. And I can not understand the reason for the discrimination that is made in this same section against these pressmen in authorizing an increase of 20 per cent to employees doing night work who are not on annual salary. Does that same provision apply to pressmen, or are they excluded?

Mr. SMOOT. I did not understand what the Senator said. Mr. BROWN. I was trying to call the Senator's attention to the last provision in this section, on page 24:

The list provision in this section, on page 24:

Provided further, That the pay of all the employees of the Government Printing Office engaged on night work between the hours of 4 clock and 30 minutes postmeridian and 8 o'clock antemeridian, except hose receiving annual salaries fixed either by law or by the Public Printer, shall be 20 per cent in addition to the amount paid for day

Mr. SMOOT. A pressman is not on annual salary; he is paid by the hour.

Mr. BROWN. Then, the provision allows them 20 per cent increase?

Mr. SMOOT. For night work.

Mr. SMOOT. For hight work.

Mr. BROWN. That is, those not on annual salary.

Mr. SMOOT. It allows not only that, but one and a half times for Sunday work and double for holiday work.

Mr. BROWN. I am talking about the section wherein you have provided for an increase of 20 per cent for employees not salaried. Why are the pressmen denied the benefit of that provision?

Mr. SMOOT. They are not denied it.
Mr. BROWN. It applies to them?
Mr. SMOOT. It applies to them.
Mr. BROWN. Tell me again why you allow 20 per cent to some employees and increase the pressmen, as you have by this definite and fixed rate, only 2½ per cent. The existing rate is definite and fixed rate, only 21 per cent. T 50 cents an hour and you raise it to only 55.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the regular increase per hour, but that does not affect the night rate at all. The pressmen under this bill will get, instead of 50 cents an hour, 55 cents, and for night work 20 per cent in addition, which would be 11 cents, or 66 cents per hour.

Mr. BROWN. Does not the Senator know that under this provision, which grants 20 per cent increase to some employees not on annual salary, some of the subordinates will receive more money than the principals, who are on an annual salary?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no department in the Government that gives extra compensation to a man who is on annual salary.

Mr. BROWN. The Government has the power to increase the compensation whether it is an annual salary or a per diem.

Mr. SMOOT. If a man accepts an annual salary that is all he expects to get, but the pressmen work by the hour, and sometimes they work one day and sometimes the next day they are not working full time, and they are entitled to the 20 per cent. But a man who is hired by the year receives his year's compensation.

Mr. BROWN. Most of the pressmen, as I understand, work, as a matter of fact, day in and day out and month in and month out the entire year.

Mr. SMOOT. They do not work by the year. They work by the hour.

Mr. BROWN. They do not draw a per annum salary.
Mr. SMOOT. They work by the hour.
Mr. BROWN. It seems to me the justice of the matter depends upon whether the wage is reasonable or unreasonable, no matter whether it be by the hour or the year. I do not understand this blanket provision which cuts out from under the fellow working by the year any increase, but does give it to those working by the hour.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows a single man in the Government Printing Office who is paid a salary by the year who works at nighttime, unless he under-stands before he accepts the position that night work is what is expected of him?

Mr. BROWN. Every man who accepts employment accepts it on the condition of the salary paid, whether he works by the day or the year. But take the night foreman of the linotype. He is on an annual salary. He gets $2,250 a year, I think, and yet under this provision men who are subordinates to him, if they work at night will earn more than he receives as salary.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that is so.

Mr. BROWN. It is a matter of computation.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that that position is sought by I do not know how many people-a thousand men perhaps would like it.

Mr. BROWN. All positions are sought by hundreds of men.

Mr. SMOOT. I have never heard any complaint on the part of the man holding that position. I have never heard him ask for 20 per cent more because he works at night.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think we are legislating to answer the complaint of anybody, but I think when we have here a provision fixing salarles we ought to have some sort of a standard, some rule that shall apply to all employees alike, and the test ought to be the value of the service and not whether the contract is by the year or by the hour.

Take these pressmen. They get 50 cents an hour. For many years they got 50 cents an hour. Afterwards it was reduced to 40 cents. Now, for some time it has been 50 cents. You propose to increase the pressmen's compensation 21 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. We propose to increase it right out 10 per cent.

He is drawing now 50 cents an hour.

Mr. BROWN. Five cents—a nickel—an hour increase in wages. He gets the same wages that he got 20 years ago. He has nothing on which to raise a family.

Mr. SMOOT. At 55 cents an hour, I think, he will get more than pressmen in any other printing office.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has made that statement, and yet he bases it upon nothing except the returns of 15 cities in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. Allow me to call the attention of the Sena-

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.
Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator proceeds to that I should like to ask him if he knows whether or not, when these men received 50 cents an hour in the sixties, they had the privileges which they have now?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did they then have 30 days leave of absence?

Mr. SMOOT. They did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suppose the Senator is not sure that in those early days they got these large allowances for over-

Mr. SMOOT. They did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. It makes quite a difference.

While I am on my feet, if the Senator will permit me, I will say that I think the Senator from Nebraska ought to tell us what cities there are in the United States where pressmen get more than is allowed by this bill. The committee has taken 15 of the large cities. It is not likely they are paying more in some rural community than in New York or Cleveland or Philadel-We ought to have the information if there is such a city.

Mr. BROWN. I have no information about cities. I have not given any list of cities. But when the Senator cites 15 cities in the United States and undertakes on that statement to base the conclusion that it applies to every city in the United States, I think he ought to give us some additional information.

Mr. GALLINGER. It follows, it seems to me—and there is no room for controversy—that the compensation given all classes of workmen in the 15 larger cities of the United States must be the maximum. It is inconceivable to me that there can be any smaller place where more is paid. I know in my own little city, which is not a very large one, they get not much more than half what they get in the large cities.

Mr. BROWN. Then they are very much underpaid, if that is true.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so.

Mr. BROWN. But the statistics which the Senator from Utah is handing around the Senate this afternoon do not purport to be a report from every concern engaged in the printing business. Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator how many concerns in each city were investigated.

Mr. BROWN. My information comes from men in the press business. They may not know, but they tell me that over this country the prices are above 55 cents an hour on an average. They did not cite any cities to me, and I did not inquire of them, but the fact remains that the wages of everybody else has been increased much more than 10 per cent, and yet the press-men are left practically on the same basis they were 50 years ago. I do not think it is fair; I do not think it is right; and I do not think the facts as submitted by the Senator from Utah warrant the conclusion which he has incorporated in this section of the proposed law.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose it would be too long to go through every item here, and I do not believe it would enlighten the Senate very much, but the investigation was made in the 15 cities, not in one establishment, but a number of establishments, and it was the union rate of wage for those cities.

In New York City the union minimum scale was 50 cents; the average actual rate, including union scale, 51.2 cents.

In Chicago the union minimum scale was 50 cents; the average actual rate, including union scale, was 51.9 cents.

In Philadelphia the union minimum scale was 41.7 cents; the average actual rate, including union scale, was 41.7 cents.

We are paying the pressmen here 13.3 cents per hour more. and not only that, but we are giving them 30 days' leave of absence, and paying them 20 per cent more for night work, and one and a half times for Sunday, and twice for holidays.

In St. Louis the union minimum scale was 46.9 cents; the average actual rate, including union scale, was 47.2 cents.

Boston, 45.8 cents; actual rate, 46.7 cents.

Cleveland, 37.5 cents; average actual rate, 43.8 cents.

Baltimore, union minimum scale, 37.5 cents; average actual rate, 38.6 cents; and that is the rate 40 miles from here.

Mr. JONES. The Senator says 30 days' leave of absence.

Mr. JONES. The Schuld Says' leave with pay?

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty days' leave with pay.

Mr. BROWN. By the hour?

Mr. SMOOT. The same rate per hour that they get, and that is eight hours per day, or $4 a day, or $120 for the 30 days. They are allowed $120 every year as leave of absence. Mr. NELSON. Are they not allowed in addition a limited sick leave with pay?

Mr. SMOOT. That is included in the 30 days. They have no sick leave in the Printing Office.

Mr. BROWN. It is really 30 days' sick leave instead of 30 days' leave of absence.

Mr. SMOOT. No; they have no sick leave at all in the Government Printing Office.

In Baltimore, 40 miles from here, the union minimum scale 371 cents. We are providing 55 cents.

Pittsburgh, union minimum scale, 37½ cents. The average actual rate is 43.3 cents.

Milwaukee, 43.8 cents; average actual rate, 47.1 cents.

Cincinnati, union minimum scale, 42.7 cents; average actual rate, 42.7 cents.

I think that, taking those 15 cities into consideration, we may well say it is the average wage paid to pressmen all over the United States, and I want to say that when we provide 55 cents an hour here I believe they are as well paid as any in the United States. I want them to be as well paid and I want them to have these wages

Mr. President, I trust that the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will not be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah why the word "procure" in the present law is omitted from line 22, page 31, section 37, of the proposed bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will notice that instead of "procure" the bill says "supply." In other words, the Government Printing Office, as the Senator knows, has made some loose-leaf ledgers, but I want to say to the Senator that they have infringed nobody's patent, nor do they intend to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am glad to have the Senator's assurance on that point, although it would have been more potential had it come from a court of law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in the hearings, and I think he was present, the Public Printer told us that there had been no infringement upon anybody's patent.

I will state the object of the change and then the Senator can speak to it. As it is to-day a traveling man representing any loose-leaf ledger company can go out into Utah or Idaho or California to the supervisor of a forest reserve and solicit an order for a new loose-leaf ledger, we will say, and that order is sent to Washington to the Agricultural Department designating, perhaps, that particular kind of a ledger. The question arose as to whether the Public Printer under the law was compelled to furnish that particular loose-leaf ledger or whether under the law as it is to-day he could furnish a looseleaf ledger that would answer every purpose that in his judgment would be just as good. The Comptroller of the Treasury gave that decision, and this is what the representative of the Kalamazoo Loose-leaf Ledger Co. reported:

The Comptroller of the Treasury has already held that loose-leaf binding books were included among patented devices with which to file uniform official papers, so that the mere inclusion of the words "loose-leaf books" in the new bill really has no effect whatever except to put what has been construed to be the law as the law in specific

That is why we have used the word "supply," so that the Public Printer can supply either by purchase or make at the Government Printing Office a loose-leaf ledger whenever he is requested to do so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, of course I realize the fact that there is no interest whatever in this bill, and Senators are apparently not giving the matter much attention, being content to accept the judgment of the chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing. But Senators who do me the honor to listen will be impressed with the idea that the word 'procure" in the present law is a wise limitation. To strike it out would place in the hands of the Public Printer additional our would place in the hands of the Public Printer additional power to manufacture whatever is needed by a Government officer. If you strike out the word "procure" and leave in the word "supply," you invest the Public Printer with unlimited authority to establish such a plant in connection with the Government Printing Office as will enable him to meet every restriction of the Correspond without the all of restrictions. quirement of the Government without the aid of private enterprise or competition.

If it only means what the Senator from Utah says it means, he can afford to restore the word "procure" in the bill and let the law stand as it is to-day. Does the Senator object to doing that?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that would help it at all, because the Comptroller of the Treasury has ruled that they could supply them, and they have done so in the past.

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this business of making loose-leaf ledgers does not amount to a very large sum, as the total cost in the Government Printing Office, including the purchase of metal plates and the making of the books, was only $6,538.89; but on the amount that was made the Government saved $968.59.

There is no danger at all in this proposition, because the law specifically states that the Public Printer can not make anything at the Government Printing Office that will cost more than he can purchase it at outside.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to see the word "proremain in the law.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no need of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to have it remain, and thus insure the benefit of private competition in purchases of this character.

Mr. SMOOT. I took this matter up with the Treasury Department, and this is what they said:

partment, and this is what they said:

The loose-leaf binder and card index are rapidly taking the place of the old bound-book system for public records in the departmental service. It is important, therefore, in the interest of economy and uniformity, that these systems be made as uniform and perfect as possible. Under the present system the loose-leaf binders are obtained by this department from outside contractors through the Public Printer. The great variety of loose-leaf binder devices on the market and the extensive range of prices quoted on them make it practically impossible to maintain anything like uniformity in the public records and files. It is believed that, in the interest of economy, promptness of delivery, and uniformity, the Public Printer should adopt and furnish directly from his office an improved device or devices for use in all Government offices. This could be done, it is thought, without infringing on patent rights. It is recommended that such authority be granted the Public Printer by law. Printer by law.

Mr. President, this is not going to prevent the purchase of Ioose-leaf ledgers from concerns outside.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then leave the law as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. The last purchase that we made from the Kalamazoo Loose Leaf Ledger Co. was $3,548.92, and that one purchase was more than one-half of all the Government Printer So why put the Government into a position made last year. where there will be any question that they can buy or make a loose-leaf ledger if they so desire, or if a department of the Government to-day desires one for the State Department, one for the Interior Department, one for the Department of Commerce and Labor, of the same size and the same quality, why not let the Government furnish it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This is the field of individual in-itiative and private enterprise. Why should we continually encroach upon it and extend the power of the Government? That is not the function of the Government. It would be more creditable to Russia than to the United States.

If this does not mean anything why does the Senator insist so strongly upon its repeal?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Michigan would say that if the Public Printer can manufacture a certain line of loose-leaf ledgers that are just as good for the purposes for which they are made as any other concern can possibly make, and if the Public Printer can make them cheaper, the Government ought to buy them somewhere else.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Government can supply itself at the minimum of cost in this way and avoid an unnecessary investment in plant and buildings, in the event that no satisfactory bid is proposed. The alternative is presented.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator desires to put in the words "procure and supply"?

cure and supply"?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am quite content to leave the law as it is now, namely, after the word "to," in line 22, to add the word "procure."

Mr. SMOOT. "Procure or supply?"

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; after the word "to," in line 22, section 37, to add "procure."

Mr. SMOOT. Add the words "procure or."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. "Procure" is the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. "Procure and."

Mr. SMOOT. "Procure and."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is the present law.
Mr. SMOOT. Since a construction has been given it, of course, if they can supply them, why not leave it then with the word

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The statute has been construed by the Attorney General and it has been construed by the comptroller. Why not leave the law as it is now?

Mr. SMOOT. I think the law ought to be changed so that there will be no question about it. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment and say "authorized to procure or supply." Then there all here ply." Then there will be no question about it. If a manufacturer's bid is lower than it can be manufactured for at the Government Printing Office, then the Public Printer has to buy from him under the law, because he can not pay for an article more than it will cost to produce it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The difference between the Senator and myself is not difficult to understand.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will accept the words "to procure or supply" I will agree to that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will let the law stand as it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it will be worse than it is to-day, for it would be an absolute monopoly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, no; the Public Printer can supply himself when all other avenues fail to bring desirable results.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to say to every manufacturer in this country that the Government Printing Office can buy the loose-leaf ledger if he can furnish it for less money than the Public Printer can make it. I do not think the Senator ought to ask any more than that. I am not willing that the Government shall be tied up so it must buy a certain kind of loose-leaf ledger.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; and I do not want to tie the hands of the Government, and I do not want it to go into this business itself if possible to avoid it.

Mr. SMOOT. But the law protects him in that. The law specifically says that he can not do it unless he can furnish it for less than the price at which it is quoted by the private manufacturers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the theory of the Senator from Utah is to be carried out and all the departments of the Government are to supply their own necessities we would have to enlarge our investments tremendously.

Mr. SMOOT. Last Friday we were told that the reason why we do not want to print a million extra Records is because the Public Printer did not want to take any more responsibility; that he has a splendid job, and does not want any more work. Now, we are told that the Public Printer is seeking more power and more work.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He may not be seeking it, but he is not running away from it, and the Senator from Utah is trying to put new and unnecessary responsibilities upon him.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am trying to protect the Government. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will say to the Senator, I think he is very conscientious in his motive, but he likes power and exercises his full proportion and does it very well, I admit.

Mr. SMOOT. If we can not meet it down at the Government Printing Office, then we can not purchase any kind of books of any sort.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. For years some of the purchasing officers of the Government seemingly had their favorites, and am opposed to it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just what I am trying by this bill to knock out

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But you are hesitating on a very small word. I do not see why you do not accept it.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that the Public Printer, as well as all Senators here, know that the loose-leaf-ledger work that is being put in at the Government Printing Office is virtually work that the Government Printing Office has done for years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Utah is assum-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Utah is assuming that I am especially interested in loose-leaf ledger because it is a Michigan enterprise. I want to say to him once for all that I am interested only in keeping the Government from invading any unnecessary field of private enterprise.

Mr. SMOOT. The whole theory of the Government Printing Office is to take care of the printing that is required by Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I fear the Senator will start a clothing factory by and by to clothe public officials. Mr. SMOOT. At cost?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; at cost, because that will be an inducement. I do not think the Government justified in taking this course. It is a mistake. If you enjoy fair competition, industries can be managed better by private enterprise. I ask the Senator to accept the present law, which is fully understood by all the departments of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will offer an amendment after the word "to," to make it read "procure or supply," I will gladly accept it; but, as the Senate knows the situation, if that is not agreeable to the Senator, let him offer the amendment and let the Senate decide. I think the Senate understands the situation

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think so.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Government in a position where there will be no kind of manufactured article in this country that the Government Printing Office can not get along without, and when the Government Printing Office can make something just as good, that the one who makes the article can hold up the Government, I do not care what it is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When I raised my objection to a change of law I was not absolutely convinced that I was giving the exact reason that was in the mind of the Senator from Utah in framing that section, but I have become thoroughly convinced now that it is the purpose of the Senator from Utah to estab-lish under the head of the Public Printer and under his own supervision a plant sufficient to manufacture whatever is needed by the Public Printer-

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. For all departments of the Government, upon their requisitions.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; not only that, but I want to say that the practice of the Public Printer up to to-day does not justify any such construction. The Public Printer to-day would mo more think of buying an article—

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. You mean of making it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; of buying an article that could be purchased for less than he could make a similar article for than he would think of increasing his own wages.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In figuring the cost of making that article in a private enterprise you would figure the interest on your investment and depreciation, which is never considered in the account of the Public Printer.

Mr. SMOOT. We would figure just what the article was quoted at the Government Printing Office. We do not have to figure about what it costs the private manufacturer, because we know just what the Government has to pay him for it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The disposition of the Senator from Utah to have his own way about this matter is painfully apparent to us all. But I want to suggest to the Senator that he could with perfect propriety let the law stand as it is in this section and render a real service to the Government. The Senator from Utah shall not put this new burden upon the Government if I can prevent it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want it to go any other way than the Senate wants it to go. If the Senator will offer his amendment we will vote on it and let the Senate decide.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I prefer the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not prefer to accept it, for the reason that there has been a question raised-Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Th The Senator knows we have no quorum. I do not want to be forced into making the point. Mr. SMOOT. We can get a quorum here very readily.

been construed? The Senator wants the word "or" and I want the word "and."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no question that if we use the word "or" the Public Printer can procure and purchase or he can supply.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But if you use the word "and" you would accomplish the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a question about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; a little question. Mr. SMOOT. The very fact that it was brought up before the Comptroller of the Treasury shows that there was a question about it. Why have a question when in revising the law we can make it so plain that anyone may understand what it

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And that is the reason I am urging the Senator to leave the law unchanged.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to offer the amendment, then, as he wants it, and let the Senate vote upon it. Whatever the Senate wants is what I want.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Utah knows that we have no quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. There are quite a number of Senators in the Chamber now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Nobody is interested. A group of Senators over there are probably discussing Democratic politics, and they are not interested in this bill. [Laughter.] I am not going to submit such an important question at such an inopportune time. Will not the Senator accept my suggestion and leave the law as it stands?

Mr. SMOOT. I can hardly refuse the Senator when he pleads in this way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If it troubles the Senator when the matter finally gets into the Senate, I will submit it again.
Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, why should not the law be amended if it can be improved?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. Mr. BRISTOW. It seems to me from this discussion that the Senator from Utah has stated several reasons for amending this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is very evident, Mr. President, that the Senator from Kansas has not heard the discussion. The Senator from Utah has had his way about every line of the bill, because nobody would sit in the Chamber long enough to combat him, and the moment a point is raised he brings figures so indefinite and voluminous as to overwhelm his antagonist and submerge the point.

I want to say to the Senate-and now that I have the attention of a group of very intelligent statesmen on the other side of the aisle [laughter], I want to say to them—that if they permit this change to be made in the law they will place an additional responsibility upon the Public Printer, which may call for the construction of additional buildings and the investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars in machinery for the purpose of supplying by his own hand what he may be able to secure cheaper by competition from established industries throughout the country who are engaged in these enterprises.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah if it is not also true that the Public Mr. BRISTOW. Printer might not be able to save the Government from extortionate prices by himself supplying some necessities which otherwise he would be compelled to go out and buy, probably at exorbitant prices as the result of combinations?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to ease the anxiety of my friend from Kansas. If that is to be the principle of government that is to be adopted, if that is to be the policy of this Government, there is no end to its ramifications. If you can not rely upon fair competition and honest judgment, the Government will be obliged to go into every business that concerns its welfare. I do not exactly like the idea of the Government taking on that which private enterprise is better fitted to

The Senator from Kansas has been connected with the Post Office Department of the Government; he was a very efficient officer, and in a position of great responsibility. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether he believes that he could operate the Post Office Department at less expense than it is being operated by the Government and give the same service that is now given to the American people?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, Mr. President, I believe I could; but that is quite a difficult question to answer.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am surprised. I thought I was taking the Senator on most familiar ground.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think there could be economies in some respects, if the Post Office Department were operated as a private business would be operated, and in others the Government operating the postal service has a very great advantage; but that is not the issue here. The Government is maintaining a printing office because it is necessary to do so; and there is a provision in this bill that the Public Printer shall purchase or procure or supply-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; one moment. The Senator from Kansas is usually accurate, but that is just the word that is left out.

Mr. BRISTOW. But the Senator from Utah is perfectly willing to incorporate that in it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The present law gives the Public Printer the right to procure and supply, and the Senator from Utah has struck out the word "procure" and left in the word "supply." I should like to have the law stand as it is, but he is willing to permit the word "procure" to be restored in his bill, provided the word "to" is changed to "and."

Mr. SMOOT. No; "and" to "or."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. "And" to "or."

Mr. BRISTOW. So as to read "procure or supply." Is not that fair?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On the whole, I do not know but that it might be held so; and if I am to incur insurgent opposition on my left hand and reactionary opposition on my right, I am going to yield right now. [Laughter.] Will the Senator from Utah accept the amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. In perfecting the bill, in view of all that has been said in the investigations that have been made regarding it, and of the misunderstandings that have existed in the past, I do not believe that it would be proper to accept the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But the Senator said he would do so.

Mr. SMOOT. I will accept the amendment so as to use the words "procure or"—yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will agree to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the bill be amended, on page 31, line 22, by inserting after the word "to" the words "procure or." cure or.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 31, line 22, after the word "to," it is proposed to insert the words "procure or."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator from Utah to be under the impression that the amendment fully meets my contention.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am taking it because it is the best I can do in such a combat.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, emboldened by the very distinguished success of my friend the Senator from Michigan in securing this most important amendment, I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question with respect to another part of the same section, which I regard as much more vital, unless there is some explanation for it that does not occur to me. On page 32, in reciting those things which the Public Printer may procure or supply, the section provides:

And other similar forms of printing and binding which may include patented articles when the needs of the service require the same.

Is there a general statute which requires the Government to pay royalty or compensation for the use of a patent when it appropriates it for Government purposes?

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed that there is not.

Mr. CUMMINS. How does the Senator from Utah defend the proposition that when the Government grants a monopoly of a certain invention to a patentee without making any reservation at all, it shall then, upon the order of the head of an executive department or the Public Printer, appropriate that invention to its own use?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not defend it, nor do I think that the result would be as suggested by the Senator. It is true that every loose-leaf ledger-and that is the only

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not talking about loose-leaf ledgers;

I am talking about all kinds of inventions.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will permit me, the Government Printing Office never uses a loose-leaf ledger or any other patented article that is required to be purchased by the Government Printing Office, without procuring the patented article from the patentee and paying the patentee for the article. For instance, this loose-leaf ledger here [indicating] was made at the Government Printing Office, but the Public Printer purchases the patented articles, in the book, from the patentee. and the arrangement is perfectly satisfactory to the patentee as to price and as to the Government Printing Office using

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, unquestionably, the Senator from Utah will be willing to accept an amendment which shall provide that the invention is not to be used without the consent of the patentee

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to accept such an amendment, if necessary; but under this provision it is "procured or supplied," and even in the supplying of it the Public Printer in the past has always purchased from the patentee, and, as I have already said, has paid the patentee for the article used.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know anything about the history of the Government Printing Office in that respect, but I do know of several instances in which other departments of the Government have deliberately appropriated inventions as to which the Government had theretofore granted a monopoly.

Mr. SMOOT. Particularly the War Department.
Mr. CUMMINS. And there has been no remedy whatsoever.
I have regarded that course on the part of the Government as dishonest in the highest degree, and I do not want a similar practice to be authorized for the Government Printing Office. If the Government desires—and I have often thought it might be wise if the Government would change its law accordinglyto reserve for its own use, without the consent of the patentee, the right to employ the invention in its own governmental affairs, that would be quite a proper thing to do; but for the Government to give a piece of property to one and then deliberately steal it has always seemed to me to be reprehensible beyond the possibility of exaggeration. I would like the Public Printer to be protected against that temptation, and I propose, therefore, as an amendment to insert the words "with the consent of the patentee."

Mr. SMOOT. I am in full sympathy with the statement made by the Senator from Iowa, and if the Senator will offer his amendment at this time, covering that particular point, I certainly have no objection to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I propose an amendment, after the word "articles," line 4, page 32, to insert "with the consent of the patentce.

Mr. SMOOT. So that it will read:

And other similar forms of printing and binding, which may include patented articles, with the consent of the patentee, when the needs of the service, etc.

I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Consent of the owner of the patent should also be included, because the patent might have passed out of the hands of the patentee.

Mr. SMOOT. "The owner or the patentee," then.

Mr. CUMMINS. "The owner or the patentee."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 32, line 4, after the word "articles," it is proposed to insert the words "with the consent of the owner or patentee."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 36, line 10, I move an amendment to change the words "section 77 of this act" to "section 78 of this act," to conform to the changes that have been made in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 36, line 10, it is proposed to strike out "seven" and insert "eight," so as to read "section 78 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 42, line 19, I move to amend by striking out "seventy-nine" and inserting "eighty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 42, line 19, it is proposed to strike out "seventy-nine" and insert "eighty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the subdivisions in section 68 be re-numbered and that all sections following 69 be renumbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that will be

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECULATION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3175, the immigration bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

I now ask that the bill just taken up be tem-Mr. LODGE. porarily laid aside for the purpose of enabling the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] to call up a matter in which he is interested.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 254.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ from time to time stenographers to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for its use, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

HOMESTEADERS ON COEUR D'ALENE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, although I do not know that the request is necessary. The VICH PRESIDENT. It has already been temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18661) to provide for an extension of time of payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, as provided for under an act of Congress approved June 21, 1906.
There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BORAH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 10, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, April 9, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our heavenly Father, ever near to us and always ready to help those who put their trust in Thee, make us more susceptible to heavenly influences and incline our hearts to do Thy will, that with clear vision and firm, unfaltering footsteps we may go forward with undaunted courage as the duties of the hour unfold themselves, leaving the results to Thee, who doeth all things well. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the speech of Hon. William C. Redfield, delivered at Cincinnati on February 10, 1912, on "Some phases of the business outlook."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the Congressional Record a speech recently made at Cincinnati by Mr. Redfield, of New York, on "Some phases of the business outlook." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Following is the address referred to:

SOME PHASES OF THE BUSINESS OUTLOOK.

Address of the Hon. William C. Redfield before the Business Men's Club of Cincinnati, Ohio, February 10, 1912.

"In speaking to a fellow Member of the House of Representatives a few days ago of what I reckon to be the great commercial value of the Philippines, he, being one of those minded to get rid of those islands as quick as possible, was kind enough to say to me that he preferred 'principle rather than pelf.' Before this body of business men I wish emphatically to protest against the idea which prevails too much to-day—that the business world is largely a world of plunder. Not that any responsible group of men quite venture to affirm this to be so, but that their actions and their words almost or quite assume it as a basis. Certainly a friendly ear is not always turned to the requests of the business community, and the sensitiveness of credit seems often to be unknown. It is true that the selfishness of some has reflected to a degree upon us all, but for that reason it is more necessary to affirm, as I now do, that the business men of America are, with rare exceptions, upright and highminded men, respecting the rights of others, conscious of their duties to their fellows, seeking prosperity through service rather than through selfishness, and with personal consciences never so active and with public ideals never so high as to-day. Commerce is the ally of uplift and develops, not destroys. And this great club of 1,600 members is a witness that you as business men meet with open minds; each willing to learn from the other; each glad to give from his knowledge to the other. Therefore it is a special pleasure to talk with you over some of the common problems of our daily work.

"And this daily task of ours is a far more complex thing than it once was. Our business life touches now questions of public policy, questions of human interest, matters of social uplift. Others claim the right to supervise and guide our business affairs as never before, and a righteous and watchful public opinion requires us in some degree to be our brothers' keepers whether we will or will not. Commercial life is difficult enough without what an editor has recently called "the ebullitions of parochial statesmen" to add to our many cares. Never was sanity and sobriety of public thought more needed than to-day.

"Let us select from the many problems that press on our thought one that is new and growing, and consider it briefly, both as it is in itself and in relation to some of our other Many of us as children were taught that our isolation on this continent, separated by broad oceans from the older worlds, was a great benefit, and we grew up, perhaps, with the idea that we were sufficient unto ourselves. But as we have become older new facts have forced these provincial views to the rear and now we face another outlook. For years we have known that the farmers and the millers of the Central and Western States have depended largely on foreign markets for their very living. It would have gone hard with Minnesota and Dakota and other States in the past if England had not needed But you and I had no sooner become accustomed to the idea that we were a great food-exporting nation than the picture Wheat and flour no longer reign in our export trade, and our manufactures have taken their place. Had one come here to Cincinnati 20 years ago to say then that in 1912 we should be selling a thousand million dollars per annum of manufactured goods abroad I fear that even this progressive city would have heard with doubting ears; and yet this change has come about, and not only are we exporting of our manufactures to this extent, but the proportion grows. It is now over 45 per cent of our total exports, while foods of all kinds have sunk to 18 per cent. This great change, whereby the output of our shops has taken the place of the products of our farms, has gone on so quietly that now we realize it almost with a shock. It runs counter to very much that we have accepted as solid beliefs hitherto. I seem to recall, I am sure you have heard, that there were men who once said we needed a high tariff wall to keep us from the invasion of the products of the pauper labor of Europe, but now all of a sudden, as it seems, we from the hitherside have o'erleapt the wall and found pleasant and profitable markets beyond it.

"In these markets, however, we are not alone. There are others beyond that wall, and since we have gone out there and found it good let us see who these other fellows are and whether they or we, or both, are likely to find it desirable to stay there. While we have been bringing our total output of manufactures to where they are worth twenty thousand millions yearly, a like yet different progress has taken place elsewhere. Germany in her thorough, studious way has gone scientifically to work to develop herself. Her population expands with great leaps; has grown one-half in what seems a few years. Her soil is by no means virgin territory. Her natural resources, compared with our own, are not large, but he who grasps what Germany has done with the resources she has can no longer be an enemy of conservation here at home. To intensive study of forest, farm, and factory at home she has added industrial expansion abroad; has tied the continents to her with steamship lines, and placed her banks at strategic points all round the globe, so that the German merchant finds the German ship and the German banker ready to aid him in buying and selling German manufactures in Valparaiso or Yokohama, or almost wherever he may be, and German exports of her manufactures have grown until they form two-thirds of her total exports and increase. Her export sales of her manufactures are greater than ours. They are backed by the most perfect public and private organizations on earth, by schools in which men are trained from their boyhood to the patriotic and lucrative purpose of expanding German trade. In the application of training and science and organization to business and industrial development Germany has no peer. A few days since a German, interested in their steel industry, said to a friend going there: 'If you think our ability to produce steel cheaply in Germany depends upon the wages we pay, you will find when you get there that you are wrong. It is on the perfection of our organization that our industries are based."

Outside the wall we have built around ourselves is another than Germany—namely, England. If with our great resources in our continental area we rejoice over an export trade of manufactures of a thousand millions, being 5 per cent of our total product of manufactures, may not the Englishman be justly proud that in 1909 he sent abroad from his contracted and 'tight little island' fifteen hundred millions in value of manufactures, or over 78 per cent of his total exports? Indeed, only so recently as 1907 his foreign sales of manufactures were over seventeen hundred millions, being 80 per cent of his foreign trade, and the best estimate available is that the United Kingdom exports its manufactures in the proportion of one to five, being a percentage of manufactured exports of more than three times our own. This solid trade rests upon a substantial base of the greatest mass of free capital in the world and upon a banking system as free and flexible as the air and as universal, and upon control of shipping that places the products of English mills wherever the English seller wills them to go, by lines controlled in his own interests. Thus, briefly, I have sketched the trinity of great competitors beyond our tariff wall. There are others, but Great Britain, Germany, and we are 'the big We must stay there or shut down our shops. We have gone out into the world because we must. The product of our mills and our men and our minds has grown so large that it has burst through territorial and traditional lines. Even while we have sought protection from others, those very others have become our customers.

"For many years the great expanse of our own land and the demands of its increasing people gave our shops sufficient to do. As time went on our shops waxed large and their output grew larger, till one day we found, some of us, that we were making that which we could not sell at home. Looking over the edge of the wall we found people there who liked what we had to sell and were willing to pay for it. We sold it to them; we found the habit pleasant, and the habit has grown. But observe that the foreign market has been the normal outgrowth of a domestic market; that one is not antagonistic or abnormal to the other, but the natural and fit supplement to it. Just so England's great internal trade is the basis on which her foreign trade rests, and the export trade of Germany is the outcome of her great domestic commerce. They, indeed, approach the export market on a basis more like necessity than we, for our domestic demand is enormously greater than theirs, and yet there are shops in America that would not run full time to-day were they to lose their export trade. Our foreign trade is also a safety valve that relieves the pressure of overproduction at home.

"So, almost without knowing it, we have become one of the three greatest factors in the world's commerce in manufactures, and the door of a golden opportunity has swung wide open. If, like the Senator of a few years past, one were to ask, 'What have we to do with abroad?' the answer would be, 'We have everything to do with abroad.' Let us therefore ask ourselves frankly. What shall we do with this opportunity? That depends on what it means to us. Are times ever slack in Cincinnati?

Are there days when the shop superintendents more than catch up with the sales managers, when the wail of the salesman is heard in the land and the leaves of the order book are unfilled? Do there come weeks of part time and of men laid off, with sad homes to which to go, since there is no work to sustain them? Have there been anxious hours when costs were great because output could not be made sufficient in the market that was available to distribute the burden charge widely enough to make things pay? Perhaps you have known what it means to have a plant made for production lie idle, eating its head off. haps there is some product you could cheaply make but which your particular market did not want. Perhaps there was some by-product that could be made if you knew where it could be sold. For these and similar ills the door of opportunity that lies open affords a remedy. Out there beyond the wall are many men of many minds, some of whom will like what you make, or will take what you would make if you could sell it, or who can use enough of your present product to add to the output of to-day that which shall make the whole cost less per unit. Suppose we all go out into the larger world and try as others have done. You of Cincinnati are not less clever than those of Detroit. A thousand automobiles monthly go thence abroad, and Detroit prospers. I have seen the products of Dayton in many lands. Indeed, I found products of Cincinnati on

"But when we get beyond the 3-mile limit you and I will not find it all plain sailing. There are some troubled waters on that business sea, and our craft will need steering just as it does at home. Toy boats do not navigate those waters. The German and the Englishman are not easily beaten on their own ground, and they have hitherto had to help them certain of our own domestic ghosts. It is strange that so practical a people as we should be ghost worshippers, but we have been, and some of us still are. One ghost, called the 'Rate of wages,' has long stalked about on top of the tariff wall and scared us with his ferocious visage. He has a fellow ghost called the 'Cost of production.' While we, fearful of these specters, have many of us feared to cross the wall, the Englishman and the German have fattened and grown rich, somewhat at our expense. If you and I will follow those bolder spirits among us who have faced these ghosts and dealt at first hand with them, we shall find, as others have, that they turn out not to be so bad; indeed, the ghost called the 'Rate of wages,' when you treat him well and give him a square deal, is a kindly spirit, and just as you come to understand him the other ghost, called the 'Cost of production,' retreats and becomes harmless. Indeed, it is not for retreats and becomes harmless. Indeed, it is not far wrong to say that foreign trade is based on a state of mind. The trouble has been that we have worried a lot about these ghosts and have not been troubled as much as we ought to have been about certain real vigorous devils. A good cartoonist could make a rather clever picture of some American manufacturers. He could picture them sitting behind their tariff wall-a sort of industrial shut-in society-looking up at the ghosts at the top of the wall, wanting to get over the wall but afraid of the ghosts, while behind them in their own shops rage unnoticed and un-hindered rampant devils of waste, neglect, and inefficiency. So our getting over the wall and finding it possible to stay on the other side profitably, along with our friends, the English and the Germans, comes back after all to our own shops and to the problems in them with which we have to deal.

"The trouble with us is that we have always seen the ghosts on the wall, but the devils have been invisible. Let us go hunt for them now, and to find them quickly let us look right within ourselves. If there is a devil of blindness about our shops, the chances are that you and I have been blinded by him. If there is a devil of neglect about our plant, the chances are that it is you and I who have been neglectful. If the demon called 'Inefficiency' hovers about our works, the probability is that you and I are in his grip. If the evil spirit of waste is about, the chances are that he is there with our unconscious consent. So the first thing to do, my fellow business men, to get into the pleasant lands beyond the wall is to become our own severest critics and to follow out the old brief proverb, 'Man, know thyself.' Do you want export trade? Do you want to know how to get it and keep it against the German and Englishman? Then begin in your own shop here in Cincinnati, and begin first of all with yourself. This is, perhaps, not pleasant doctrine, but it is a fruitful one. Shortly ago a friend was called by a large concern to reorganize it on a scientific basis. When he presented his plan the manager was mad. He said to my friend, 'I hired you to prepare a plan showing me how to work the men in the shop, and you begin with a plan which tells me how to work myself,' and he would have none of it. There have been a number of cases where economy was prohibited because it commenced with the management. We do not say, of course, that we know it all, but we merely think competent teachers are scarce. I recall one case where the owner was very proud of a machine shop, which in certain respects was working at oneeightieth of its full capacity. It is not long since the owner of a large plant told me that while no doubt inspection would develop in his shops certain faults here and there, he was sure nothing could be done which would seriously improve his way of working. The devils had him hard and fast. On the con-trary, I recall a man who at the end of 20 years was vividly conscious of the things he did not know about his own business. He said that he could never afford to be satisfied with his way, because when he was satisfied he knew he would need the Lord to help him, because he would then have ceased to help himself.

"There is a great plant in the East which sends out its fore-men, at the company's expense, many times a year, both into America and into Europe, just to see what they can learn. truth is, a modern shop must be more or less of a schoolhouse, and in it the manager must be one of the pupils. One of the examiners for the Tariff Board, in its recent investigations of Schedule K, told me that he visited 16 shops in an industry collateral to the woolen and worsted trade. I asked him if in any of the shops he visited the owners and managers knew what their goods cost them. He said they thought they did, but that they did not, and it had been his duty in several cases to show them why and to what extent they were mistaken. Naturally, to the next question, Did any of these shops have an accurate system of cost keeping? he replied in the negative. The devils of which I have spoken were having it all their own way in this trade. Seriously, gentlemen, then, conceiving that export trade is desirable, necessary, and possible, the first way to get it is to begin in your own shops at home. From a somewhat long experience at home and abroad I have never yet found a shop where, if the devils I have mentioned were driven out and in their place the mighty spirit of "self-help" was installed, the ghosts gave any more trouble. So let us all go into our own shops and forget our traditions and throw our fetishes away. Turn the clear light of truth and honest inquiry on our-Let us recall that nothing is good because we do it, and no method is desirable because we have been in the habit of doing things that way. Let us, so to speak, stand outside ourselves and look at ourselves and test our ways, whether they be good or not. If we will do this with an open mind and sincere vision, the result will surprise the best of us. Washington, nor in the customs, but within ourselves, is the best protection found.

'We shall find that this self-study will bring some things into new relations. It should teach us, for example, that in dealing with the four elements in cost-material, burden, selling expense, and labor-there is most ample opportunity for brains in the study of the first three. We shall be likely to find that the study of the burden charge by itself can be made continuously profitable. More than one goodly business ship has gone to wreck on this rock. The ratio of selling expense to output and its adaptation to possible prices will afford food for sober and patient thought. Both these subjects remind me of what Edward Atkinson used to say about the need for fire pails in factories. His ruling was, 'Put in all the fire pails for which you have room, then put in some more.' Deal this way with your burden and selling charges. Back up your purchasing agent now and then with some original reflections of your own on the subject of material and supplies. All this is a man's job, and when with effort and pain you have gotten these three down to a safe and sane point from which, through years to come, you can still further steadily reduce them, then see what the spirit of 'self-help' says to you about the last and the minor element in cost, namely-labor. Now of all the four parts of costs, labor is the only one that is alive. Material is Our burden charge is clearly a dead load. Our selling expense we aim to kill, and let us hope we shall reduce it to a corpse of proper size. But the one living element in production, the one part of cost having real vitality, is labor, and that is very much alive. Because it is alive it may be responsive, and by the same token it may be obstructive. It is the greatest force in industry; the only living force, too often a wasted force, too rarely a force used as we use an enginereciprocally. Let us think of this a bit with candid and open

'You and I are very careful about buying a machine. here who make the machines for which Cincinnati is famous are very careful that the machines you sell are adapted for their special use. You advertise them as such and your customer buys them solely because they are adapted to the service he requires from them. When they get them under your instructions they are treated with great care. They are not overstrained, for you and your customer know something about the fatigue of metals. They are not overheated. What would you do with the foreman that often allowed bearings to get overheated? They are kept free from dust; you put in exhaust systems to take the dust out from where it will do harm to a machine. They are most carefully lubricated, and you do not let moisture come where it will do them harm. In brief, that machine, being a valuable investment, is treated according to the laws of its nature, and you carefully learn those laws and obey them because it pays. So with your material. That is especially adapted to the use to which it is to be put and you are careful not to waste it or to use for one purpose that material which is better adapted to another. This also, therefore, is utilized in your shop according to the laws of its nature. Your buildings, your transmission appliances, your power plant, your light, your arrangement, and all the complex apparatus that makes the unit you call your plant, are carefully arranged, each element fitted to its particular service so as to be most efficient, so as to require the least of maintenance cost and the smallest repair outlay. How now about your men? Is the same careful process of selection applied to them? You do not use a lathe for screw-machine work. Are your men adapted or trained to their special task with the same precision? Your industrial history shows that you do not hesitate to pay largely for an efficient machine. Are you as willing to pay largely for an efficient man? Is the same strict care given to the conditions that human nature requires for its best work that is given to the conditions which mechanical nature requires for its best work? Have you carefully avoided the obstructive element in this living part of production, and are you and I as carefully cultivating the responsive element in it? When the spirit of 'self-help' controls us all and we have driven the devils out of our shops, we shall come to understand, you and I, that in the responsive power of our working force lies the mightiest element in production. One that may make the difference be-tween loss and profit, between peace and war. I have known a shop in which there never was put upon the stationery anything to the effect that contingent delays due to strikes were not matters for which the house was liable, but where it was quite the custom to send the bills out for less than the price at which the goods were sold because the high efficiency of a responsive working force had made them cost less than was expected.

"But some one will say labor makes mistakes, makes unreasonable demands. Doubtless. But are you and I like the sheriff of Nottingham who-

Never yet had made a mistake Would like to for variety's sake?

"And when it comes to being unreasonable, why, let him that is without sin among us cast the first stone. As I look into my own mind and heart I can not begin heaving rocks on this basis

Can you?
"We need export trade for a proper and steady balance to our home business; and to keep our costs down by holding our product up. Our two great foreign competitors have many advantages of position, wealth, experience, and knowledge. We have chiefly to rely on the alertness and initiative of ourselves and our workmen. It is of the very essence of our safety that we pull together, a united force in every shop, hands and brains in unison to the common and growing profit, to the larger wage, to the lower cost and the lessened price. Gentlemen, your domestic business needs to feel the throbbing pulse of the larger world of foreign commerce. 'One must be done, the other not left undone.' Stability in home markets depends largely on ability in foreign ones. But the larger life is not entered, the door of opportunity is not passed by standing pat any more than it is by joining a club or an export association, good as these are. Fighters in the world's arena must lay aside every weight and the habits of thought and traditions that so easily beset them, and with keen self-training address themselves to the contest. The world is said to grow through its discontent and your trade will grow on your own self-discontent with every present standard and method. The place for narrow men is in ruts; for dead men in graves. The big world calls for big men, large in outlook, broad in view, keen enough to see that economy lies not so much in saving as in wise expenditure.

"Industrial education has here in your noble city made great strides that have brought you deserved honor, but there are two kinds of industrial education—that of the hand and brain within the shop; that of the heart and brain within the office. I plead for both, for these two are one. One need not speak for any method of management. These are many, of varied and different merit. But for one great, broad, generous, and efficient spirit of management I may fairly plead. One that shall be intolerant of waste of all kinds and to which neglect shall be a sin. One that shall set high standards of efficiency but equally high ones of sympathy. One that shall be large enough to see that with proper equipment and wise direction the well-paid man is the cheapest producer. One that shall slay the spirit of gaining through gouge and shall bring to life the spirit of success through service.

"Does this seem practical to your minds? If not, let us reduce it to details. Never give up self-study. There will always be something to learn about your ways. 'The goblins they will get you if you don't watch out.'

"Don't let your initiative get sterilized by a tariff or any-This may be as a friend says it is-grossly inferential,' but it is true nevertheless.

"It is not wise to sterilize the initiative of your working force by looking so hard at a quarter yourself that you can't see the five-dollar bill beyond.

"A justly discontented force can cost you more directly and indirectly than the most expert and costly supervision can ever find out.

"The cheapest and most efficient discipline is that which a well-paid, hopeful, and zealous working force naturally create. "The cutting of piecework rates and wages is the hall-mark of inefficient management.

"Obsolete machinery is the foe of profits, the brother of high cost, and the friend of bad methods.

"A Bourbon superintendent who can't learn is as bad and no worse than a Bourbon employer who won't learn.

worse than a Bourbon employer who won't learn.

"Export trade begins at home, in your own shop, and first with the head of it. To get it bring your wages and output up—your costs and prices down; know what is doing in your own plant and you can smile at a competing world.

"When you have good stuff to sell, well and cheaply made, properly designed, and of regular quality, well packed, you will have no trouble to sell it abroad. What one country or market won't take another will. It's a large world. Export trade is not an 'easy snap,' but it is a necessary filler. Our shops are built to run, to produce and the money of Argenting will buy built to run, to produce, and the money of Argentina will buy bread and cheese in Cincinnati.

"When things are dull at home, why cut off our earnings at the root? A large market is better than a little one. balanced demand of all the earth is steadier than the needs of any one country, however large. There is room in many lands to do what is not now done at all, or to do better what is now

"Finally, gentlemen, I have not sought to deal with details but with essentials, and the most essential thing in our shop is, or ought to be, ourselves. Therefore I have tried plainly to speak to you of our own needs for self-help—the same thing in our industrial life that we teach our children in our private lives. Let us therefore lay down certain laws for ourselves:

"A thing is not right because we do it. "A method is not good because we use it.

"Equipment is not the best because we own it.

"The wisest of us has much to learn,

"None of us can afford to be deceived about our own affairs. "It is better by self-criticism to find and correct our own faults than to have our customers do it for us

"It is a sound law of the business world—"To thine own self be true and it shall follow as the night the day: Thou canst not then be false to any man.'

"And I end as I began. To get by the law of gouge and grasp is not true commerce. Against that law our enlightened business sense protests, and with equal force it protests against the wicked assumption that our business men are in any large part under the control of the law of gouge and grasp.

"Commerce is service, the friend of the worker, the servant of the consumer. I venture a protest against the spirit of attack that far too much prevails. Criticism should be a sane and sober process. This is not found in that tyrannous type of mind that involves those who disagree with it in torrents of common abuse and denunciation. All are not wicked at whom mud is thrown, and righteousness is not advanced by evil means. We believe in progress; it is a law of business to do so. But we believe also in moderation and base our hopes for the future on moderate progressiveness and on progressive moderation, in public as well as in business affairs.'

INDIAN APPROPRIATION RILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill ff. R. 20728, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. Barnhart in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 20728, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extension and maintenance of the irrigation system on lands allotted to Yakima Indians in Washington, $15,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1907.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 34, at the end of line 7, amend by adding the following:

"For support and civilization of the Kalispel Indians in the county of Pend Orelile, State of Washington, to erect a school building, employees' quarters, and other necessary buildings and providing the same with equipment, in the purchase of stock, implements, seeds, and other articles necessary to promote the general welfare of said Indians, including the employment of teachers and instructors, under the jurisdiction of the Spokane Indian School, Spokane, Wash., with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, $10,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the amendment. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is recognized.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I am well aware that this item is subject to a point of order, but I have hopes that after the Committee of the Whole House hears of the condition of these Indians and their status at the present time it will be willing to forego the point of order and allow this amendment to pass would like to read to the committee a letter which I received some little time ago, bringing to my attention the condition of these Indians. This letter is from the Rev. Father L. Taelman, now president of Gonzaga College, Spokane, Wash., but for many years a missionary among the Indians of northeastern Washington, and held in fondest reverence by all the tribes of that section:

GONZAGA COLLEGE, Spokane, Wash., February 16, 1912.

Hon. William L. La Follette, Spokane, Wash., February 16, 1912.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. La Follette: I greatly desire to interest you in behalf of a little band of Kalispel Indians, 98 in all, who live along the Pend (Orelle River, across from Cusick, Wash. As I visit these Indians every second month, I know them well and am thoroughly familiar with their conditions and circumstances. As far as I know, no Indians have been more neglected by our Government, and yet none are more deserving of assistance. In my 10 years' experience amongst different fribes, I have never come across an equal number of Indians that are so moral, law-abiding, trustworthy, and just as this little tribe of Kalispels. The testimony of their white neighbors across the river is to the same effect. Their spiritual condition is excellent, but their material and intellectual condition is truly deplorable. None of these Indians have ever been to school, because there never was a school there. They have never been taught to farm their land, because they were never given an Indian farmer who could show them how to do it, and as they have always been poor and destitute, they had no means to buy farm implements. Some 25 years ago they were forced away from their land around Cusick and had to go across the river, where 9 sections of land were given to them. As this land was never allotted, some Indians to-day are absolutely without land. These Indians are asking for a good man who could be an Indian farmer to them, as is done in many other places. If such a man could be the teacher, and in spring, but particularly during the three vacation months (June, July, and August), help and direct the Indians for their crops and teaching the women how to prepare a decent meal or keep their houses clean, the greatest benefit would be conferred upon these poor Indians who are at present absolutely neglected in every way. I accompanied the Indian inspector, Mr. Baker, last week on his visit to those Indians, and he also realiz

Rev. L. TAELMAN, S. J., President.

Mr. Chairman, a couple of days ago I read in my daily paper from Spokane-the Spokesman-Review-the following concerning this same little band of Indians:

INDIANS NEAR STARVATION—FATHER TAELMAN TELLS OF PITIFUL CONDI-TION OF CALISPELS—LACK OF FOOD BLAMED FOR DEATHS OF FOUR CHILDREN IN LAST FEW WEEKS.

That the Calispel Indian Tribe is in a pitiful condition and that the chief is subsisting on a fare of Indian bread and coffee was the annuncement made by the Rev. Father Taciman, president of Gonzaga College, on his return from the reservation, where he conducted services yesterday.

"I have seen few cases where a tribe seemed to be in a more pitiful condition," said the Rev. Father Taelman. "I find that during the last few weeks four children and an Indian woman have died. The Indians are not neglecting their services, but are more destitute than can be

"I found the old blind chief, Massala, scated with other Indians making a meal on the Indian bread smeared with lard as a substitute for butter. This, together with a little coffee, was their only food."

The Rev. Father Taelman reports that the second chief, Nicola, has been ill, but is now recovering. It is believed that the poor diet may have been responsible for the ailments which caused the death of the children.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. La FOLLETTE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, some 25 years ago this band of Calispel Indians were, by Government authority, removed from their hunting grounds, or the country which they had inhabited, to some reservation—the Indian Department could not tell me this morning what reservation, but their impression was that it was the Flathead—but, as is always the case in moving Indians, there were a part of them who did not want to be taken away from their home, and a little band of them was given 9 sections of land, set apart by the Government for a reservation, and there for 25 years they have remained absolutely without any assistance from the Government. In those days they got along very well, because there was still game and fish in the country. The country has settled up. game and fish in the country. The country has settled up. The game has been run out of the mountains. These Indians are now absolutely destitute, and some of them are suffering for the necessaries of life. If they could have this little appropriation and be given a start, it would be only a short time until they would be self-supporting. We have some reservations in our State, and the Indians on those reservations are almost self-supporting, only $27,000 being appropriated for the six reservations in the State of Washington.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how many of these Indians there are?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. About 100-96 or 98 of them-and 20 of them are of school age.

Mr. FOSTER. The total population-men, women, and children-is about 100?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. These Indians own the land on which they live, do they not?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; it belongs to the United States Government. It was simply withdrawn from entry. They own nothing. They were poor when they were put there, and they are poorer now. The Government has had no means by which it could do anything for them. It takes an act of Congress to The Government has had no means by which do that. If this amendment passes, then the Government can look after them. These nine sections of land which have been withdrawn from entry have never been allotted, and because of the fact that the country has settled up, the game has disappeared, and the Indians have no means of obtaining food and are absolutely destitute at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Government support these Indians at all?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It never has given one dollar to them. It only allowed them to remain upon this land when they refused to leave their homes. The Government put them across the river from where they had lived, onto these nine sections of land, and there they have been ever since, without any assistance in any way. I obtained that information from the Indian Department this morning, and while I could not get anything except the expressed desire, the Indian Department has said it would be glad to have this legislation pass, so that they would be able to do something for these Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that these Indians have been self-sustaining for the last 25 years?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All the sustenance they have had for the last 25 years is what they have obtained for themselves. The Government has never done anything for them, only to allow them to occupy this land.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not also a fact that the gentleman's State has been in the Union 40 or 50 years?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No, sir; my State has been in the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. You have been represented by Senators and Members of the House, and now have two Members of the House?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you know why it is that the attention of the Indian Affairs Committee of the House has never been called to this state of affairs?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the only reason in the world has been that these Indians until now have never got into this destitute condition. As I say, the country has settled up. This is in the most mountainous, timbered, and probably the least developed part of our State. As I said before, so long as there was game there the Indians could make a living.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that this band of Indians broke off from the original band because they refused to leave this mountainous country?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Refused to go down where a good reservation was given them?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not tell the gentleman anything about that. The gentleman with whom I talked at the Indian Office this morning

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I can not withdraw my objection to this amendment. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I can not induce the gentleman to withdraw his objection, there is no use in my taking up the time of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to answer it. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman anything at all from the Indian Department, or from any supervisor Indians in that country, expressing an opinion in favor of the passage of this amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Did the gentleman ever present anything of the kind to our committee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I presented it a few weeks ago to the House, but when I made inquiry at your committee room there was no record of the matter, and I had expected that the amendment would be printed and come back to me. Senate amendments, I knew, were printed, but I did not discover that House amendments are not so treated until the bill was called For that reason, until this measure came before the House, I never called it to the attention of the committee, and did not know that the bill was to be reported so soon.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Warburton] is a member of the committee?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He is; but I was waiting until I could get a copy of the bill and I could bring it before the committee. I admit that I am at fault, and I am trying to correct it if possible.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think that the committee would be justified in accepting an amendment on the floor about which they know nothing? I believe there are 20 members of the committee, and I am the only one that the gentleman has talked with in regard to it. I do not think that the amendment should be adopted until the facts are investigated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.
Mr. CAMPBELL. May I suggest that in view of the apparent oversight that this matter may well be presented to the Senate and be taken care of there, giving the gentleman from Texas and the other conferees an opportunity to inquire into the merits of the claim before the matter reaches the conferees?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that is all right, and I think it would be satisfactory.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the gentleman from Washington

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think the gentleman from washington might be taken care of in that way.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wanted to bring it before the House and call the attention of the committee to it, and if gentlemen will call up the Indian Department they will find that the department will corroborate what I say.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will. Mr. MANN. I notice that the amendment offered by the gentleman provides for the purchase of seed and various other things. The provision that is usually carried in the bill is for "support and civilization." Is it necessary, if the gentleman gets the money, to have the item provide specifically for these things?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not know that it is, but the Indians need these things. There will have to be seed purchased. It may not be necessary to specify them.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman have any special reason for specifying these things instead of providing for "support and civilization," as is the usual form?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I did not have any particular reason, except that they would need them, and I wanted to fix it so that they would get what they absolutely needed. If they can get a start, I am satisfied that in a short time they will be self-supporting

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think that this should go to the Senate, where it could be investigated by the committee in the regular order, and then, if the gentleman can justify his claim, the conferees will take care of it in the best light placed before us. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas insists on his point of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the committee for according

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as

For support and education of 175 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., and for pay of superintendent, $31,025; for general repairs and improvements, $3,000; in all, $34,025.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 6 and 7, page 35, strike out the words "thirty-one thousand" and insert the words "thirty-two thousand five hundred," and in line 8, page 35, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To that, Mr. Chairman, I reserve point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not subject to a point of order. It increases the item for support and education of Indian pupils at the Indian school on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., $1,500; and increases the item for repair $1,000, or $2,500 all told. This increases the item to the amount of the estimate.

This is not the gentleman's road amendment? Mr. FERRIS. Mr. MONDELL. No. I am surprised the committee did not allow the amount estimated, inasmuch as the Indian commissioner rather forcefully stated the reasons for the increase over the appropriation of last year. The committee has appropriated exactly the amount that was appropriated last year, but the Indian agent asked for an increase of about $5,000. The Secretary reduced that to an increase of $2,500.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that a part of that was the salary of the superintendent?

Mr. MONDELL. A part of the increase is to meet this condition of affairs: The salary of the superintendent at that reservation was reduced some time ago by an increase in his bond. The amount of money in his possession had been increasing, and the bond was not considered sufficient under the circumstances. The Indian commissioner thereupon increased his bond. The amount which it was necessary for him to pay for the premium on the increased bond reduced his salary somewhat.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that all the superintendents are required to give these bonds in conformity with the rules and regulations of the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that is true; but this superintendent has had an unusual amount of money in his possession, and his bond is considerably larger, nearly twice that of some other agents under the same conditions. The amount which it is proposed to increase the salary of the superintendent is small. tendent is small. It is proposed to increase by a small amount the salaries of several other employees who are now very poorly paid. I want to call the attention of the committee to poorly pand. I want to can the attention of the commerce to the fact that this is an exceedingly important agency. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of this fact, that all of these bills uniformly carry this increase, and we have objected to all of them, and that we could not afford to make an exception in any case without going back and treating all of these agents in the same way?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist that the chairman of the committee shall not convey the impression that the in-the superintendent. The salary of the superintendent may be increased $200, if this additional appropriation is granted, or it may not be. That is a matter which is left to the judgment of the Indian Commissioner. I visited this school last fall, and I know that there are quite a number of the employees there who are miserably underpaid, and I know, in addition to that, that they have been attempting to run this school with such a small cost that the Indian pupils have not in all cases had all of those things that should be had for their comfort. It is one of those things that should be had for their comfort. It is one of the cheapest schools in the country. The average cost per capita is nearly $50 less than that of some of the schools in the States immediately to the west of Wyoming. In addition to that a part of this increase, $1,000, is for repairs. We have many good buildings at that school, but they have reached a point when they must be repaired and repaired to a certain extent or our expectation. extent or our property will rapidly depreciate. I talked with the superintendent in regard to his estimate for repairs, and he said that he had reduced it to the last penny that they could get along with, and yet the commissioner reduced that, and now the committee reduces it an additional $1,000, so that the amount proposed to be appropriated is about $2,000 less than the superintendent says is absolutely essential at that school in order to keep those buildings in repair. I have no doubt that is true. I went about with him, and he pointed out here and there where expenditures were absolutely necessary if we are to maintain those buildings in any sort of usable condition. This is an increase of $2,500 over the present appropriation. The increase has been asked for by the Indian Commissioner because he believes it is absolutely essential, and the small portion of that increase that might or might not be paid to the superintendent—an increase of perhaps $200—is certainly not such an increase that anyone need feel disturbed about, in view of the fact that this superintendent not only cares for this school, but has charge of a reservation of half a million acres and of great irrigation systems. As a matter of fact, his salary ought to be twice what it is, and I hope the committee will agree to the increase.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that we should agree to this suggested increase, and that the gentleman's amendment should not become a part of this appropriation bill, for the reason that on page 5 we have a general ump-sum appropriation for the very purpose that he desires.

The item is in the following language:

For construction, lease, purchase, repairs, and improvements of school and agency buildings, and for sewerage, water supply, and lighting plants, and for purchase of school sites, $425,000.

That is a lump-sum appropriation which can be used by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior and applied to this school. There is no necessity for making a special exception in favor of this school. If we did, we would be called upon to make a special exception in the case of every similar Indian school in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. But the committee has already given them $3,000 for repairs in this item.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. For general repairs and improvements, $3,000. If there is any more needed, there is no question but that they could take it out of the general fund; and as I have stated, it is not necessary, in my judgment, for them to come to Congress for all these different amounts that they are asking for by special amendments. It should be taken care of in the lump-sum appropriation.

I call attention to the further fact that the teachers and superintendents and other employees of the Indian schools have asked for a uniform advance of salaries all over the country. We have reduced them all to the amount carried last year, and it would be unjust to except this school from this reduction and leave all of the other schools with the reduced amount. We are placing this school on the same footing as all other Indian schools.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not true that the lump-sum appropriation can not be used for a purpose for which there is a specific Is not that a rule that runs through the bill? appropriation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think so. I think that this lump sum is distributed under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MONDELL. Then why make any specific appropriation if the lump-sum appropriation can be used for the same pur-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We have an estimate made by the department and sent in to us, and part of this estimate is an increase of salaries, and we have uniformly reduced that amount to the sum carried in last year's appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, I will say to him that I made a request last fall for the use of some of this lump-sum appropriation for repairs on this crease I am asking for is wholly an increase of the salary of school, and was informed that inasmuch as there was a specific appropriation it could not be used, and they did not get an appropriation which they needed to repair the washhouse that they were building.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at the Pierre School, with the same number of pupils that are at the Shoshone School, the amount appropriated and used last year for employees was $12,829, and at Cheyenne it was $12,848; in other words, they were about the same. At Pipestone School, Minnesota, with 225 pupils-that is, 50 more than at either of the other schools-the amount used was only $1,635 more for the additional pupils, and I will say at the Pierre School, for the benefit of the gentleman from Wyoming, they have operated a large farm of 300 acres and therefore are required to have employees more than a school that has not a farm.

Mr. MONDELL. They have a very large farm upon which they raise things

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill whether any schools or agency plants are recommended by the Secretary to be discontinued in the report which he made in December last, assuming that he made such a report; I have not seen it. The law carried last year a provision requiring the Secretary to make a report on the 1st of December last as to all schools and agencies, giving various amounts of information and recommendutions and reasons for continuing of discontinuing the agency plants or schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the Bismarck School is the only one I can recall now as not being necessary at the present time, and they never estimated for that.

Mr. MANN. I assume that he complied with the law giving a statement of the reasons why the schools and agency plants should be continued or why they should be discontinued. current law, the appropriation law, provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall accompany such report with the recommendation, supported by a statement of his reasons therefor, as to the necessity or advisability of continuing or discontinuing each such school or agency plant.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from South Dakota can explain the Bismarck School matter.

Mr. MANN. I just wanted to know in a general way.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman that the report was made and it has been published as a House Document. It is House Document No. 200, Sixty-second Congress, second session. My recollection is the report does not recommend the discontinuance of any school for which an appropriation is carried in this bill, but in submitting the estimates for the several Indian schools no estimate was submitted for the Bismarck School, North Dakota. The committee, however, made an appropriation for that school. Unless I am mistaken—and I think I am correct about it—the Bismarck School was not specially referred to in this report as a school that ought to be discontinued, but—
Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows there has been a good deal of controversy in the House and in the department and in the country as to whether a lot of these Indian schools and agencies ought to be abolished or whether they ought to be continued, and there have been reports and statements emanating from the department that various schools ought to be discontinued. I simply ask whether in this report the Secretary did advise or give reasons for the discontinuance of any school or agency plant?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. My understanding is not where an appropriation is carried in this bill, but I am not absolutely certain about it.

Mr. MANN. I was wondering when we really get down to brass tacks what the department would advise as to the discontinuance of schools which various officials of the department in reports have advised were useless.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there wereayes 16, noes 67.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of constructing an irrigation system within the diminished Shoshone or Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, in-cluding the maintenance and operation of completed canals, $50,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert as a new paragraph, at the end of line 15, page 35, the fol-

"For continuing the work of read and bridge construction on the Shoshone Reservation, Wyo., $20,000, relmbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 15 minutes in which to discuss this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may discuss the amendment for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Could not the gentleman conclude in 10 minutes?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not believe I can. I do not believe I can properly cover the subject in 15, but I will endeavor to do so.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman also discuss the point or order?

Mr. FOSTER. Settle the point of order first, and then take the time.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us settle the point of order first.

Mr. MONDELL. The point of order has not been raised, as I understand it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes a point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the point of order I will make. It is not germane to the bill and is new legislation. I will give the gentleman reasonable time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have 15 minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will understand that there is a point of order pending. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. The fact that there is a point of order pending does not prevent the Chair from submitting my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Monderl.] asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes to discuss the merits of the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I object to that, because I think he should also discuss the point of order, so that the Chair will be prepared to rule upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming have 15 minutes, and that at the end of that time the Chair shall rule upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], as I understand, reserved a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. He made a point of order.
Mr. MANN. He stated it four or five times so that it could be heard here, but not by the Chair, that he reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Hlinois [Mr. Foster] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming may have 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. The subject of road building is a very great one, and several of us are interested in it, although we have not felt justified in bringing it before this Congress for discussion, for reasons that must be patent and apparent. This discussion could only be of an academic character.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know about that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MHLLER. I hope that the gentleman from Wyoming may have 10 minutes.

Mr. MONDEILL. My discussion is not at all academic. It is very practical, and I expect to get the appropriation ultimately

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-

DELL] is recognized.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Shoshone Indian Reservation is in the central-western portion of Wyoming. It is 65 miles in length and from 25 to 30 miles in breadth. The resermiles in length and from 25 to 30 miles in breadth. vation was formerly much larger than at present—the part of the map colored yellow being the present reservation—the reservation formerly being on the lines I indicate by the pointer. Five years ago the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians ceded a million and three-quarters acres of land, a considerable portion of which has been settled upon. They retain the diminished reserve 65 miles long and 20 to 30 miles in breadth and containing approximately 500,000 acres. South of the reservation is one of the oldest and best irrigated regions in our State, the Lander Valley. North of the reservation are the lands coming under irrigation on the ceded portion of the reservation. The reservation lies directly across the highways of travel running north and south and northwest and southeast through that portion of the State-the highway from Lander northwest to the upper Wind River and the Yellowstone Park, the highway north into the Big Horse Basin, and the northwest and southeast highway running up and down the Big Wind River. All these cross the reservation—a reservation 65 miles by 30, a reservation owned entirely by the Indians, practically none of which is taxable. There is, maybe, a little personal property owned by a very few lessees on the reservation which is tax-There is, maybe, a little personal property able in the county of Fremont. With that exception neither the county nor the State of Wyoming receives a penny of revenue from that 500,000 acres.

The maintenance of the county government, the development of the country, all necessitates travel across this reservation. There is no way to avoid it. There have been bridges built over the streams bordering the reservation at one time and another, and perhaps a year and a half ago the county of Fremont erected two steel bridges, one on the northern border of the reservation, crossing the Big Wind River, and one on the southern border of the reservation, across the Popoagie, a branch of the Little Wind River. Those two bridges, one end of each resting upon the reservation, cost the county, together with the approaches, a large sum of money. The stretch between those two bridges, approximately 25 miles in length, is all on the Indian reservation. The county has no revenue derived from the land along that road. It has no authority to expend any money on that road. For the roads there, from time to time, the superintendent of the reservation has used small sums of money that he has been able to secure from one appropriation and another, in an effort to keep them in something like a passable condition.

The road approaching from the south is a first-class highway. The road leading from the reservation to the north is, or will be, a first-class highway also. But there are 20 to 25 miles between these two bridges, both built by the people of the county, neither of which cost the Government a penny. That stretch of road is practically impassable without considerable expenditure. It is true that the Indian Service has bridged Little Wind River on the road near the center of the reservation, but with that exception they have not been able to do much in road repair or bridging.

Now, in addition to that, there is another road leading from Lander to the Wind River Agency at that point [indicating on the map] marked by the dark yellow spot, and from the agency and school there is a road leading up the Wind River. In addition to the north and south road, as I said a moment ago, the road leading from Lander and the agency and the school, some 22 miles, and then the road leading from the agency northwest to the northwest border of the reserve. That road is approximately 55 miles in length. The part between Lander and the school has been kept in fairly good condition. The new bridge across the North Fork, leading on to the reservation, built by the people of the community and without cost to the Indians, necessitates a reconstruction of a part of the road to the agency. The road is used, as are all these roads, by the Indians as well as the whites. Then there is the road northwest from the agency across Bull Lake Creek and up the Wind River. It is necessary to reconstruct that road for a very considerable distance in order to avoid some very steep hills, which the Indians find very difficult to pull with their leads of poles and logs, and it is also necessary in doing that to build a steel bridge across the Bull Lake Creek at that point. The Indian Office estimates that will cost $10,000. The Indian Bureau estimates that in order to put these roads on the reservation in as good a condition as the roads in the surrounding territory an expenditure of $67,000 will be required, and the Indian Bureau and the Interior Department have recommended such appropriation. The committee did not see fit to make that appropriation or any appropriation for this purpose, although I appeared before them and stated the facts fully, as will be seen by reference to the printed hearings.

Now, the question is, What are you going to do about it, and what does the Committee on Indian Affairs expect us to do? We have built the bridges connecting the reservation with the adjacent territory, but we can not certainly be expected to build the roads on the Indian land, on land all of which is owned by the Indians, for there is not an acre of this reservation-no; I will not say there is not an acre, because there are a few tracts out of the hundreds of thousands of acres that vation to the adjacent territory in another State.

belong to the white men-but it is practically Indian land, and most of it will remain Indian land for a long time to come.

Mr. CARTER. Is any of this land taxable?

Mr. MONDELL. None of the Indian land; not an acre of it will be taxable for many years without a change of legislation, except that the Secretary may use his discretion in the matter of allowing certain Indians to alienate their lands.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this the road concerning which the gentleman, in explaining the bill to the committee, stated that it was expected to make it part of a great automobile highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman did not so state; but the Secretary of the Interior, in urging the appropriation, after having stated that the Indians used and needed all these roads, further called attention to the fact that the main roads across the reservation would be a part of a great transcontinental automobile highway.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If so, is it not a fact that this would be the first step in the connecting link to make the United States Treasury build a great automobile road from one side of the country to the other?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can settle that to suit him-I do not appear here in behalf of anybody who wants to use those roads for automobiles; but I say that if the road should be constructed, I know of no reason why American citizens traveling northwest to the Yellowstone Park should not go over the road if they are disposed to do so. I want to say to the gentleman, however, that we are not depending on this road as our only highway to the Yellowstone National Park, because the State of Wyoming has laid out a State highway leading into the national park, and this road across this reservation is no part of it. But the fact that these roads would be available for automobile travel is not an argument against them, but in their favor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman explain to us how his amendment is germane to a section which provides for constructing an irrigation system within the Shoshone or Wind River Reservation?

Mr. MONDELL. My amendment is offered as a separate paragraph. It has nothing to do with the paragraph which pre-It is a separate paragraph, germane to the purposes of this bill, intended to continue a work now in progress, and proposing a continuation of work on roads already laid out and upon which work has been done for many years.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. By the Indians and by the citizens living there

Mr. MONDELL. By the Indians entirely. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And not by the United States Government.

Mr. MONDELL. By the Indians, under Federal appropriations

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then it would be entirely a new system of Government construction—that is, a new proposition for the Government to go inside of an Indian reservation, however large it might be, and construct roads from one side to nnother.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; and I will say to the gentleman that I think we ought to be frank about these roads on Indian They have been built and patched for years out reservations. of appropriations dug up here and there. I have been chasing down to the Indian Office ever since I can remember to get the Indian Office to find a few dollars here and there that could be used on these roads and bridges,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to ob-

Mr. MONDELL. I hope the gentleman will not object, because I want to explain that very point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the State of Wyoming have a right to build these roads within that reservation?

Mr. MONDELL. That point has been raised, and it is not certain that the road officials of Fremont County would not be subject to action on their bonds if they spent on that Indian reservation the money raised from general taxation in the district. We have gone further than people have generally in the Indian country, in that we have built our own bridges across the streams bordering the reservation. The Indian bill last year carried an item to build a bridge joining an Indian resernever asked for that. We have built our own bridges at a We now have several good bridges which our people have built joining the reservation to the adjacent territory. The Government has never spent a cent in building one of those now in use.

They have been using a few dollars here and a few dollars there out of sundry and divers appropriations carried in this bill one time and another to patch these roads. I think it is very much more decent and dignified for Congress to appropriate money for these roads, knowing that it is to be used to build decent roads across the Indian reservation rather than to compel the Indian Office to search hither and you and through various appropriations to get a few dollars that can be used for the purpose of building roads and bridges that are necessary. I think we ought to approach this thing frankly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes, but I will yield as soon as I finish this thought. Do you propose that for all time to come there shall be 500,000 acres in the center of the State of Wyoming, paying nothing whatever to the State, over which we are expected to maintain roads? That is the question.

We are expected to maintain roads? That is the question. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens] has made a point of order against this proposed amendment?

Mr. MONDELL. He has reserved it. I want to argue the point of order after I have finished my remarks on this amend-

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then, the gentleman proposes to argue the point of order later?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I thought there was unanimous consent that it be disposed of after the gentleman was through with his remarks.

Mr. MONDELL. No. Mr. Chairman, has my five minutes expired?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman has one minute more. Mr. MONDELL. I want to emphasize in that one minute this proposition: Is it the policy of the Indian Committee, is it the policy of Congress, to maintain in the center of a State a great area of 65 miles in length and 30 miles in breadth, as in this case, and refuse to build any roads across that area, which lies right across the main highways of travel? I do not think that when Congress understands that proposition it will stand for it at all. My amendment will make this expenditure reim-bursable out of funds that will be received from land sales, and the money will be paid out to the Indians for their labor. Nine-tenths will be spent on the reservation for labor. The In-dians need to have the roads built as much as do the people of the surrounding country. It is intolerable that these roads are not put in better condition. I hope the committee will not adhere to the narrow policy which it seems to have pursued in making up this bill. I do not ask what we ought to have, but a comparatively small sum that is absolutely necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. And I would like to be heard on the point

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming proceed and that a ruling be made on the point of order after the 15 minutes' presentation of the merits of the amendment.
Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Chairman, no such request was submitted to the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember distinctly of making the request. Mr. MONDELL. But I did not accede to the request.

Mr. MANN. No such request was submitted to the committee by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted it to the House.

Mr. MANN. I submit that the Chair did not submit the request to the House in the manner the Chair has stated.

Mr. MONDELL. I was giving careful attention to the matter because that was the very thing I did not want.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must ask for some information on the point of order before he can rule intelligently.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, my distinct understanding is that if it had not been for the committee acceding to my request I should have objected to the 15 minutes' time.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman did not put it in that Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CARTER. Is it not a fact that after unanimous consent was granted an extension of time was given to the gentleman from Wyoming of five minutes, and did not that affect the original unanimous-consent agreement? As I understand it, the situation is this: The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] did submit a request for unanimous consent to the effect that the gentleman from Wyoming proceed for 15 minutes and at the end of that time the Chair should decide the point of order. Whether the Chair put the last part of the proposition to the House I am not sure; but even if the Chair did put to the committee that part of the request requiring the Chair to rule when the 15 minutes had expired, and even grant that the committee did so order, subsequent to that time the gentleman from Wyoming was granted five minutes more. Now, did not the last agreement vacate the prior order to the effect that the Chair should rule in 15 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recollects that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming might proceed for 15 minutes and at the end of that time the Chair should rule on the point of order. The Chair, without stating the request as made by the gentleman from Illinois, submitted the request and announced that without objection it was so ordered. But the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Mann, now protests that he did not hear the request as put by the gentleman from Illinois and that the Chair did not so state it, and the gentleman from Illinois is probably right in that. The Chair desires to be perfectly fair, and also states, as he has before, that he must have some information, in one respect at least, on this point of order before he can intelligently rule, and therefore the Chair is disposed to recognize the gentleman from Wyoming, and the gentleman from Wyoming will proceed in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. This item proposes the continuation of a work already in progress, to wit, the building of certain roads, and the repair of certain roads and bridges and their continuation. These roads were aid out many years ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in order to reach a conclusion upon this matter, I shall withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of order and asks for a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment. There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming. The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr.

MONDELL) there were—ayes 16, noes 44.

So the amendment was rejected. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Insert at the end of line 15, page 35, as a new paragraph, the fol-

Insert at the end of fine 10, page 10wing:

"For repair and maintenance of roads and bridges on the Stoshone Reservation. Wyo., $10,000, reimburseable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order that it is not germane and that it is new legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman yielded the point of order on an amendment identical with this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I withdrew it in the interest of saving time.

Mr. MONDELL. Then we shall have to argue the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I want to emphasize that this will not cost the Government of the United States a penny. These people have 500,000 acres, 65,000 acres of which are under first-class irrigation systems. It is the finest 500,000-acre tract in that part of our State. They did own 1,700,000 acres of land lying immediately north, which is gradually being sold and the proceeds paid them. The sale of that land will be expedited by a measure, which recently passed the House, allowing homestead proofs to be made in a shorter period of time.

The people are anxious to have these roads built; the Indians will build them themselves. The $10,000 which this will allow the commissioner to use for this purpose is of Indian funds and will be expended paying the Indians for days' work, and let me say that these Indians need the employment. They are earning a little something from their lands, but in the meantime they need employment and they want to build these roads. They want these bridges put across their canals and across the streams. It is their money. They provide in their treaty that their money may be used for this purpose, and yet the committee refuses the Indians the right to use a small part of their own money to build their own bridges and roads.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment and the gentleman from Texas does not reserve the point of order, but makes the point of order. That calls for an immediate ruling of the Chair. The gentleman is proceeding by unanimous consent, and I object to his further proceeding in this manner.

Mr. MANN. But we gave the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] a great deal more time on the question of his hospital.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the time in the discussion of a point of order is entirely within the discretion of the Chair. The five-minute rule does not apply to an argument on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen will not make any time by objecting to fair consideration. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming must discuss the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have not any desire to unnecessarily take up the time of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming will proceed in order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I have the reputation of needlessly taking up the time of the committee, but this is an important matter. It is not subject to a point of order. These Indians own or did own 1,700,000 acres of land, subject to entry and sale, which is being entered right along. They own 500,000 acres of land in fee, part of which is under an irrigation system that cost a half million of The ditches thread the entire northern portion of the reservation. It is difficult to get anywhere on account of these newly-constructed unbridged ditches, and there are streams needing bridging. Mr. CARTER.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MONDELL. I shall be very glad to.
Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, there is no desire, I think, on the part of any gentleman to shut off the gentleman from Wyoming, because he is very well posted on these matters, and would like very much to hear him, but the leaders of the House are coming down on the chairman of our committee pretty hard to get this bill out of the way in order that other important matters may be taken up and disposed of. I would be very glad to hear the gentleman, so far as I am concerned, but we would like to have some understanding as to how long the gentleman would like to proceed.

If the gentleman will indicate how much time he desires I think it can be arranged without friction, and we would be very glad to submit a unanimous-consent request that would give him sufficient time.

Mr. MONDELL. I could get through in a very short time if it were not for the interruptions. The interruptions consume a very considerable amount of time, and I presume that if it had not been for them I would have been through before now.

Mr. CARTER. I thank the gentleman for not branding them unimportant interruptions.

The CHAIRMAN.

this proposition.

The gentleman from Wyoming will proceed to a discussion of the point of order or the Chair will rule. Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes to discuss the merits of Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire further time to discuss the merits of this question. If in the time that the committee has kindly given me I have not been able to place in the minds of gentlemen an understanding of this situation, then the case is hopeless. If I have not made the case clear there is no possibility of doing so, and I will address myself to the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from the CHAIRMAN.

Wyoming that the Chair cares to be especially informed with respect to the matter whether or not this is a continuation of a work that has already been commenced. Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will endeavor to inform the Chair on that subject by saying that over 80 years ago, possibly longer-I have forgotten the exact date-Capt. Bonneville established a trading station at Little Popongie River, and from that trading station roads were built northwest to the headwaters of the Little and Big Wind Rivers, northeast to the Owl Creek Mountains, and west in the direction of Fremont Peak; that the road leading north from Bonneville's old camp on the north fork toward Bull Lake and to the head of the Wind River has been used ever since, as have the other roads mentioned. These Indians have been occupying this reservation since 1868, and they have been doing work on roads on the reservation all that time. They have been doing work on the road leading from the old north fork bridge northeast toward Stagners and across to the Big Wind River for 30 years. a road leading northwest from old Fort Washakie to the head of the Wind River, thence on into Jacksons Hole, part of which is one of the few roads in this country that was built under a Federal appropriation for military purposes, and a part of that appropriation was used on this reservation, most of it being used on the head of the Big Wind River and beyond Jacksons Hole country. There is a road from the subagency at Arapahoe to the old fort and the school and agency. All these roads and others have been used for the last 40 years, and more Federal appropriations have been used from time to time-appropriations made in the Indian bills-for the improvement of all these roads. Last year a bridge was built across the Little Wind River out of an appropriation carried in this bill, and all the work which has been done on these roads all these years has been performed under appropriations carried in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee, for his guidance, if these statements are corroborated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the Chair's question? The CHAIRMAN. The question is as to the building of these roads. If it be true that these roads have been constructed by the Government from time to time, and it is only a continuation of a work, there is no occasion for further argument.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There has never been, to my knowledge, any appropriation made for building roads from United States funds on Indian lands. If so, it has escaped my observation, and I am satisfied in the last 15 years there has been no such appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. The Chair will notice the gentleman does not venture the opinion that these roads have not been built with money carried in Indian appropriations. I have personal knowledge that they have been so built.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can the gentleman show a single act of Congress anywhere directly appropriating money for building roads on Indian lands?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not imagine I am called upon to find specific appropriations for certain definite roads, but I have in my hand a letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs which shows very clearly that sums carried in appropriations made by the Indian bill last year were used in the construction of roads on this reservation. This is from the letter of December 26, C. F. Hauke, Assistant Commissioner—Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has that road ever been authorized by any act of Congress?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know of any act of Congress authorizing any road on a reservation nor do I know that such an authorization is necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then they are diverting funds, when they are working on that road, appropriated for other They are converting funds to be used for one purpurposes. pose to another if they are doing it, and they are doing it without the knowledge or sanction of Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has been on the Committee on Indian Affairs for a long time, and he knows perfectly well that there have been roads built on Indian reservations and they have been built with Indian appropriations; the gentleman knows perfectly well they have been built.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The fact that we may have built a bridge somewhere does not make this amendment proper at this time

I want to ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that from moneys appropriated for subsistence, instead of issuing rations to Indians who are able to work, the policy of the department has been to pay them by the day for their labor by themselves and teams, and that the work that they perform is upon the roads within the reservation, and that is the only money that has been expended for roads on the Shoshone Reservation?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I think that is not true. In fact, I know it is not true on this reservation, because no such issues have been made to these Indians. They are self-supporting. All they want is to spend their own money to build their own roads, and the members of the committee argue they ought not be allowed to do it. The money will be paid to Indians for work building these roads.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What I desire to know of the gentleman is this, whether or not an act providing for the sale of the surplus land of these Indians provides that the profits that go into the Treasury may be appropriated for the improvement of the roads upon that reservation?

Mr. MONDELL. The act contains a general provision with regard to the use of those funds, just as it contains a general provision for the use of funds for irrigation purposes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will call the Chair's attention to the fact that an appropriation that was proposed in this bill for an Indian hospital at Fort Sill, Okla., proposed to use the money of the Indians, on the supposition that it was in the Treasury subject to appropriation for that purpose, and the Chair ruled otherwise, and this is exactly on all fours with this proposition. This proposes to pay for roads from the funds of the Indians received from the sale of their surplus land, and there is no law authorizing it.

Mr. MONDELL. That is it. Mr. FERRIS. Does the Chair care to hear further?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. In the absence of any citations by the gentleman from Wyoming of authority for the construction of those roads, the point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. MONDELL, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert at the end of line 15, page 35, as a new paragraph, the following:

"For construction, repair, and maintenance of bridges on the Shoshone Reservation, in Wyoming, $10,000, reimbursable in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 3, 1905."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.
Mr. MONDELL. If the Chair will hear me—

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I make a further point of order that it is dilatory also.

Mr. MANN. I make a point of order that there is no quorum present, if we are to proceed on those tactics. If the gentleman wants to proceed in that way, he will not save any time by it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is not subject to a point of order, as I will prove to the Chair if he will give me the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] raises the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and six Members are present—a quorum. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, if the Chair will allow me—

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate close on this paragraph and all amendments thereto at the end of five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order, debate not having commenced on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is sustained.

Mr. MANN. I will be fair if you will be fair. You can not get us away from fair discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he will relieve the committee from any agitation or responsibility by saying that he will hear the gentleman from Wyoming briefly on the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The point of order has been withdrawn, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment is not subject to a point of order, and therefore the point of order is withdrawn. Mr. Chairman, my amendment as it now stands provides an appropriation of $10,000 for bridges on the diminished Shoshone Reservation, and on this point I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens]. When these Indians sold their land they realized their reservation was entirely surrounded by streams requiring bridges-streams of continuous flow. They expected to be called upon to expend a large sum of money for the building of bridges, and in anticipation of that they specifically wrote in the treaty a provision providing that a portion of the funds should be used for building bridges. But we have not called upon them. We have not asked the Indian Office to build those bridges. Fremont County has built bridges across all of the streams bounding the reservation, connecting it with the surrounding country.

The Chair has held my amendment for roads and bridges out of order, but an amendment such as I now offer, for bridges only, is not subject to the point of order, for the treaty provides that a part of the funds of these Indians may be used for the purpose of building bridges.

In order that the road leading northwest from the agency may be improved there must be a new bridge across Bull Lake Creek, as suggested in the letter of the Indian Commissioner.

In addition to that these Indians have built an extensive irrigation system. They have many miles of canals and laterals, few of which are bridged. The road running across the reservation from north to the south crosses some of these ditches.

The Indians own them. They own the land. They have, or will have when their lands are sold, the money. They want to build the bridges, but the Indian Committee says they shall not use their own money, which they themselves have set apart for this purpose in the treaty, for the building of bridges on the reservation.

Now, what does the committee propose? Does it propose that the Indians shall not have the opportunity to build these bridges? Does the committee propose that they shall not have the use of $10,000 of their own money for this purpose, and shall not have an opportunity to use it?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I will yield; because I hope the gentleman's heart will soften to the extent of $10,000.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman says they have $10,000. They have not a cent of money.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the sale of their nonirrigable grazing lands is coming on this summer, and that they have a larger area of land that has been homesteaded, and the homesteaders are paying for it, and that we passed a bill a few days ago which allows the homesteaders to make proof promptly, which will expedite payments. There is a further large area withdrawn for irrigation, which will eventually be paid for. Some of these moneys will be to their credit in a short time, and we ask they be allowed to use their own money in the bridging of the irrigating ditches and small streams. The treaty provided that the funds could be used for this purpose. Now, the committee may not want to enter upon the policy of expending Federal money to build roads or bridges on Indian reservations generally, but surely the committee will not go back on the treaty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate now close on this paragraph and the pending amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves that all debate be now closed on this paragraph and amendments thereto. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MONDELL. A division, Mr. Chairman. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 34, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of Shoshones in Wyoming: For pay of physician, teacher, carpenter, miller, engineer, farmer, and blacksmith (art. 10, treaty of July 3, 1868), $5,000; for pay of second blacksmith, and such iron and steel and other materials as may be required, as per article 8, same treaty, $1,000; in all, $6,000.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record of yesterday by inserting a letter or statement received from the firm of Kappler & Merillat, Osage attorneys, in reply to an anonymous statement filed in the Record and made a part of the Record on Saturday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr.

McGuire] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 5, 1912.

Hon, THERON AKIN.

House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 3 we find you caused to be inserted an anonymous letter intended to reflect upon ourselves as attorneys for the Osage Tribe of Indians and upon the Secretaries of the Interior who have approved our contracts as tribal series as attorneys.

The letter, like most muckraking articles, has some small measure of truth, but as a whole is false, and in its essence is untrue, misleading, and vindictive.

The letter accuses the Secretary of the Interior of having improvidently and apparently improperly approved contracts with the firm of Kappler & Merillat, and further alleges that we had not the experience and competency to warrant our employment.

The letter alleges that prior to the approval of these contracts, which contracts were approved May 6, 1908, Mr. Merillat had never had any experience in the practice of the law, and that Charles J. Kappler, until March 4, 1906, had never attempted to practice law.

The fact of the matter is that Mr. Merillat was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States June 2, 1902, and that for more than three years prior to admission, as required by the rules of the Supreme Court of the United States, he had been a member of the bar of the highest court of the District of Columbia. Furthermore, he had not only been a member of the bar of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

very active practice during more than the three years preceding, and continued in an exceedingly active practice of the few milt the date of approval of our contracts with the Osage Tribe of Indians, and since them. His status at the bar can very readily be ascertained by you by application to Mr. Edward it. Thomas, president of the Br. Association practice had neithed the active personal prosecution or defense of cases of fraudicient conveyance, will contests, and probate matters, real estates and production of the properties of cases of fraudicient conveyance, will contests, and probate matters, real estates the production of the properties of deeds and wills, trial of land contests and Indian cases, actions of mandamus, prohibiting, injunction, and receivership, and the conduct of various other legal courts of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, but the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and the Court of the United States. He had had the honor as the trial member of the firm to win the only cases of the District of Columbia and the Court of Courts of the Court of Co

Oklahoma.

It was expressly understood and agreed between the Osage Tribe and ourselves that these services should not include what was known as the civilization-fund claim, amounting to more than $700,000. It must be obvious that no competent attorney would undertake to render the services which we have rendered to the Osage Tribe, including as it has not only the matter of the 37 white persons referred to, but their representation in various other matters before the executive departments and the Congress of the United States, the defense of suits in the courts involving the question of the taxation of their lands, their ownership of lands along the Arkansas River, the right of the tribe to the mineral royaltics which was questioned by individual allectics, the legal advice for the amount and of acres of their lands, and general personal advice for the amount and so of acres of their lands, and general personal advice for the amount and the source of their lands, and general personal advice for the amount of their lands and general personal advice for the personal advice for their lands and general personal advice for the personal adviced acres of the personal adviced several adviced for the personal adviced several adviced for the personal adviced for the personal after full public advertisement and after reception of sealed bids, based upon the minimum terms hereinbefore referred to, on the ground that only in this way could scandal be avoided and the trust duty or relationship of the Government of the United States to the Osage Tribe of Indians be fulfilled. We have adhered in endeavoring to obtain the best terms possible for our clients, although threatened that if we persisted an attack would be made upon us and our contract, which expires April 8, 1912, would fail of renewal.

The Osage bill before the House was the result of several conferences with the Osage Council, the Interior Department, Congressman McGuine, and Senator Owen, and also after a conference of all the opposing elements in Osage County. On some points in the measure we yielded our personal views in order to obtain unanimous support within the tribe and to ayoid an opposition that might have prevented passage of the bill, which bill meets the approval of the entire tribe and marks a large advance step in its affairs. The several reports on the bill in the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses by the Secretary of the Interior, printed in the reports of the House and Senate Committees on Indian Affairs, and the amendments suggested by the department and the committees of Congress, show that the interests of the Indians have been thoroughly safeguarded.

It will be readily seen from the foregoing that we necessarily must have made enemies in the performance of our duty, and, although on the floor of the House you declined to state the name of the author of the letter you inserted in the Recoup, we have no hesitation in saying to you that the inspiration and also the authorship is reasonably apparent from the context of the letter, and can be traced to persons having personal animus against ourselves because our sense of duty has disagreed with their selfish interests.

Inasmuch as you have caused the anonymous letter reflecting on the Secretary of the Interior and our firm to be inserted in the Congr

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 27, lines 7 to 12, inclusive, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 27, lines 7 to 12, inclusive, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The amendment comprises the lines stricken out, from 7 to 13, on page 27. The original language was this:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of the funds of the Chickasaw Indians now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, to Douglas H. Johnston, governor of said nation, the sum of $3,000 per annum from March 1, 1910, to March 1, 1912.

I will state that this governor has received no pay for the last two years, and that a point of order was made against it the other day, and the item went out of the bill. I hope the gentleman will now withdraw the point of order. It will save the introduction of a new bill.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ake a little statement. When this item was read the other make a little statement. day it went out on a point of order raised jointly by my colleague Mr. Foster and myself. Since that time I have examined the matter, and find that in 1908 the appropriation bill carried an item for a salary of $1,500 to Gov. Johnston, and authorized the payment of that salary thereafter. In the appropriation bill of 1910, for the fiscal year 1911, there was carried an item to pay Gov. Johnston $3,000 a year from some time in 1906 until March 1, 1910. That was in the appropriation act for the fiscal year 1911, and apparently that act contemplated that Gov. Johnston would not be paid $3,000 a year duties as governor and he has received no compensation. I shall not object and shall not renew the point of order, but if no better excuse is offered when this item comes before the House on a subsequent occasion, if I am here as a Member of the House, I shall then insist upon the point of order unless better reasons are given than have been given yet for his per-after March 1, 1910. I am informed, however, by gentlemen upon the committee that Gov. Johnston has performed the forming the services.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HARDWICK having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 494S. An act to amend an act approved May 27, 190S, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes.'

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) appropriating $10,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levee at Mound City, Ill.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 27, after line 6, by inserting the following: "The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pay, out of the funds of the Chickasaw Indians now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, to Douglas H. Johnston, governor of said nation, the sum of $3,000 per annum from March 1, 1910, to March 1, 1912."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of-

The CHARLAIA. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Barnhart, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

No separate vote was demanded on any amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Stephens of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be not limited at present, and that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] and myself control the time.

The SPEAKER. Pending the gentleman's motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] and himself control the time in the general debate until further ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I suppose the time will be equally divided.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The time is always equally divided between the two sides.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Moon of Tennessee was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with Mr. Hay in the

Mr. HAY took the chair amid general applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed. with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, by permission of the House I shall discuss the main features of this measure, leaving the consideration of its features in detail to the discussion of its paragraphs under the five-minute rule, and then with a brief review of other matters of local and general in-terest conclude. The bill carries, in accordance with estimates for the service, appropriations for all of the subdivisions of the Post Office Department in detail. The estimates were $261,-The committee recommends appropriations in the aggregate $259,827,949, or a decrease over the departmental estimates of $1,352,314, after a careful review of the estimates, the annual growth of the service, and comparison with previous estimates and the extent of unexpended balances. It is of course impossible for exact estimates to be given, owing to the character and uncertainty of some of the service to be performed and the changing conditions and necessities of the service. From the report of the auditor the committee finds an apparent deficiency of $627,845.94 in the department for the fixed year 1011 as shawn in the report

Since the report was made, however, the auditor advises me that when I called for a statement from the department that he did not give unaudited receipts after June 30, 1911, to be credited to that year, and that statements of receipts and expenditures on various accounts are coming in for audit for that year, and that it is impossible now to tell whether there will be a surplus or a deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, because the full receipts and expenditures are not yet ascertainable. It will therefore be seen that there is no way of telling yet whether there will be a surplus or a deficiency, but it is more than probable that the amount either way will not be very great. This department is therefore self-sustaining, or nearly so.

The appropriation made by the Congress for the service in 1897 was $92,571,564.22. The deficiency in revenue for that year was $11,411,277.65. The last appropriation bill carried $258,352,713.

The enormous growth in appropriations and expenditures in this department is due to our increase in population, to the extension of the service, and the additional use of the mails by the people produced, in the main, by the enlargement of com-mercial and industrial pursuits of all kinds. This is the largest bill ever presented to Congress for the service of any department in the history of the country, and, perhaps, the largest presented in any legislative body in any country in the world, and yet, in our opinion, it contains no more than is necessary for the proper administration of postal affairs, and it will not likely cause a single dollar—to carry out its provisions—to be drawn from the General Treasury. Under it a surplus will no doubt arise.

The Post Office Department is an immense business institution. It not only in its operation reaches every portion of every city, town, village, and hamlet in the United States, but it extends into the most remote rural localities, and in its foreign service stretches its arms beyond the seas. By a proper and economical administration of its affairs under wise laws the service may yet be greatly extended to the benefit of the people and without a loss but with a great gain of revenue. It can be made to produce unquestionably not only the revenue necessary to support itself, but, in part, to support other departments of the Government.

By improper management and inconsiderate and unwise legislation in the extension of the service it may cause an annual loss of many millions of dollars to the people of the United States.

The increase in the number of clerks and employees provided for in this bill is in accordance with the recommendations of the department and seems to be necessary for the maintenance and extension of the service. The recommendation for appropriations for the postal savings-bank system seems necessary if this policy is to be pursued. I have, personally, always opposed this innovation as unwise, useless, and expensive. There seems to me to be no justification for the borrowing by the Government of the people's money at 2 per cent in order to loan it to the banks at 2½ per cent under guarantee of safety. It is proposed to establish 40,000 depositories under this bill, with a central depository in Washington. There are now established about 7,000 of these depositories. The central office in Washington has 113 men and is conducted now at the expense of more than $125,000 a year. There seems to be engaged outside of the city of Washington in the various post offices about 1,242 men who give an average of 44 minutes a day of their time to The purpose of the department is to increase the this work. offices to 40,000, with an addition of 8 men to every thousand offices established, in the central office at Washington, making ultimately about 375 men in this office. The vast army of men that will be employed in this work outside of Washington can be estimated only from the fact that 33,000 more offices are to be established. It is estimated that for the next fiscal year it will take $280,000 to maintain the office in Washington, and the remainder of the $600,000 is asked for outside of the city of Washington. There has been disbursed on account of this service $408,446.35. The interest due to the Government by banks to date-that is, interest receivable-is estimated to be $55,170 by the department, and the interest payable by the Government is $20,190. The letter of the Postmaster General, made an appendix to the report, gives a detailed statement of the operation of the bank. This institution, to me, seems to exist largely to create offices and officeholders. I expressed my view in opposition to it when the bill was passed in the House. Yet Congress in have had no occasion to change those views. its wisdom established the postal savings-bank depositories, and its friends claim that it will be an ultimate success, and the committee therefore, by a substantial majority, recommends the appropriations asked for for the further establishment, maintenance, and enlargement of the system, mainly because the law is new and the system has not been fully tested. It is to be hoped that the immense loss up to date in its operation may not continue.

There is some new legislation on this bill that deserves serious consideration. This legislation, under the general rules of the House, is not in order under the bill, but its importance is such that the committee desires a special rule to make it in order in the public interest. Indeed, but for the general rule of the House this legislation would be more properly placed upon this bill than elsewhere. I shall not now enter into a full discussion of this legislation. The text of the bill shows what it is. The report which I have made I will ask to be made a part of my remarks as an appendix, and that the Clerk read now that part of it pertaining to new legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW LEGISLATION.

NEW LEGISLATION.

In section 1 under subdivision Railway Postal Car Service, office of Second Assistant Postmaster General, is this proviso:
"Provided further, That after the 1st of July, 1917, the Postmaster General shall not approve or allow to be used or pay for any full railway post-office car not constructed of steel, steel underframe, or equally indestructible material, and not less than 20 per cent of the new equipment shall be put into operation annually after July, 1912; and after the passage of this act no contract shall be entered into for the construction of steel underframe cars."

This provision was inserted in the bill to provide for ultimate protection for a class of employees (railway mail clerks) whose lives are in constant danger in the discharge of their duties, from the defective postal-car construction. The date for changes in cars as therein provided was fixed at July, 1917, to avoid injustice being done under the present contracts for the use of mail cars, and to afford the department time for changing cars to class demanded.

Section 2, to provide fraud by mail contractors.

Section 3, to authorize an increase in naval mail clerks' bonds, now limited to $1,000.

Section 4, to protect against fraud in weighing mails and to readjust compensation therefor.

Section 5, fixing for letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in first and second class post offices an eight-hour day and for extra pay or compensatory time for work by clerks and carriers in such offices.

offices.

Section 6, to protect employees against oppression and in the right of free speech and the right to consult their Representatives.

Section 7, to provide for a reclassification of railway postal clerks.

Section 9, granting a slight increase of rural letter carriers' pay.

Section 10, for experimental mail service in villages having post offices of the second and third class.

Section 11, amending the law so as to include the Marine Corps among those who may be designated as naval mail clerks and assistants, and the provision in section 1 providing for the promotion of postal clerks and letter carriers and the ultimate increase of pay to railway postal clerks, are all self-explanatory and manifestly so just as to require no special discussion in this report.

PARCEL POST.

quire no special discussion in this report.

PARCEL POST.

Section 8 of this bill contains provisions in reference to mail matter of the fourth class. Under existing law we have a general parcel post fixing the postal rate at 1 cent an ounce with a limit of 4 pounds for mail matter of the fourth class (merchandise). This is an ounce and not a pound rate.

By the terms of the International Postal Convention the people of 23 foreign countries may now transmit fourth-class matter (merchandise) through our mails at the rate of 12 cents a pound with a limit of 11 pounds. This is not an ounce rate, but a pound rate. This bill provides for a similar pound rate and limit for the use of our people in our mails that is given by us to foreign countries. The section does not provide for the rate on a fraction of a pound, but for a flat pound rate to a limit of 11 pounds at 12 cents a pound, and each fraction of a pound over 1 pound carried under this section would cost 12 cents. The ounce rate law now in force is not repealed by this section and there is no inconsistency or conflict in the two acts that would operate as a repeal of the ounce postal section by implication. So that one desiring to send a package of less weight than a pound through the mails can do so at the rate of 1 cent an ounce. Thus far the parcelpost question seems sufficiently clear to assure us against a loss of revenue and detriment to any business conditions in its application.

One of the most difficult questions connected with proposed postal progress arises with the suggestion to create a general unlimited parcel post for the transportation of merchandise at a flat rate of 8 cents a pound or less, with a limit of 11 pounds or a greater number of pounds.

The advocates of this proposition insist that the rate on fourth-class matter (merchandise) was at one time 8 cents a pound with no loss of revenue, but an increase of revenue; that the zone system of transportation charges used by the express companies is unnecessary and cumbersome; that express

The eponents of a general unlimited pareel jost insist that it will tend to concentrate business in the large cittes and be indurious to rural communities and small towns and cities; that it is a step in the wrong direction—paternalistic and dangerous in its tendencies; that it would ereate an enormous deficit in the Post Office Department; that it would revolutionize the commercial system in the United States; that it would destroy the prosperity of innumerable country towns and villages, and therefore must be regarded as a menace to the welfare of all the people; that it is class legislation in that it discriminates against the country merchant and favors the great retail mail-order houses; that ciple and unfair in practice; and they further insist that a rural parcel post.

The most of people living in the country and engaged in agriculture and other pursuits, so far as we can secure information, and the large-post law. The country merchant and nearly all merchants of the smaller cities and towns oppose the law. This seems to be the alignment. Self-interest, the mainspring of most of our actions, seems to be commanding in both factions. We do not think that the advantages friends claim, nor that the disadvantages would be nearly so great as its enemies fear.

The necessity for conservative legislation in view of such a contention and division among the people is apparent. We should seek to may arise from any proposed legislation in the interests of the masses of the whole people. Laws should bear, as nearly as possible, equally and justiy on all classes under all conditions. We have heard much restimony, very interesting in its details, but for the most part from the setting very resting the second of the search people is apparent. We should seek to may all self-seek under all conditions. We have heard much restimony very interesting in its details, but for the most part from the advantage of the whole people. Laws should bear, as nearly as possible, equally and justiy on all classes under all conditions. We

Mr. MOON of Tennessec. In explanation of the first section of this parcel-post provision that establishes the pound rate of 12 cents, it is assumed that it will not induce much mail matter of the fourth class. If one desires to send a single pound for delivery over a railroad line and a rural route, the rate would be 12 cents to the office or delivery place and 5 cents on the rural delivery route, or 17 cents, under this act. the present law it could be carried direct for 16 cents. Under

If the package weighed a pound and eight ounces it could be carried for 24 cents under the present law. It would cost the same under the proposed law, as all fractions of a pound pay pound rates. There is little or no advantage to the sender of packages up to 4 pounds under this section over the old act. If you desired to send three pounds and an ounce, the charge would be 4S cents, and 3 pounds and 1 ounce under the existing law would cost 40 cents. Mailable matter would not often exceed the limit of 4 pounds in weight unless very compact, as the requirements of the rules and regulations as to the size and shape of packages mailable would usually prevent this. Then, change in the present parcel-post law by this provision, but only to equalize as far as possible the pound rates between the citizen and the foreigner.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Certainly. Mr. KENDALL. I would inquire how many steel cars are now under construction, if the gentleman is aware of that fact? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I can not tell the gentleman without looking through the report. When we get to that item I will take pleasure in explaining it.

Mr. KENDALL. And also how long a time will be required before the expiration of the contract?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Nineteen hundred and seventeen, I think. Most of the cars now under construction are partly steel, underframe, but after the year 1917 it is hoped that the House will order that they be built all of steel.

Mr. Chairman, there are a great many of the people of the United States who do not have city delivery or rural delivery of mail. They are people who live at second and third class post offices, who are entitled to the benefit of these mail facilities. This bill makes a suggestion to the House that the Postmaster General shall, with the small amount of money appropriated in the bill for that purpose, experiment and determine how these people may be best served and what the cost of the service will be, and whether it be wise to inaugurate it.

In the administration of the affairs of the Government it has been deemed, as a matter of discipline on the part of the department, that the employees of the Government of the United States, whatever be their complaint either as to the service they are engaged in, the manner in which they are treated, or anything else affecting the public service, shall not have the right to consult their Senators and Representatives in Congress for redress of the wrongs and grievances of which they complain. It is possible that if this great department were under a military service, such discipline might be wise; but this committee is of opinion that it does not in any manner facilitate or benefit the service, nor does it in any way bring the employees of the Government closer to those who are immediately above them. to deny them this right. On the contrary, it creates a hostility between the chiefs in the office and the men who are in the ranks of the service. This committee has provided in a section of the bill a remedy for this situation, granting to the employee of the Government the right to be heard upon any grievance that he has, the right to be heard before he shall be dismissed from the service, and the right, most sacred of all his rights, to appeal to his Senators and Representatives for protection, without the possibility of discharge because of so doing.

There are other minor features of new law which will readily appeal to you upon the reading, but which it is unnecessary for me now to discuss. There is, however, one proposition in this bill that I know all Members view with more trepldation than anything that has reached you for quite awhile, one proposition about which I think Congressmen have been more unhappy than anything I have seen in the last 10 or 12 years, and I know right now that if every one of you were to vote your sentiments without your constituents knowing about it, you would say that this proposition should not be heard until after the next election. [Laughter.] But we can not help it. We have to bring it before you, and if the Committee on Rules will make it in order, gentlemen may answer to their constituents whether they want a parcel post, whether they want a general parcel post, or a parcel post limited to the rural route, and the character of the post that they desire. There are two sides to this question, and they are both pretty warm sides. If gentlemen present could see the tens of thousands of demands from the merchants of the United States that no kind of parcel post be inaugurated, and then if they could see the tens upon tens of thousands of demands on the part of the farmers of the United States that a parcel post shall be inaugurated, they would readily understand how this committee felt in approaching a question upon which there was so great a division. The report, question upon which there was so great a division. on pages 8, 9, and 10, discusses the question. I shall not take the time of the House to review the questions presented in the report for consideration. I desire to say briefly, however, that with the many obstacles presented on one side to any enactment at all, and the demands upon the other that the committee have felt that the features which they here present in this bill were the only wise ones to be presented at this time. The merchants of the country say that if a general parcel post is enacted their business is to be destroyed, because the farming communities of the country, under a low rate of postage, will send to the great cities, far away from the seat of business and location where they live for their goods and merchandise; that it will too, the large packages could go cheaper by freight, if not by express, than by mail. It was not intended to make any radical ment and growth of small and rural communities; and that it will be practical concentration or centralization of the trade of the country in the vast commercial centers of the country, and therefore injuriously affect not only the merchants themselves, but a vast majority of people who have commercial relations with the local country merchants.

Upon the other hand, the farmers say that they are entitled, as a matter of right, to patronize that market which gives them the cheapest goods and that they are entitled, as a matter of right, to have that legislation from the Congress of the United Sates that will enable them to reach any market of the United States in which it may be beneficial for them to trade, and that we have no moral right in the interest of mercantile interests, locally, to deprive them of the benefits to which they feel they are entitled in an all-American market. These are the questions, briefly, with which we had to deal.

Again, it is said that the United States, under the postal conventions, permits 23 foreign countries to send mail through the United States to the extent of 11 pounds at 12 cents per pound. while it requires the American citizen to pay at the rate of 1 cent an ounce, or 16 cents per pound, for mail carried in the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have read very carefully the report of the committee—I suppose prepared by the chairman—and I find that he says in his report, under the subhead of "parcel post," this:

The ounce-rate law now in force is not repealed by this section.

Meaning by that that the old rate of 1 cent an ounce on parcels up to 4 pounds in weight remains in the law. Now, if that be true, I want to ask the gentleman this: If the provision in the bill as it now stands becomes law, and I as a citizen walk up to a post-office window with a 14-ounce package with 12 cents in stamps on it, the clerk will say, "You have not paid sufficient postage on your 14-ounce package by putting 12 cents in stamps on it." If I then go around the corner and add a couple of ounces of sand to my package and again present it to the clerk, will not that clerk, under the law as it is proposed by this bill, then say, "Twelve cents is enough." In other words, as this law is constructed are not we providing, in a system where we pay for the carrying of mail by weight, for sending a higher weight package for a lesser sum than we pay for a lesser weight package in the same system? Is not that true?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will explain it to the gentleman in a moment. I am about proceeding to discuss that point.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is not that the fact under this system?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not quite catch the gentleman's last proposition about the 2 ounces of sand.

Mr. MURDOCK. This is the proposition, that if a person presents a 14-ounce package at the post-office window with 12 cents in stamps upon it, under this law the clerk would say, if the old 1 cent an ounce law now stands, as the gentleman says it does, "No; 12 cents will not carry this 14-ounce package; you will have to put 14 cents on this 14-ounce package." I can take the same package, add 2 ounces of sand or anything else to it and bring my package up to 16 ounces, present it, and then the clerk will say, "Twelve cents is now sufficient." In other words, under the ounce and pound rates the gentleman has in this bill it will take 14 cents to carry a 14ounce package and it will take 12 cents to carry a 16-ounce package?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will answer the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. MURDOCK. This report says clearly that the old rate of a cent an ounce is to remain the rate.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand that. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman's question in the remarks I was about to make before he asked the question. The committee felt that inasmuch as foreign governments had the right to send mall through the United States at the rate of 12 cents per pound that the same rate ought to be accorded to the American citizen. Now, I am going to be entirely frank with this House on that question. The proposition put in this bill permitting mail to be carried on the same terms that it is carried under the international convention is not put there to cover nor was it intended to be an answer to the demand for a general parcel post in the United States. It was more to meet the argument than anything else that we were giving to the foreigner that which we did not give to the American citizen through the mails. do not think that this proposition of 12 cents a pound is going to be of material benefit to anybody, for the reason that it is a pound rate and not an ounce rate. It does not provide for fractions of pounds. It provides for pounds only. It does not repeal the law that provides for the ounce rate. That law is not inconsistent with the statute which we are proposing. They can be administered together without conflict, as one is for the ounce and the other is for the pound.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I trust the gentleman will wait until I get through with this. I can not yield any further now. Now, suppose you want to send anything under a pound. have got the ounce rate, and you can send it under that if you If you want to pay at the pound rate, we take it that in construing the laws together the department would hold that if anything less than a pound were offered it could go at the rate of a pound; but when you cross the pound mark, there you come to the two statutes, one fixing the rate by the ounce and the other by the pound, and the pound rate can not be severed; it can not be divided into fractions,

The ounce rate will have no longer an application, because you have passed to the pound limit. Therefore if you carried a pound and an ounce it would cost you 24 cents. It will be cheaper decidedly to use the other statute. There is no reason why it should not do it. It is an even-pound proposition without any fraction whatever. The ounce proposition is on the fraction. It may be the gentleman's proposition is correct, but I hardly think it would be in construing the two statutes together. I do not think this section is of great value. It will only cost the American citizen the same rate as it costs the foreigner and give us a pound rate instead of an ounce rate, but does not affect the existence of the pound rate. Suppose you take 3 pounds and a fraction at 12 cents a pound. pounds would be 36 cents, and the fraction would be the same as a pound. It would be 48 cents. Suppose you take 3 pounds a fraction under the old rate and it would be 49 So there would be no difference in it until you reach the 4-pound proposition. When you have reached the 4-pound limit, then you have reached the limit where it is cheaper to send by freight than to use the mails of the United States, because we are advised in the ordinary zone limit that the express companies fix they will really carry a package of 11 pounds for about 85 or 90 cents. It would be cheaper, however, if you were shipping across the continent to use the mail instead of express.

Mr. NORRIS. If it does not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask him at this point whether he could give any figures as to the actual cost as compared with the receipts of our foreign mail; that is, international packages. Do we make money or lose money under the present law?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is hard to tell whether we do The settlements made by foreign governments with the United States are a system of balances, I understand. They take one against the other. I am not prepared to say. I would not be prepared except on information from the department, and I have received no information from them except that we are three years behind in obtaining the balance.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the department itself does not k Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It has not so advised us Then the department itself does not know-

Mr. NORRIS (continuing). What that particular system is costing us?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that while we have no accurate information from the department, the impression I have from what has been stated there is that it does not cost the Government anything. I mean that the Government makes a profit by it, perhaps, in the general balances. In other words, if the gentleman wants to know whether, in my opinion, or not we can transport mails to the United States outside the zone rate at 12 cents a pound, I believe we can.

Mr. NORRIS. I was anxious to know, because it bears on the other question somewhat, whether in these longer hauls from one nation to another it costs the Government, or Governments, more to transport the packages than they actually get from the persons who pay the postage?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I am not prepared to give the gentleman accurate information on that question.

Now, I will proceed to a brief discussion of the other sections of the bill, but before passing from this section I want to be frank with the House on this question. I do not believe this first section establishes an effectual general parcel post. not believe it is going to be of any material benefit either to the farmer or to the merchant. It is put there to equalize the foreign and domestic proposition in a measure, upon this question, and more, as I said before, than anything else, to meet the suggestion that we were treating the foreigner better than our own people.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I understood the remark of the chairman to be that for 1 pound it would be 12 cents.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. What would it be for 17 ounces?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. For 17 ounces it would be 24 cents. Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. So that increasing the weight by 1 ounce it adds 12 cents more?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. It does not interfere with the ounce-rate proposition. This is a pound proposition, and not an ounce proposition.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. That was a continuation of the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murdock].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I notice the gentleman stated, and I also find in the report of the committee, that this provision for the pound rate does not interfere with the ounce rate now in

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think a proper construction of the act would interfere with it; no.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would like a little further explanation in reference to that, for this reason: I observe, in section 8, that postage shall be paid on matter of the fourth class at the rate of 12 cents a pound, as therein provided. Now, the only exception made is with reference to matter carried on the rural routes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Exactly. The gentleman will observe this, that this is a pound rate, and it is not an ounce rate. They are under entirely distinct laws and are distinct proposi-There is no conflict, in my judgment, between the two statutes. Of course, I do not know what the department may hold about it. I do know that when the question was first submitted to the department as to what their construction would be, the construction that the department adhered to was that which I have given. Since then I have been advised by one portion of the department that there is some doubt as to what the construction ought to be. But I do not think, myself, that there will be any great trouble on that account, even if the department should conclude and construe the act so that the fraction of a pound would assume the ounce rate. If that should be applied to it-instead of the pound rate being applied to the fractions-then the benefits to be derived under this act are still not of very great service to the people, in my judgment.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman's proposed bill establishes the pound rate elsewhere than on the rural routes, and there the ounce rate is established?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; in another section the other applies.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would the gentleman state the objection to making a simple rate of three-fourths of a cent an ounce on a simple package? Would there be any objection to that?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There might be an objection to that. I do not know of any serious objection to that if the House desired to do it. But the committee had not thought that was the best way to present the matter to the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield a little further?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What I had in mind was this, that having fixed the rate per pound, would not that wipe out the

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, no; I think not. I think the ounce proposition stands by itself, and the pound proposition stands by itself. Under the general rules of construction they are to be construed together. Where there is a conflict between the two acts the first act will yield to the latter. But there is no material conflict between them, and there is no construction that can be made of either act, I think, that will destroy the

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. If the package comes from Europe to this country at 12 cents a pound, and if it is 1 pound, the rate is 12 ounces; but if it is 18 ounces, what would the rate be?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Under the pound rate?

Mr. LOBECK. No; coming from Germany, say, if it were 18

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That comes under the international agreement. That would be 24 cents.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, Has the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads considered the propriety of establishing a four and three-quarters rate for the purpose of avoiding confusion?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No. The committee did not think that there would be any conflict between the two laws on that account. In fact, the committee did not care to establish that. It simply met the proposition that the American people were entitled to the same pound rate that the foreigner has.

Mr. KENDALL. I wondered if the gentleman had considered that in connection with the Post Office authorities.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have heard it charged in the newspapers— but I am unable to read into the law just where the charge rests-that under this provision, as written in this bill, a farmer could not send a package from the farm to a man in town, but that the man in the town could send the package to the man out on the farm. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee in that connection this question—

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman ought to have denied that when he heard it as a member of the committee.

Mr. MURDOCK. How is that?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I say the gentleman ought to have denied that as a member of the committee when he heard it.

Mr. MURDOCK. I went through the bill again, and I found myself puzzled as to this. I will ask the gentleman what would happen in a ruling in a case like this: A farmer starts a package from his farm addressed to John Jones, living at 220 Pennsylvania Avenue. Now, when that package comes from the farm to the post office here in Washington, is that package, say a 3-pound package, deliverable by a city carrier? In other words, will this rural parcel rate enter into the city service? I can not tell from a reading of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think it will.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman thinks the addressee would have to come to the post office and get his package?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further on that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. LEWIS. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the test of admissibility to the mall service under the rural-delivery section, as well as under the 12-cents-a-pound section, is that it is mailable under the fourth-class law?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Unquestionably.
Mr. LEWIS. Now, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether there is anything produced on the farm that is mailable under the fourth-class law?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, yes.

Mr. LEWIS. What?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Bulbs, and potatoes, and a few things like that are mailable, and the department can extend that construction to suit itself if it finds that the legislative intent justifies it.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to suggest, in justification of my question, that I have gone over the list

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not believe there is any holding that chickens can go, but there are a good many other things.

Mr. LEWIS. Why potatoes and not chickens?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know. The ruling has not gone that far. They may reach that yet.

Mr. KENDALL. Perhaps the question has never been pre-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Probably the question has never been presented.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that under the fourth-class law, defining the mailability of articles, nothing produced on the farm except dried fruit and queen" bees is subject to reception, either under the ruraldelivery clause or the other.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think that is a mistake. They have held that bulbs, and potatoes, and things of that sort are mailable. Still, that is a matter for the department. would not undertake to make a list of things that should be mailable as fourth-class matter. That is a matter of depart-mental regulation, and I assume that under the term of "general merchandise" anything that is held to be salable, of a mercantile nature, whether a farm product or anything else, would unquestionably go if the Congress in the passage of a law indicated that intent. I am sure that the department would give that construction in that case.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that my understanding of the situation is that all those things are excluded by the very definitions of this bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think not. That will be a matter of construction by the department.

Mr. KENDALL. The department has already acted on these things.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Passing from that section, to which we have already given too much time—

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I suppose I am woefully ignorant about this, but I have been submitting inquiries to my friends near me, and they seem to be about as ignorant as I am. I want to pursue the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] about a package coming in from the country, directed to 220 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C., and I want to inquire why, when that package comes to the post office here, it should not go right on to 220 Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Because 220 Pennsylvania Avenue is not on any rural route, and the section provides for the delivery of goods on these particular routes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I suppose that settles it.

[Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in framing this provision for a parcel post on rural routes, did the committee—
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Before the gentleman asks that question will be permit me to discuss for a moment the second section, and then I will come to that and answer his inquiry if I am able.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It will be observed that this bill contains a section that asks for a commission to investigate and determine the propriety and wisdom of the establishment of a general parcel post. The reasons are given in the report why this commission should be established. The report says:

why this commission should be established. The report says:

The necessity for conservative legislation in view of such a contention and division among the people is apparent. We should seek to secure all the advantages possible and avoid all the disadvantages that may arise from any proposed legislation in the interests of the masses of the whole people. Laws should bear as nearly as possible equally and justly on all classes under all conditions. We have heard much testimony, very interesting in its details, but for the most part from those who express an opinion from a general view of general conditions. We need specific facts and not merely opinions on which to pass intelligent and satisfactory legislation. It would seem essential that we know how this innovation in our postal system will affect our revenue; what additional burdens we must assume in increased numbers of employees, and the increased railway and carriage pay; whether a flat rate can be established for the whole of the United States or not and at what figure; whether it would be wise to adopt the zone system of transportation and pay for carriage or not; how far this extra service would interfere with the handling of first, second, and third class mail matter; the probable losses and profits under different rates; the effect on the centralization of trade; whether the express companies could under one system or another secure the short hauls and leave the long and expensive hauls to the Government; whether it would first be best to condemn the express companies contracts with the railroads or not, and use them, or to force the railroad companies to equal rates for the Post Office Department that is granted the express companies, or to pursue either of these courses; to know the tendency of the system to read and sunfain monopolies, and its effect on the commercial and farming interests of the country. On these matters there should be some definite information (in the interest of the general public) for use in the enactment of a wise law on the

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In a moment. Now, gentlemen, it is impossible for us to tell. Your committee has no means of knowing, at least no information has been brought before us. that will enable us to tell how a general parcel post, covering the whole of the United States, without a zone rate and at a particular figure, carrying parcels from New York to California. will affect your revenues. We do not know whether we are going to get the long hauls or the short hauls. We do know that to-day, under the contract between the express companies and the railroad companies, the express companies pay about three-quarters of a cent per pound wheelage to the railroad companies, and that they have some divisions of net profits of which we are not informed, and that the Government of the United States can not get a contract, or has no contract that we can use, for less than 62 or 7 cents a pound. It is impossible for the Government, paying that rate of transportation and the cost of handling the mails, to compete with an express company in combination with a railroad company at a rate amounting to only one-sixth or one-seventh as much.

In my opinion, before we establish this parcel post, we must obtain information of an accurate and definite nature from men before whom experts will come and give testimony that will justify legislation here. We must have a contract with the railroad company that is equal in its benefits to that given to the express companies, or the Government must exercise its sovereign power to take control of the express companies by condemnation. [Applause.] You can not deal with a great question like this hastily. You may plunge into the midst of it to-day on a proposition for 6 cents or 7 cents for carrying packages of 10, 15, or 20 pounds throughout the United States and involve the Government in debt to the extent of $100,000,000, a You must know what you are doing before you undertake it; you must have knowledge, you must have information on the subject before you undertake an enactment of this kind.

I know the pressure is coming strong on you from all the farmers of the United States demanding the passage of this bill or that bill or the other bill, but pray, what do the farmers in the United States know about it more than we do? We want to subserve their interests as a part of our people. There is no part of our great American people that deserves more consideration than do the farmers of the United States at the hands of this Congress, but in subserving the great mass of our fellow countrymen we do not want to strike down the interests of any other class, we do not want to paralyze the commercial interests of any section of our country. Let us know, let us be certain what we are about, and then let us proceed to the enactment.

They say that this bill is an entering wedge. Surely, if it is anything, that is all it is. It does not offer much to the farmer, but what it does offer is indicative of the fact that we propose an investigation that will give more, and in giving more we do not propose to paralyze any industry of our country if we can avoid it. [Applause.]

That is the reason for this commission. Your inquiry should be made complete, your information should be satisfactory not only as to the effect upon your revenues, but upon your commercial affairs. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

I thank the gentleman from Tennessee. Mr. LEWIS. committee has in its so-called rural clause gone into what might be called the rural parcel post, and the rates proposed are 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound up to and including 11 pounds, making 25 cents for 11 pounds.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, I want to ask the chairman of the committee upon what data, if any, these rates were made? And I want to suggest, so that he can meet the point in his reply, that my studies lead me to believe that the rates established for the for rural purposes and some 250 miles of railway haul besides.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Maryland is perhaps much better informed on this question than I, as he has been a student of economics along that line. The reason for the establishment of the rural parcel post is apparent. In the establishment of a general parcel post and the handling of the mail matter the Government would have to go into a system something like the express system. It would have to increase its employees; it would have to have its agents and fix the zones of transportation; it would, in fact, take over an immense express business, covering all the States of the Union. But in the rural parcel post we do not have to add a single dollar of expense in order to have the law carried out. have our routes established; we have our carriers and their equipment, all together sufficient to carry out the rural proposition. And, then, the rural proposition is limited to the route upon which the service begins and must end. We therefore can establish the rural parcel post without an additional dollar of expense to the people of the United States and without incurring the possibility of these troubles that would arise from the establishment of a general system covering the whole coun-The difference is, as I hope the gentleman will observe, very wide between a general parcel post and a mere local parcel This is established as an experiment.

The department estimates that this rural parcel post, although an experiment, costing nothing more, excepting perhaps a slight raise in the salary of the rural carriers—this system, over 42,000 routes in the United States, would yield us seven to ten million dollars' profit annually, helping to remove the deficit that has heretofore existed in the establishment and maintenance of the rural delivery routes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman tell us just how he gets that estimate?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There are 42,000 routes, and if you carry a full 11-pound package four times over each one, three hundred and sixty-odd times a year, they get more than that Mr. MONDELL. Now will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from

Mr. MONDELL. Did the committee in considering the establishment of a rural free delivery parcel post consider the feasibility of extending such parcel post to star routes?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We did not think it wise to do anything more than we have done at this time-to establish it for that rural route and limiting it to the matter arising and ending for delivery on the route.

In other words, to be entirely frank with the gentleman, we wanted to touch this question just as lightly as we could to get it into the House, and then let the House determine what it wanted to do in regard to the matter and by its united wisdom do the best we can for farmers, merchants, and all citizens.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the committee consider first that there are regions where there are practically no rural free-delivery routes?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It did.

Mr. MONDELL. There are entire States that have not over a dozen such routes, but which are covered from one end to the other with star routes, which are for all practical purposes rural free-delivery routes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I concede that the gentleman's suggestion is a wise one, and one that ought to be carried into full effect when this rural-route matter is permanently established; but this is only an experiment to last two years, and we thought it ought to be made on the established routes and not upon the star routes.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee, then, did not consider the extension of the system to the star routes?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, no.

Mr. MONDELL. And, therefore, there were no reasons given

Mr. MONDELL. And, therefore, there were no reasons given why the system should not be extended?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; and I think there is no sound reason why it should not be extended to the star routes, where there are no rural routes, ultimately, if the system is adopted; but we are experimenting for two years on the rural routes.

Mr. MONDELL. Why not at the same time broaden the experiment a little to routes of practically the same character?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know that there would be

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know that there would be any serious objection to that, but it is a matter that the committee did not take into consideration.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Certainly.
Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to clear up a point, if the gentleman will permit, on the exact meaning of the law. Can a man under this bill, on a rural route, send a package from the farm to the city post office?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. He can, if that city post office is the end or the beginning of that particular rural route.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is what I mean. The starting of the rural route is to be construed as on the rural route.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Most of them start from the cities.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the gentleman holds that that package having reached the city post office, no matter what its weight, can not get into the City Delivery Service.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think not under the terms of this

Mr. MURDOCK. If out here in the city of Washington some citizen places on the collection box a 3-pound package, with the parcel-rate postage on it, addressed to some man on a rural route in Virginia, is the collector under this law prohibited from collecting that package for entrance into the mails as a parcel going to the rural route in Virginia?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. He would put it into the mail as general mailable matter, and if it did not have the rate of postage on it that it ought to have under the general law it would be held for that purpose. If he wanted to get it on the rural route and obtain the benefit of the low rate of postage, he would have to deposit it somewhere on that route.

Mr. MURDOCK. Would not the gentleman be under the necessity of taking his package to this city post office from which the route starts?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If he wanted to get the benefit of the low rate, he would.

Mr. MURDOCK. But he could not get that low rate by placing it on a post box out here in the city.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think he would; but the postmaster might hold that the box was a part of the means of collection for that particular post office and that wherever a box was placed that was the post office for the purpose of mailing matter. That is a matter of construction in the department, and I would not undertake to say how they would hold.

Mr. MURDOCK. There is another question I would like to ask the gentleman. I do not think the committee considered it at all. That is, in nearly all of the parcels arrangements in other countries some provision is contained as to the dimensions of packages. There is no such provision in this bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There is no such provision here.

Mr. MURDOCK. Why not?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Because it is not necessary to put it in the bill. The department already has a rule as to the dimensions of packages, merchandise, as to size.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is a very indefinite proposition as to being nondeliverable.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. There are a great many things that ought to be in a bill providing for parcel posts that Yes. There are a great many we did not deem it proper to consider or place in a bill that merely provided for an experiment along that line over established rural routes. The matters of which the gentleman speaks are matters of administration and not an item of legislation to be decided-

Mr. MURDOCK. However, the parcel arrangement in other countries absolutely fixes the maximum size of the packages. I think the Japanese provision is 3 by 3 feet, whereas under this law it would be possible, if the feathers were light enough, to send a freight car full.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I think if the gentleman will consult the regulations with reference to fourth-class mail matter that he will find specified just what the size of the package shall be by regulation, and this provision simply extends the fourth-class mail packages to packages weighing 11 pounds instead of 4 pounds; that is all. The size of the package in the present law is expressly stated.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think there is absolutely nothing in the law or regulations as at present constituted which regulates the dimension of any package. It is merely an indefinite one.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, there are rules in the department on that subject.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Does the gentleman understand there is anything in this bill to prevent, say, for instance, a firm like Sears, Roebuck & Co., of Chicago, establishing an agency of their own at a village or city wherever there are rural routes and send their goods there to be sent out?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; this committee would not put anything in the bill to prevent Sears, Roebuck & Co. or anybody else carrying on business in any way they saw fit. It is not the purpose of the committee, and we do not care what benefits Sears, Roebuck & Co. get out of it, or anybody else. just proposing to make this experiment to determine the final wisdom of a parcel post, general in its character.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will. Mr. AKIN of New York. Is it not a fact that the American Express Co. have agencies all through the country where they purchased goods to deliver to these people in the country, just as well as Sears, Roebuck & Co. or Montgomery Ward & Co. do?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know whether that is a fact or not; they never came about me. Mr. AKIN of New York. I have made purchases through the American Express Co. Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will. Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. I understood the gentleman in his colloquy with the gentleman from Kansas to say that you could not ship a package from one rural route to another rural route, both from the same post office, at the benefit of the 2-cent rate.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Well, I think that is the meaning of this section, that it is confined to the particular route upon which it originated. That is the reason why the price is so You will observe, gentlemen, that this bill does not propose to establish a complete parcel post. It is very far from it. It proposes only to obtain by experiment and as a result of a commission the facts upon which we must determine later whether such a system, such an innovation in our postal system, shall be inaugurated or not. Now, if you will permit me to pass away from this question-

Mr. FORNES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. FORNES. Does the Government assume the responsibility of total loss of the package? Suppose the 11 pounds are in value $150. The sender will have it registered and the registration will cost him 10 cents. Now, we are aware that the delivery of packages through the rural route is attended with greater danger of loss than it would be in small towns or a city, and in other words, suppose, as has been stated I believe, that it would not require additional equipment, and that in the rural route there might be 50 packages weighing 11 pounds each. Would it be possible with the present equipment of that rural carrier to take the 550 pounds without considerable additional expense?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Where he will be overloaded very heavily there might be some additional expense, but there is no likelihood of there being so much weight for transportation, and if there were one good team could carry it. As to the first inquiry which the gentleman made, I desire to reply that the Government does not insure packages beyond the sum of $30,

I believe.

Mr. FORNES. That is the limit, $30?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes, sir.
Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not understand that these inquiries are captious, because they are not. I understand from the provisions of this bill a patron living on route 1, for instance, could not send a package over his route through the local post office to a customer on route 2. Am I correct in that?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. KENDALL. Suppose one patron of the route lives 3 miles from the post office, and desires to transmit a package to a patron living 7 miles farther on the road; he may do that? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, it would not be possible for a farmer to send another farmer a comb of honey, would it?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know what the department would rule about honey as mallable matter. You can not tell that in advance.

Mr. MURDOCK. One absolutely could not. , Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume that the department stores would very largely avail themselves of this 5 cents per pound rural route provision. May I ask whether if any large deposits of parcels and packages were made by a department store in the center of a large city, it would be necessary to de-posit in the main city post office, or carry to a starting point on the rural route?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not understand exactly what the gentleman means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it be necessary for the store to deposit in a city post office or from a starting point on the rural route?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think if under this provision they carry packages, whether they start in one city or in another, it will be necessary to make this delivery to a postmaster on the route or at the starting point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Within the city limits?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In the city limits or country either. It has got to be delivered on the particular route.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman thought of the possibility of the disposal of the carrier wagons by the large stores and the taking over of wagons by the Government?
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I hardly understand what the gentleman means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is highly probable if the department stores avail themselves of this provision there would be a very large exchange of delivery wagons. That is to say, the department store would be relieved of the delivery service, which the Post Office Department would take on.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The Post Office Department would not take it on outside of the main office, I take it. I think the gentleman is mistaken about the effect it would have in one view of the situation. For instance, if you were going to send from the city of Philadelphia, where the gentleman resides, to a rural route somewhere in the State of Maryland, it would not pay the department store, in my opinion, to ship to the town and then have to pay the extra postage from there over the rural The cost of postage in the first instance at 12 cents a pound would be cheaper.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The eighth section of the bill provides:

That on each and all rural mail delivery routes of the United States the postmaster at the starting point of such route shall until June 30,

1914, receive and deliver to the carrier or carriers of said routes all articles, parcels, or packages not prohibited to the mails, etc., that the carrier shall receive—

And so forth.

Now, I want to make myself clear to the gentleman, because I regard this as a very vital matter in connection with this whole parcel-post question. The great volume of this business will undoubtedly come from the department stores. Now, where is the post office to take on this business that goes onto the rural

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. At some initial point or some point along the line of the particular route. It can not go from one route into another.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the department store deliver these packages in a post-office box at the corner?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think so. I think the sender would have to put it in the post office. I do not know what the department would rule on that subject. That is a matter that is not for construction under this act. The proper construction of this act would not involve that proposition in any way, and it is a matter for construction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman sees how important it is in the matter of expense. The delivery service of a large store is a large item of expense. If the department store rids itself of the horses and wagons which it necessarily must maintain for this rural delivery as well as for the city service and the Government takes over that business, it becomes a large item.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think the department would so hold. I think if they put the goods in a delivery box out in the city it would have to be accompanied, under the general law, not with a special rural delivery stamp, but general postage.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The words." delivered at the starting point" would seem to imply—Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The starting point would be in the city post office, I think, and not in the box.

Mr. KENDALL. In the post office?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In the post office.
Mr. KENDALL. The question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is whether the Government would be obliged to col-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The second section provides that the Postmaster General will make the regulations necessary, and so forth.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Assuming that I am the owner of a large department store, which I am not, that I have to deliver 5,000 small packages to-night to farmers, who ordered them by mail, do I send to the postmaster of my city to come and get these packages, or do I send them to the post office?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If you want to send them under general postage, under the postage provided by general law, you must deliver them in the packages, I take it, and the department wagons, the Government wagons, would take them out. But if you wanted to avail yourself of the special low rate for the rural route, I think your department store would have to take those packages to the post office or deliver them to the carrier somewhere along the route; but, as said before, it will be subject to construction and regulation by the Postmaster Gen-

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I put them in the box on the corner, the Government must provide facilities for the large quantity that I have to deliver every day

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I take it they would make you pay the extra postage. I do not know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question. Why is it necessary to apply these reduced rates—that is to say, up to 5 cents a pound on parcels—to the rural routes only? Why should not the city dweller, who is perhaps no more favorably situated financially than the dweller in the country, be excluded from the advantages of a lower rate or a 5 cents per pound rate?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Because we want to deal later, not now, with the city citizen. We are dealing now with the country citizen on this proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the proposition is simply an experiment to be tried out on the country dweller, and the city dweller is to take his chances in the future?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentlemen in the city will be provided for, no doubt, by the commission.

Mr. KENDALL. They are already provided for. Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to these parcels delivered by department stores, I understand there is nothing in this bill which enables them to avail of the long haul, say, from Baltimore to California, at this 5 cents a pound rate?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Nothing in the world. If he wants to ship his goods he must pay the postage under the general law. But he is entitled, of course, to the benefit of the low rate of the rural route when he puts his matter on that route for delivery on that route, as provided for in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the long haul is left for the commission to provide for?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is a matter involved in the general proposition to be considered by the commission.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.
Mr. BORLAND. I notice that the law provides that these packages that the postmasters are authorized to receive are packages that are not prohibited by law to be mailed as falling under the classification of fourth-class mail matter. that include any perishable matter? For instance, something was said here a little while ago about a comb of honey. this parcel post there could be no delivery of that, could there?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The section provides for that under the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department. Under the general law, construing the meaning of merchandise entitled to be mailed under the old law, the department has had a very wide discretion and a wide latitude, and it has from time to time increased the number of articles that may properly be carried under it. I would assume, however, that the department in the exercise of its wisdom in determining this matter as an administrative proposition would not undertake to carry a matter that was perishable in its nature; certainly not very far.

Mr. BORLAND. This amendment would not cover, then, any such articles as poultry, or eggs, or butter, or any of the commodities that the farmer produces and deals in?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It might if the department so held, but by the terms of the act there is no provision for any specific thing. The act provides for that which is merchandise and legal fourth-class matter. It is largely a matter of construction by the department.

Mr. LEWIS. At that point, will the gentleman answer this question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; I will answer the gentleman from Maryland

Mr. LEWIS. What is included under fourth-class matter now has already been defined by the Postmaster General, and it does not include as many as 150 articles?

Mr. MOON of Tennesce. Yes; and the Postmaster General may extend it by construction. He has extended it from bulbs, to begin with, to 150 articles, such as the gentleman speaks of, and he may extend it still further so as to include 10,000 articles.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. My construction of what is mailable or not mailable depends on whether the article is or is not of a dangerous character or of such character as would be injurious to the mails.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Of course matter dangerous in character is not mailable at all.

Mr. BORLAND. Of course the gentleman from Tennessee understands that one of the great matters which commends the proposition of the parcel post to the farmer is that it would enable him to deliver to customers packages of farm products.

Mr. FINLEY. Then, if the articles would injure the mails in any way the department could, by regulation, exclude them, and if they would not injure the mails the department could admit

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. There is no limitation now as to the amount of weight that the rural carrier can carry, is there? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean the amount of load, for instance? Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. No; if the farmer wants the rural carrier to bring out 50 pounds of merchandise the carrier must do it?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The law does not require him to carry 50 pounds. The limit of mail matter is 4 pounds now. Whatever the rural carrier may carry beyond that is purely a matter of courtesy on the part of the carrier.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That is to say, the carrier is not limited as to the amount he can carry to the farmer?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, no; he is not limited as to the extent of his courtesy. The law does not deal with him except as to the mailable matter, the limit of which is 4 pounds.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then, there is not anything in this bill, as the gentleman understands it, that would repeal any portion of the existing law, as to what the rural carrier may carry.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The law now limits the rural carrier to 4 pounds in one package. This section provides for 11 pounds in one package.

Mr. GARNER. What the gentleman from Michigan has reference to is that it would not change the rule which gives the carrier the right to accommodate a farmer if he wants to.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Oh, no; there is nothing in the law on that.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Under the provision of this bill, if it should become a law, no post office in the United States would have to handle any more rural-delivery packages than went from that particular office to the patrons along the route, or originated on that particular route.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The carrier would have to handle the matter that originated at that office, and nothing more in the way of packages, except that he received on the route for delivery on the same route.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. So, if any one store were to sell 5,000 packages for delivery, they would have to be sold to the patrons of that particular office, accommodated by the rural routes out of that one office.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I would not undertake to say that. You can not limit the right of a citizen, wherever he lives, to use the mails of the United States. I do not believe this act It provides for matter delivered to the post would do that. office at the initial point and arising on the route, but the matter may be brought from a great distance to that initial point, and there be mailed. You could not prohibit a citizen of New York from delivering in any post office in the United States anything he wanted to, if it was mailable, and having it mailed there, and obtain the benefit of the rural rate on it.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. If 5,000 packages were to be mailed at any one point on a rural route, they would have to be addressed to the patrons of that particular office.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; they would have to be addressed to patrons of that route.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. And the person mailing them would have to deliver those 5,000 packages at that particular office?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. PROUTY. Is there anything in this law that would prevent a rural mail carrier from entering into a private contract to carry these packages at less than the rate received by the Government?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There is nothing on that subject in this statute.

Mr. PROUTY. Ought there not to be?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman will perhaps offer it.
Mr. PROUTY. If a mail carrier found he was not getting anything for carrying this mail, is there anything to prevent him offering to carry it for less than the amount of the postage, and in that way getting the benefit of the amount paid?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think the general law would deal pretty heavily with a carrier who violated the postal laws; but this is not a penal provision.

Mr. PROUTY. I understood the gentleman to say that this did not interfere with a carrier entering into a private arrangement-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. As an individual, I think not.
Mr. PROUTY. Suppose it costs 25 cents to send a package by mail, and the carrier says, "I will carry that package for you for 10 cents"?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If a rural carrier should make an arrangement that was in fraud of the revenues of the Government, I think he would be a criminal and be punished. did it simply as a matter of accommodation and not acting in his capacity as a carrier and not circumventing the rights of the Government, I think he would have a right to do that, of

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose he says, "I will take this out for you for nothing.'

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. He could not carry it as a mail carrier for nothing. He would have to take it back to the office and leave it there until there were stamps put on it.

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose he says, "I will carry this out for you for 10 cents"?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think he could do that. Mr. PROUTY. Suppose he should offer to carry it for 15

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not think he could do anything to violate the postal laws and regulations.

Mr. CARTER. That would be against the law.

Mr. PROUTY. It is not against the law for the carrier to offer to carry 15 pounds now.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not as an individual; but it is against the law for him to carry matter that is mailable and subject to postage, if the package does not exceed 4 pounds. As a matter of accommodation to the farmer, he can carry anything he wants to; but when it goes in as mailable matter, it is limited to 4 pounds.

Mr. PROUTY. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a special provision prohibiting rural carriers from doing

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. There might be. There are many things that might be hedged about in the law, but this is not a proposition of that sort; this is the inauguration of a system which we ought to be careful about; it is ground on which we should tread very lightly.

Mr. LOBECK. Why should not the rural carrier have the right to carry packages as the railroad company does, that also carries the mail?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If gentlemen are through asking me questions about the matter I should be glad to depart for a few moments from the consideration of postal matters to the discussion of some other matters.

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman permit one more ques-

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I have left that question, but if the gentleman wants to go back, I will yield.

Mr. JACKSON. I want to ask the gentleman what the reason was—I did not hear the previous questions—for not providing for the collection of these packages by the rural carriers when they are on the way to the post office?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This is a rural-route proposition.

There is a provision in the bill which permits the carriers to collect them on their routes.

Mr. JACKSON. I mean when the rural carrier is on the way back to the post office, why should he not take up packages and carry them to the post office and let them go back on the rural route the next day?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If they are on his route he has a right to carry them.

Mr. JACKSON. Why limit it to his route? Why not allow it to go on any other man's route?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Because we thought it wise to experiment on separate routes and not have the matter too much confused.

Mr. JACKSON. I can not see why that would not be extending the experiment.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The gentleman understands that the rural carrier can take up matter on the route going and coming if it is on the rural route.

Mr. JACKSON. That may be, although I doubt it, according to the language of the section. The language in the section is that the package shall be carried from the post office.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; the statute provides that he can take it anywhere on the route, and he can carry it and deliver it anywhere on the route.

Mr. JACKSON. On his route. That is the same question that was discussed a moment ago. If this is an experiment, why limit it to one route?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Because we want to see the effect of the experiment on each distinct and separate route without confusing it with any other. We wanted to make it as simple as possible.

Mr. JACKSON. Assuming that there are three routes from a small post office, what is the objection to allowing the carriers on route 1 to collect the mail, carry it to the post office for mailing so that it may go out on routes 2 and 3?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If it pays the extra postage when it gets to the post office, it can, but this low postage was intended to carry the mail over one route only. You can send things all over the country; it does not prohibit that, but it gives this additional benefit of this low rate for matter delivered on the route and carried over the routes of the patron.

Mr. JACKSON. If I understood the gentleman from Tennessee, he said that the Postmaster General might have authority to extend to the carrier authority to collect this mail.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The question was raised as to whether if matter that was intended for the rural route was delivered to a box in the city, the Government could take that up and send it to the post office, and then send it over a rural route, or whether the party that had the package would have to deliver it to the post office. I said for the purpose of securing a lower rate my idea would be that the department would hold that it would have to be delivered to the initial office, but that it was possible that the department might hold that you their thanks and appreciation for the consideration which wherever a delivery box was placed, that was constructively a delivery to the department when put in the box. But that is a matter of administration, and one which I would not undertake to determine.

Mr. JACKSON. I see no reason why, when carriers have their wagons and other equipment sufficient to carry packages out, they should not be allowed to collect them and bring them

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That may be, but the committee did not think it wise to cumber this measure with that suggestion.

Mr. JACKSON. Might it not result in lessening the number of packages mailed, and therefore the revenues collected under the experiment you seek to make?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. This is the first real opportunity that has come to me since the change of party power in the House to express the sense of appreciation and gratitude which my constituents feel to this body for legislation national in its character, but locally beneficial to them. For several Congresses past the rights of my constituents, in common with the general public interest, have been fully appreciated and recognized by Congress. You have been kind to me as a Representative of this constituency by placing me in positions where I might be of service to them as well as to the country; you have given me service upon the Committee on the Territories, upon the Rivers and Harbors Committee, upon two postal commissions—the result of whose labor was the saving of many millions of dollars to the country—and on the National Waterways Commission, and on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and finally assigned me to the chairmanship of this great committee. You have, at my request, enlarged the customhouse at Chattanooga, erected a post-office building at Cleveland, and authorized the erection of one at Winchester, and I hope that at no distant day you will authorize one for Athens, Madisonville, Sparta, McMinnville, and South Pittsburg, and other places in the district. You have improved the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, and on my motion added 1,000 acres of land to it.

This House has recently passed the bill I introduced, which I am sure the Senate will approve, establishing a brigade post at Fort Oglethorpe in this park; on my motion you have had constructed a road, at the expense of $50,000, from Lookout Mountain to Chickamauga National Military Park; you have made Chattanooga a port of entry; you have granted lands to the use of the State troops; you have granted the payment of a vast number of war claims to people and churches and lodges in my district; you have enabled me to have established rural routes throughout the congressional district, with free mail delivery in the counties; under unusual circumstances you permitted me to present and have passed in the House a bill to erect a lock and dam in the Tennessee River, which will save over a million dollars to the Government of the United States and secure navigation to the mountainous section of the river, and at the same time producing an electric power that will lessen greatly the cost of all articles manufactured in that section; and again, under most unusual circumstances, you permitted me to extend the time for the construction of this lock and dam in the Tennessee River as provided in the original bill; you have granted, during my services here, appropriations sufficient to complete improvements of the Hiwassee River for the full length of its navigable waters. This work has been completed and a surplus returned to the Treasury. You have granted appropriations during my service in the House to the extent of about $5,000,000 for the improvement of the Tennessee River. While a member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in 1909 I offered a resolution for the complete survey and improvement of the Tennessee River, which you kindly adopted and which became a part of the law in that bill. That survey has been made and the report of the engineers thereon filed with Congress, which is most exhaustive in its character and by the terms of which $6,700,000 is to be expended on the Tennessee River in the next five years for the completion of its improvement and the obtaining for all the river navigation "the year around," giving a depth of 6 feet from Paducah to Chattanooga and 3 feet from Chattanooga to Knoxville. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has approved this project, and it has been passed in the House of Representatives and will unquestionably become the law of the land. This is a great national improvement. The Tennessee River is the third or fourth greatest stream of the United States. The commerce that will be moved and benefits that will come from the perfect navigation of this great waterway will be greater to the people of the Tennessee Valley than any that can possibly come from any other source. I should feel derelict in the performance of my duties to the people I represent if I did not now express to you have shown them in all matters and the great public interest that you have manifested in the consummation of this great national project.

It has often been charged on the hustings and recently strongly suggested in speeches on the floor of this House that the States forming the late Confederacy were not fairly and justly dealt with in the matter of revenue by the Federal Government, and that they do not obtain the advantages in legislation that they are entitled to. This, no doubt, was true some years ago, but a careful examination of the statutes and the revenue receipts and disbursements will show that this condition no longer exists. When the Representatives from these States were more deeply interested in the discussion of party politics than in the material benefits to come to their people, the Representatives of the other sections of the country were looking after the material welfare of their States. For this reason in the sections that they represented rivers and harbors were opened up to the commerce of the country and public buildings were erected; but of late years by reason of continued service and experience of Representatives from the South consideration of partisan politics has largely yielded to the more sensible policy of conserving the interests of the people that they represent. The long period of time in which their interest was neglected was such that it will take many years to give to them the justice so long denied.

A review or partial analysis of revenue receipts and disbursements may be interesting in considering the suggestions made:

Total receipts of the United States from internal revenue: Ordinary, $289,012,224,20; corporation, $33,576,976.59; making a grand total of $322,529,229.79. That is, the people of the late Confederate States pay $26,749.018.40 of this tax, and the other States of the Union in the aggregate, $295,780,211.39.

ther States of the Union in the aggregate, $295,780,211.39.

As shown, the receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, into the general fund derived by the Government from customs, internal revenue (including corporation tax), sales of public lands in each district and State, and from miscellaneous sources amounted to $701,372,374.99. The receipts on account of public debt from sales of Panama Canal bonds was $18,102,-170.04, and from deposits for retirement of national-bank notes $40,232,555, making a total revenue of $759,707,100.03, exclusive of postal-revenue receipts. The disbursements for ordinary and extraordinary purposes, other than those of the Panama Canal and public debt, amount to $654,137,997.89. The disbursements for the Panama Canal were $37,063,515.33, and for public debt, retirement of national-bank notes, and miscellaneous redemptions, $35,223,333.35, making a total disbursement, exclusive of postal receipts payable from the postal revenues, of $726,424,849.57. The postal revenues amount to $237,860,705.48. The postal revenues are applied to the postal expenditures, and the receipts and expenditures are nearly even. The great cities of the country furnish the bulk of postal revenues.

The figures used are from the reports of the Treasury, Interior, and Post Office Departments.

Assuming that the people of the States furnish equally the postal revenues, and that the revenues derived from the departments and bureaus and sale of public lands are contributed equally by the people of the States in proportion to the population, we then have the apparent fact that in the late Confederate States there is collected ordinary revenue and corporation tax to the extent of $26,749,018.40, and that in the same States there is collected customs duties to the extent of $14,273,685.83, making a total of customs duties, internal revenue, and corporation tax collected in these States of $41,022,704.23.

In the other States of the Union in the aggregate is collected ordinary internal revenue and corporation tax, $295,780,211.39, and customs duties to the amount of $300,223,385.41. It appears therefore that in these two combined sources of revenues that there is collected in the late Confederate States $41,022,704.23, and in the other States $596,003,597.80.

While this is a correct statement of the revenue received by the United States from customs duties, as to amounts collected in the States mentioned, it is only a statement of duties paid at the ports of entry in those States. It might ordinarily be assumed that duties paid in the State would be paid at the customhouses in the State, and all the Southern States mentioned except Arkansas have several customhouses; but it is not fair to do so in considering this revenue, because of the enormous amount of revenue paid at the port of New York and other large ports by the people of various States. It is impossible therefore to segregate these payments and know exactly what is paid by the people of one State at the ports of entry in another; yet, looking at the actual customs duties collected at the various ports, it is clear that the States named pay but a small proportion of these duties from the figures given, and it is true, as a matter of common knowledge, that there is not a very heavy trade in these States in imported goods. The customs duty, of course, is paid in the first place by the importer, but is paid ultimately by the consumer. not a direct tax on the people, and no part of it, of course, is paid out of the State treasuries. The internal revenue, except corporation tax, which is paid by the corporations, does not come out of the treasury of the States, nor is it a direct tax on the people. It is a tax on the privilege of manufacturing and selling tobacco, cigars, snuff, whisky, beer, wines, and all alcoholic liquors. This tax of course is paid in the first place by the manufacturers and dealers in these articles. It, however, is ultimately paid by those who consume these articles. It is impossible therefore to tell what proportion is used by consumers in one State made in another. Therefore, in making any estimate as to revenues and disbursements, it can only be done by a statement of Treasury figures, showing collections from the respective States; but assume that the people of the 11 States named pay as much in customs duties and internal revenue outside of their borders as they do within, or $82,000,000 in round figures, instead of $41,000,000, the disparity is still so great that the situation is not materially

If instead of the Federal method of collecting taxes a direct tax was levied on the people and apportioned among the States in accordance with population, the late Confederate States would pay nearly one-fourth of the revenue necessary to be raised, as these States contain a little less than one-fourth of the population of the United States. The population of the United States is 91,972,266.

The population of these States, by States, is as follows:

labama	2, 138, 093
rkunsas	1, 575, 449
lorida	752, 619
corgia	2, 609, 121

Mississippi Louisiana Texas North Carolina South Carolina Virginia Tennessee	1, 656, 388 3, 896, 542 2, 206, 287 1, 515, 400
Total	22, 393, 414

It is to the advantage of the States named to assume that the people of these States pay equally with the other States moneys from postal revenues and from the sale of public lands and miscellaneous sources. Leaving these matters out of the calcula-cenaneous sources. Leaving these matters out of the calculation of revenues we have a total from customs duties and internal revenue and corporation tax of $637,026,301.03, of which the States named pay $41,022,705.23.

Nearly one-fourth of the customs and internal revenues should be paid, on the basis of population, by these States, or the sum of $159,256,575.25. Deducting from this sum on account of the fraction in population these States have less than one-fourth of the total: they should pay about $140,000.000. count of the fraction in population these States have less than one-fourth of the total; they should pay about $140,000,000. Instead of this payment, they actually pay $41,022,705.23, or less than their pro rata share by $99,000,000 in round numbers. It is clear that the amount contributed by these States is exhausted in the payment of their pro rata share of the ordinary expenses of the Government as adminstered through the various departments, and that it is probable that no part of the revenues they pay are ever applied to the payment of pensions, and but little, if any, to rivers and harbors appropriations or public buildings. Still, we find that there is applied in these States for the purpose of river and harbor improvement annually about $8,000,000, and for parks, reads, public buildings, and so forth, some, $3,700,000; pensions, $12,489,667.21. The two tables following show the proportion between the States of these appropriations: Appropriation for rivers and harbors.

This Treasury statement would indicate that the States named do not suffer from the collection and disbursements of Federal revenue, and that their Representatives are awake to their necessities and rights as members of the Union. It may be interesting also to make some further comparison between the States. There is collected revenues as follows in States named:

In the 19 States named above the customs and internal revenue collected is $581,585,257.98. To this add the $41,022,705,23 collected in the Southern States named and the total is $622,-607,963.21. Deduct this amount from the total of all customs and revenues collected in the United States—that is, $637,026,-301.03—and we have a balance of $14,419,337.82, which is paid by the other 18 States. These 18 States, it will be seen, pay about one-third of the amount paid in by the 11 States of the late Confederacy. It will be observed that the overwhelming bulk of the revenue from these sources comes from the 19 States named, and in these States will be found the overwhelming majority of persons entitled to pensions under the law. this observation it seems that the States that furnished the Union soldiers are practically paying the pensions. It may be observed that the disparity in payment by States is very remarkable. The State of Alabama pays $87,786.04-of customs, Mississippi pays $15,450.33, a total of $103,236.37. They pay in internal-revenue and corporation tax jointly $316,231.50. Alabama payers in the payment of bama draws in pensions $596,445.74 and Mississippi $724,961.82. In river and harbor improvements they jointly draw about $1,360,000, and their proportionate share of public buildings.

There is collected in the State of Tennessee in customs $150,887.80 and in internal-revenue and corporation tax $2,433,-599.13, making in all $2,584,487.90. There is paid back into Tennessee from the United States Treasury in pensions the sum of $3,190,810.87 and river and other improvements from $500,000 to $1,000,000 or more annually.

There is collected from Tennessee in revenues of all kinds about six times as much as from Alabama and Mississippi jointly. Kentucky, an adjoining State to Tennessee, and about the same size, pays about twelve times as much as Tennessee, and New York pays more than seven times as much as Ken-

South Carolina pays a little less than $230,000 in revenue of all kinds. She receives in pensions $302,000 and in other appropriations something over $200,000, and yet she pays more than some of the Western States.

In view of these facts it may be regretted that so many Members from the Southern States felt it to be their duty to vote against an increase of pensions to soldiers for the most part residing in the territory that pays more than nine-tenths of all of the revenue of the United States, although the measure was introduced by a Democrat and reported by a Democratic committee and received the votes of a majority of the Democrats of the House, and is in line with the national platform of the Democratic Party. There is much misconception on revenues.

The remarkable statement has been made in debate in the other House and here that every man, woman, and child in the United States pays $1.73 each annually toward the payment of pensions. This statement is based on the population and on the fact that in 1910 there were 91,000,000 of people, in round numbers, in the United States, and division is made on this basis of the pension appropriation for that year, and then the $1.73 is multiplied by the number of persons in each State to secure the alleged amount paid by that State. For instance, Alabama's population was 2,138,093. On the basis that each person paid $1.73, her contribution to pensions would be $3,698,900.89. She received back in pensions $596,445.74, and paid in excess of receipts $3,102,455.15. And so the calculation has been made as to each State. This would be a very reasonable and sensible statement of the situation if the facts justified it.

As a matter of fact, however, Alabama paid in customs duties $87,786.04, and in internal revenue and corporation tax she paid $316,231.50, and this included Mississippi's part of the internalrevenue tax, because Alabama and Mississippi are one internalrevenue district, making a total of $404.017.54 for Alabama, including Mississippi's internal-revenue collections. This is all cluding Mississippi's internal-revenue collections. the money that was collected in Alabama from all sources and paid into the Federal Treasury, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, from which alone we can judge. The Treasurer's report does not show any such figures as $3,698,900.89 paid in pensions or from all sources in Alabama. This is a fallacious calculation outside of official record, and based on the idea that people pay a per capita tax, or an assumption that it would be that amount if they did pay a per capita tax. As a matter of fact, there is no per capita tax collected in the United States, nor any other direct tax paid to the Federal Government.

If we were to follow up the same idea that is suggested here and apportion the whole of the billion of dollars collected and expended by the United States among the 91,000,000 people, it would show that every man, woman, and child in the United States contributes annually about $11 per head to the support of the Federal Government. Of course, everybody knows that this is not true. The Federal Government does not collect any per capita tax or any direct tax from anyone. The tax it collects is customs duties, internal revenue, and corporation tax, and the figures are given by the Treasury reports and show that the late Confederate States pay in about $41,000,000 all told, and this is not collected from the States, does not come out of the State treasury, but is absolutely paid by the consumers of whisky, wines, tobacco, cigars, and snuff, and those who use imported goods. To assume what a State would pay if legal conditions existed that required such payment, is the position of those who advance these fallacious theories. The collected revenue shows exactly what it does pay, and it is useless to base supposed payments on facts that do not exist. We had as well admit the truth of the situation. We can go to our Treasury reports and get the exact figures. They are shown here. The folly of assuming that the Government collects a per capita tax is apparent. It does nothing of the sort, and, of course, the calculation falls, in view of the fact that the predicate upon which it is based has no existence.

It is in the power of the people of each State to practically control the amount of revenue contributed by them to the United States. If they are contented to use home-made or American goods instead of imported or foreign goods they would pay no customs duties. If contented not to use tobacco, cigars, liquor, wines, and beer, they would pay no internal revenue except the corporation tax. The internal revenue collected in the States under prohibition laws is largely reduced, but the revenues of the other States not under prohibition is increased, because these States ship liquor, beer, and so on, under the in-terstate-commerce provision of the Constitution into the dry States for consumption. If all of the States prohibited the sale and manufacture of alcoholic liquors there would be no internal revenue except from tobacco and the corporation tax, and the loss in Federal revenue would have to be made up otherwise. The people do not complain of the amount of revenue raised, but of the injustice of the operation of the method of raising customs revenue-which is the tariff imposed on articles manufactured abroad and imported into the United States-the system by which they are made to contribute untold millions of dollars to the manufacturers. The theory of the Republican Party that tariff taxes should be so high as to restrict, and prohibit in many instances, importations, and thus protect the home manufacturer from foreign competition in trade, must of necessity result in a great reduction in customs revenues, to the disadvantage of our Treasury, and enabling those engaged in any particular line of industry to establish a monopoly in that line by fixing the price of the particular article on the market. Under combinations by domestic manufacturers to control prices, competition among them ends, and foreign competition having been destroyed by law the consumer is left to the mercy of the protected manufacturer, and must pay from 200 to 1,000 per cent more for articles manufactured in the United States than he should pay under a legal status that does not protect such monopolies and trust combinations. The consumers—the people—pay these prices made possible by the laws of their country enacted against their interests by their own representatives. They do not make the payment to the own representatives. They do not make the payment to the United States; it does not get the benefit of the conditions, but they do pay it indirectly in enlarged prices paid for manufactured goods used, and the money goes to the manufacturer and not into our Treasury. This method of using the taxing power of Congress to enrich the few at the expense of the people is the just cause of complaint against the Republican system of taxation. The theory must of necessity bring distress to the masses because of the inequality and injustice of its operation.

The Democracy maintains that Congress has no moral right to use the taxing power to protect and enrich a few people as the result of a system to the detriment of the many; that taxation should be only for the purpose of raising a sufficient amount of revenue to administer the Government economically, and that oppression begins where that line is passed; that in the adjustment of tariff duties the burdens of taxation—if exact equality can not be obtained—should fall on the luxuries of life used by the wealthy, who are able to pay for them and who receive proportionate to their wealth protection from the Government, to the end that the smallest possible tax may fall on the necessities of life which all the people must have. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This great party to-day, as in the past, stands guard over the constitutional rights and liberties of the people. It not only demands reform in the method of tariff taxation, but in expenditures. It insists on the utmost efficiency in all of the departments of the Government and just remuneration for all services rendered by its employees, and for retrenchment and reform and economy in public affairs in its true sense, which ever involves the advancement and progress of a great people and not mere reduction in appropriations.

It has stood against the arbitrary exercise of power by the Speaker of the House, and while divided in the House as to the method of accomplishing the same in the Sixty-first Congress, it was united on this question in the Sixty-second Congress and on the policy advocated by a small minority of the party in the Sixty-first Congress, and the rules that the minority fought for then are the rules of the House to-day, and destroy the arbitrary power of the Speaker and vindicate the wisdom of that minority view.

In pursuance to the national platform and the pledges of its representatives it has passed, a majority of the party casting their votes for the bill-a bill for an increase of pensions to Civil and Mexican War soldiers. Casting aside sickening sentimentality on that question, it has met and dealt with the stern facts, as only patriots can. Understanding the obligations of the Republic to the soldiers who preserved it, it grants to them in their hour of necessity an increase in pensions in proportion to the increased cost of living and to the length of service rendered. In doing so it makes it possible in the interest of economy to dispense with the expenditure annually of millions of dollars paid for examiners on the road, medical boards, and the expenses of agencies and rents and large numbers of employees and the further increase of pensions by special acts of Congress-in most cases-which have reached the enormous number of 35,987. It prevents the use of this great department for political purposes in close and doubtful districts and States in While some of these considerations were persuathe North. sive, no secondary consideration determined the conduct of the Democratic House in passing this bill. It is due to the volunteer soldiers of the Union just as a similar bill is due to the surviving soldiers of the Confederacy by the people of the States they defended against the aggression of the Union Army. These burdens are the necessary incidents of the war between

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not now. I want to get through with what I have to say. I am not making any objection to the views of anybody else, but, Mr. Chairman, I have believed it to be my duty, standing here not merely as a Representative from the particular district and section from which I come, but as a Representative in common with all others of the people of the United States, to meet this great question in a just way.

I have said that in view of the sources of the revenue, and in view of the fact that not one dollar of Federal tax is paid out of the State treasury of any State in this matter to the support of the United States, and in view of the fact that there is not a single dollar of Federal tax levied on and collected directly from any individual of this Union, in view of the fact that the bulk of our revenue rises either from corporation tax, customs duties, or on imported goods, from the internal revenue assessed on the sale of whisky, beer, tobacco, and wines, and that the consumers of these articles pay it, and not the treasuries of the States, that therefore I have felt it was a little out of order for me to complain that the Federal soldier is getting more pension than some people think he ought to have, when I have insisted on every stump in the district that I represent that he ought to have the fullest measure of compensation that a great and beneficent Government can give him. [Applause.]

I have declared that no government was worthy of existence that did not maintain its soldiery that defended its honor and preserved its integrity in the hour of peril. [Applause.] I have said, too, that in that great contest between the States, the greatest of modern times, a contest when most of us were but small children or were not born, in which the Union armies sought to protect and maintain the perpetuity of the greatest Government that ever lived, while the Confederate Army stood against Union aggression for the protection of constitutional liberty and the rights of States [applause], that it is immaterial what you think about that contest, whether you think one side was right or wrong, we are here as representatives of the whole people of the United States, and we must consider the question as only just men can consider a great national question. should be no sectionalism on this question. While I would give the full measure of pensions to the Federal soldier, if it were in my power I would tax every State in the late Confederate States to give every old Confederate soldier who needed it a dollar a day, because under a faith that was as sacred as his religion he protected the Southern States against the invasion and aggressions of the Northern armies in the greatest contest for liberty that mankind ever saw. [Applause.]

I voted for increased pensions because in my heart I know it is right. [Applause.] Next, for political reasons, which are only secondary, I gave that vote. The Democratic Party in its national platform declared for an increase or liberal pensions for the soldiers. The national Democracy knew what it was doing and meant what it said. A Democrat introduced that bill after a Democratic conference in this House. A Democratic committee reported it to this House, and a majority of the Democrats in this House voted for it; and so long as I have faith in the Democratic Party as affording the best principles and policies with which to maintain the honor and glory of my country I will, unless there be some just or moral reason to the contrary, stand by its organization on this floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Democracy has ever stood against the wicked policy of the Republican Party in attempting to subsidize railroads and ship companies. It gave to me—if I may be pardoned for mentioning it—the signal honor of leading the party in the House in the four great contests upon these questions, in which we were victorious notwithstanding the overwhelming Republican majorities in the House, perhaps the only instances in the last 14 years where the Republican Party was defeated on measures demanded and supported in the national platform. Treasury was saved $40,000,000. The Democracy has opposed combinations and trusts and the exorbitant tariff bills known as the Dingley and Payne-Aldrich bills; government by commission and the multiplication of offices and officers to eat up the substances of the people; it opposed the Philippine policy of the Republican Party and useless extravagance in the establishment of colonies, in which policy enough money has been wasted to build all the locks and dams of the navigable rivers of the United States or to construct thousands of miles of highway across the continent; it has opposed giving away the people's money to expositions and foreign charities; it has opposed the increase in the salaries of high officials; it opposed the un-Democratic adjustment of Diplomatic and Consular Services by which chosen favorites serve the people in foreign lands; it opposed the encroachment and the arbitrary exercise of power by Federal courts.

It has maintained the freedom of the press and ever opposed the laws that would curtail its power; it has demanded an income-tax law, to the end that the wealth of the country may bear its proportionate part of the burdens of the Government that protects that wealth; it has supported pure-food laws, that the people of the States, under the interstate-commerce laws, may be protected against unwholesome food; it has favored amendments to the Constitution to elect Senators by direct vote of the people; it has favored railroad-regulation laws and enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, that it might properly enforce its decrees in all cases of freight-rate discrimination; it has sought to protect the people against the greed of monopoly under any and every condition.

It favors appropriations for rivers and harbors, which can not, in my opinion, be made available to their full extent until the Government of the United States shall ultimately grant aid, in connection with States and counties, for the construction and building of great highways under the post-office and post-roads clause of the Constitution; it has favored the admission of the States of Okhahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico, now constituting a part of the Union; it favored a policy of conservation of Alaska; it has favored more stringent laws for the control of the trusts and corporations; it now, as ever, favors a tariff for revenue only; it favored the farmers' free list and reciprocity and the reduction of revenues on schedule K, and the reduction of all the tariff schedules to a revenue basis for the purpose of suppressing monopolies; it favors an efficient Navy and a small but efficient Army; it opposed the establishment of postal savings banks as unnecessary and as entailing untold cost on the people and as a forerunner of a great central national bank in the control of the money powers, spending our currency at will against the interest of the laboring man and the man of small property; it has favored a reasonable and just parcel-post law; it favors a law prohibiting gambling in farm products and to further restrict undesirable immigration; it has ever been the friend of labor; it opposed the repeal of the eight-hour law on the Isthmus of Panama; it opposed the antieight-hour law on the Isthmus of Franama; it opposed the anti-compulsory pilotage bill; it favored hours of service bill for railway employees; it opposed the ship-subsidy bill, including conscript provision of seamen; it favored the employers' lia-bility bill, affecting employees on railways engaged in interstate commmerce; it favored the child-labor bill for the District of Columbia; it opposed the repeal of the employers' liability bill enacted by the Legislature of New Mexico when a Territory; it opposed compulsory investigation of labor disputes; it has favored the payment of just war claims against the Government; it has ever favored the proper exercise by each of the coordinate branches of the Government of the functions that belong to finds for its habitat no particular section, but lives the world them under the Constitution and has opposed the encroachment of the one upon the other. Her Representatives have held firmly to the doctrine that a Representative in Congress is not merely a Representative of the district he represents, but is a Representative of the whole people of the United States. That while it is their duty to look after their local interests, it is always their duty to see that a national interest is blended with their local interest for which they ask an appropriation, and that in dealing with great public questions and in the distribution of public revenue no sectional lines should control. It is immaterial from whence the revenue is collected; it must be used in the promotion of the public interest for the Republic as a unit.

Believing in the preservation of the rights of the States under the Constitution, Democracy also believes in the preservation and the exercise of the rights of the Federal Government guaranteed by the Constitution, to the end that both Federal and State Governments may move in their respective orbits and accomplish the purposes in the interest of the people for which these governments were inaugurated.

The Democratic Party has stood against the doctrine of imperialism in this country, a question that is scarcely an issue now, but which is ever a blot upon the fair name of the Republic; the colonization of alien people and the maintenance of power and authority over people who are unwilling to yield to that power. We may forgive the sins of imperial power, but as long as we shall live it will glitter in our eyes to remind us of our treason to our Constitution and to our Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to his colleague?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee

Mr. GARRETT. There has been reported from the Committee on Insular Affairs a bill providing for Philippine independence, which we expect to take up and pass at this session.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I was not aware of it, but I thank my friend and colleague for the suggestion. I had hoped that when the Democratic Party came into power in this House it would offer some measure that still would tell of its love of freedom, of its hope of liberty at last for all mankind.

The strength of a republican form of government is in the proper diffusion of its powers and the separation and independence of its coordinate branches, yet making each in a measure a check on the power of the other under a constitution ordained by the people. The stability of a republic depends on the liberal participation in its affairs by the people. The stability of a monarchy depends upon the centralization of its powers and the absence of popular control. Despotism is the child of monarchy, liberty the offspring of the republic. Monarchy survives by force; the republic by the patriotism and the enlightenment of its people. The United States is only a semirepublic. It elects but one class of all of its officers—the Representatives in Congress-by the direct ballot of the people. Wisdom would dictate closer relations of the people with our Central Government. The trial of our institutions demonstrates the capacity of the people for complete government, and we have lived long enough half monarchy and half republic. Let the people choose the President, the Senators, the district marshals, collectors of revenue, district attorneys, and postmasters by direct vote at the ballot box as State officials are chosen. We need more the ballot box as State officials are chosen. We need more democracy infused into the Federal Constitution and the liberalization of its provisions in behalf of the people. The nations of the earth are progressing; they are breaking the chains that bind them to thrones and asserting the right of man to determine his own destiny. Despotic Turkey and Russia have yielded to a constitution and the Celestial Kingdom is giving death to the Imperial Dragon that for centuries has poisoned the liberties of her people. Mankind is demanding the assertion of the rights of man everywhere.

Mr. Chairman, while I am ever a partisan, while I do believe profoundly in the principles and policies of the Democratic Party generally, there have been, and I suppose there always will be, times when my judgment, whether sound or not, will not be in exact accord with that of many of my party associates. I would feel that I was a slave to party and not a free man if I could not think in the interest of my country before I thought in the interest of my party. [Applause.] Let us rejoice to see the principles of Democracy spreading over the earth; I do not mean a partisan Democracy, but that great democratic thought that makes the world restless to-day; that great innate force for good that has actuated men in all the ages—the love of freedom, the love of justice; that love that over; that great spirit of democracy that whispered words of hope into the ears of men before Aaron was a priest, Moses a prophet, or David a king-ever seeking justice, ever standing for the right-that spirit that survived the chariot wheels of the pagan warrior, the battle-ax of the Romans, the inquisition of the Spaniards, and the cannons of Great Britain; that spirit that has lived to kindle the fires on every altar erected to human liberty, that has opened the doors of every temple, where men worship their Creator in obedience to their own consciences; that has loosened the shackles of slaves and placed the crown on the brows of the martyrs to truth; that catches the humble boy by the hand and leads him into the path of rectitude and bids him follow it as the only open way to the pinnacles of immortal fame.

That spirit, standing under the shadow of the cross, that has echoed the divine proclamation for 2,000 years of "Peace on earth and good will to men"; that directed the hand that wrote the Declaration of Independence and hovered over the cradle of the Republic, may it live until every kingdom shall fall and every empire shall be dissolved, that government in obedience to the will of the governed may arise upon their ruins. Then the nations shall know that it was not the hand of man, but the fingers of God that fixed the stars on the flag of the Republic to light the path of liberty through all the ages to come. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. WEEKS. It is not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, at this time to engage in a discussion of the details of this bill, or even to refer to the political differences which the chairman of the committee has suggested in the admirable speech which

The fact that he has suggested political differences might lead members of this Committee of the Whole to conclude that there are political differences in the making up of a post-office appropriation bill. Such is not the case. Since I have been connected with the Post Office Committee there has been no politics in the manner of making up the appropriation bills providing for this great service.

And it is well for the members of the Committee of the Whole to be reminded that the volume of business conducted by the Post Office Department is probably the largest business conducted by any organization in the world. Certainly it is larger than that conducted by any corporation in the United States. And this bill which the House now has under consideration is the largest appropriation bill that has even been passed by the American Congress.

It has been a pleasure to me, as a member of the committee, to feel that in making up this bill there have been no political differences; and as a minority member, having unqualified confidence in the patriotism, the mental integrity, and great knowledge of the details of this service which the chairman has, it has been a great pleasure to me to work with him in making up the most economical bill possible.

.Later on I may make some comments about the details of the bill, but now I yield one hour to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-DELL] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is somewhat embarrassing to follow the exceedingly beautiful tribute to the principles of nonpartisan Democracy and the eloquent and patriotic perora-tion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] with the discussion of a prosaic subject. And yet the subject I propose to discuss has to do with the great principles of democracy. Those principles are founded on the recognition of the fundamental rights of men.

Starting with the proposition that all men are created free and equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, we proceed to lay down rules to govern the conduct of men, to the end that they may be secure in the enjoyment of equality and right. These rules have to do, among other things, with the use and enjoyment of property.

One of the rules laid down in this country at the beginning was that men should acquire property rights in real estate in fee simple, that it should begin at the stars and end in the center of the earth, and that when a man had acquired the right to landed property that right should be secure in all respects, not to be affected in any way in value except by due process of law.

In recent years there has been much agitation for a departure from our past public-land policy with regard to titles in real estate, and some people have assumed that this was a relatively unimportant and simple matter to be settled by a line or two of law here or there, and while from their standpoint its effect would be beneficial, they seem never to have realized the effect would be very far-reaching. Any such view or opinion must necessarily arise from a lack of investigation or consideration of the problems involved.

I do not want to suggest here that we of the West are disturbed to an unwarranted degree touching our position as citizens of the Union. And yet, whether an American citizen lives in New York or Wyoming, in Colorado or Massachusetts, in Arkansas or Virginia, he has the right under the Constitution to occupy the same position in relation to the Federal Government as the citizen of any other State. He has the right to demand that whatever may be the laws that affect the citizen in his relations with his Government shall apply alike to all.

Furthermore, the newer States having come into the Union on an equality with their sister States, have the right to demand that their permanent relations with the Federal Government shall be in all respects the same as that of the older States.

The Supreme Court held in 1845, in the case of Pollard's Lesse v. Hagon, that the United States had no municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil except for temporary purposes and to execute the trust which it held for the States and for their people.

The permanent reservation by the Federal Government of a portion of the fee or title to lands it disposes of, creates a condition affecting both the citizen of the State and the State itself not consistent with the trust by which the Government holds public lands and tending to profoundly affect both the individual citizen and the State in their relations with the Federal Government and in a manner which deprives them of that equality to which the State and the individual is entitled under the Constitution.

The Federal Government and the States have passed title to the lands belonging to them east of the Mississippi River and to a very considerable portion of the lands lying west. These lands have all passed by titles in fee simple, conveying all that there was in the land of whatever kind or character. Without regard to the character of the law under which title has passed, when it has passed it has become a title in fee. Lands acquired under agricultural laws are not, of course, supposed to contain mineral, but if later found to contain mineral then it belongs to the owner of the land. Lands acquired under mineral laws have not generally been valuable for agricultural purposes, and yet if they are so valuable they can be used for agricultural purposes. Since the enactment of our mineral laws our rule has been one of separation of mineral from agricultural lands in the disposition of the lands.

OUR LAND POLICY.

At the beginning coal was not considered a mineral in the sense that took it out of the agricultural category, and so the coal lands east of the Mississippi River and some of those of the country west passed into private hands under agricul-tural title. But with the enactment of the coal law in the seventies coal lands came to be recognized as nonagricultural, and not enterable under the agricultural land laws. With the passage of the mineral statutes in the sixties we first clearly distinguished between metalliferous mineral lands and agricultural lands. At the beginning of this separation of lands into classes we were not over careful in examining lands before title passed, and it is true that some mineral land, or lands containing some mineral, passed into private ownership under agricultural title; but that has certainly not been the case in the last 10 or 20 years. The general character of the public domain as to mineral and nonmineral is now well known by our people and the officials of the Government are well informed as to the character-mineral or nonmineral-of most of our public lands, so that it is the rare exception for an entryman to initiate an agricultural title to land valuable for minerals.

All public coal lands have been so designated, and in order to be on the safe side very large areas of land containing coal of a character now valueless, or at such a depth that it can not now be worked, or in veins so thin as not to be workable, and other lands where only geological surmise suggests the presence of coal are all included in coal withdrawals. So that it is impossible at this time to acquire coal lands under an agricultural title unless they be acquired under the law which authorizes the taking of such lands, reserving the coal to the Government. So it is with the oil lands, with the phosphate lands, and so forth.

The gold and silver and metalliferous bearing lands are located in the mountains and hilly regions of the country; their location is fairly well understood, and no one undertakes to make an agricultural entry of them. And so we have been going on for many years. This rule of separating lands into classes provides for the entry of nonmineral lands under various laws, homestead entries, desert entries, timber and stone entries, isolated-tract entries, and so forth; the entries of the metalliferous minerals under the placer and lode acts, the coal under the coal law, and so forth; but when the title has once passed the owner becomes the proprietor of all that the land may con-The homesteader is first subject to the general supervision of the Land Office and subject to private contest during the period which he lives on the land before he can make proof. Thereafter, for six years, the Government may contest his title if in the opinion of anyone he has knowingly attempted to acquire mineral land under an agricultural title. All this thoroughly protects our mineral lands against agricultural

It can be said without fear of successful contradiction that under this system the per cent of our lands which pass to patent under agricultural laws, which subsequently are found to contain mineral, is very small. On the other hand, the entryman acquiring land under mineral laws acquires all there is in the land. He may acquire lands under the coal-land law and subsequently the lands may be found to contain oil or gas. A man may acquire, as they did in the early days, in Leadville, lands that were valuable for silver, and later dig from those lands vast wealth successively in gold and in lead and in zinc. Whatever the land contains, once the title passes to him, is his.

Now, it is proposed to modify this rule. Of course those who propose the modification do not understand how profound a change in our system this involves. Never having considered the matter carefully and thoroughly and fundamentally, it all seems very simple to them and as something that ought to be

They say:

Why, the farmer seeks land of the Government for a farm. He swears that it contains no mineral and he seeks no mineral. Why should he have any? Why not simply say that if at any time in the future mineral should be found it shall belong not to him but to some one to whom the Government may give the right to prospect for, mine, and extract it?

NOT SO SIMPLE AS IT SEEMS.

It seems very simple to these gentlemen. Let us see what the proposition is. We had before us the other day a bill reducing the homestead period from five to three years-that is, the homesteader to-day on the public domain may make proof and secure title at the end of five years; he must within seven years. The new law provides that he may prove up at the end of three years; he must within five. So the period is reduced two years, and certain gentlemen imagine that this is so great a boon granted or to be granted to the homesteaders of the West that those who are interested in those homesteaders and anxious to help them and to see the country developed would be willing to accept any sort of limitations placed upon the title which might thus pass. As one of those profoundly interested in seeing that western country developed and anxious to further assist in that development, I am constrained to say that I consider it more important that when the western homesteader shall receive his title he shall receive a title that is of real value than that he shall receive it a trifle sooner than now. It is more important to him that when he acquires his little home he shall be the monarch of it, shall have control of it, shall own it, than that he shall have it handed to him as an empty husk of but little value a year or so sooner than he would under the present law. When the three-year homestead bill was before the House the other day, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] proposed to recommit with an amendment, as

I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands, with instructions to said committee to forthwith report the same back to the House amended as follows: Insert, after line 2, page 3, the following: "No entry for a homestead or a patent, issued on the same, shall convey any right to sait, potash, coal, petroleum, natural gas, gold, silver, copper, iron, or other mineral within or under the land conveyed by the patent, or any exclusive or other property or interest in, or any exclusive right or privilege with respect to any lake, river, spring, stream, or other body of water within or bordering on or passing through the land covered by the entry."

As the geutleman from Alaska [Mr. Wickersham] has just suggested, the homesteader would not have much left if such an amendment were agreed to. I said to a gentleman who favored this amendment, "What is it you propose? Do you propose to wipe out the distinction between mineral and nonmineral lands? Do you intend by this amendment to say to all homesteaders that there is no longer a distinction between mineral and nonmineral lands, and that you may now go on any lands, no matter how valuable they may be for mineral, and plant yourself there as a homesteader?" He said, "Certainly not." I said, "What is it you propose to gain?" "Oh," he said, "you folks out there have been criticizing the Interior Department for years because they have been delaying the issuance of patents. I am told they have been delaying the issuance of patents partly because of the examinations conceived to be necessary in order to make sure that the land covered by an entry is nonmineral—contains no mineral." Of course that is a mistaken idea in the main. Few of the delays in the issuance of public-land patents have been based on any necessary inquiry or investigation touching the question of minerals, but most of them have had to do with a variety of other matters, and unless we wipe out the distinction between mineral and nonmineral lands and invite the homestead settler and the desert entrymen and the timber and stone entrymen and the purchaser under isolated tract laws onto all lands, mineral and nonmineral alike, we shall not by any such amendment dispense with the service of a single, solitary Federal

So long as we maintain the distinction between those two classes of lands there must of necessity be reasonable scrutiny and investigation to make quite certain that the agricultural entryman is neither intentionally nor unintentionally acquiring under his agricultural patent lands known to be valuable for minerals. Those who have approved the amendment to which I have called attention, whom I have asked if they proposed to wipe out the distinction between mineral and nonmineral lands, have said that would not do. Those who are informed on the subject have suggested that to do that would invite all sorts of fraud, would subject the homesteader to the temptation of attempting to secure a partial estate in certain classes of mineral lands in the hope that the title thus acquired would be valuable in other ways than as a home and a farm. So it is not proposed to wipe out the distinction, and therefore all of the arguments that will be sent broadcast over the western country to persuade people to favor these limited patents, all the statements which will be made to our people in order to get them to favor the acceptance by their Representatives of limited patents on the theory that there will be no more harassing delays, have no foundation in fact.

There never has been any necessity for many of the harassing delays from which our land entrymen have suffered, there would be no less excuse for them after the mineral was reserved than now. Assuming that it were wise to write into the land laws this nonmineral provision, why write it into a homestead law? Have we reached a point where we want to deny the homesteader, the farmer, the title we grant to the entryman under the desert-land law, under the Carey Act, which is granted to him who buys his land at public auction, who acquires his land from Indians, who secures his land in the numerous methods other than homesteading under which nonmineral lands are acquired? Has it come to this that we are so fearful that the farmer, the homesteader, shall acquire something not visible on the surface that we must withhold from him the possibility of a complete title which we grant to others? Assuming that it were wise to do it, what I have said simply emphasizes the fact that a homestead law is not the place to write the monarchial theory that the mineral belongs to the Crown.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MONDELL. I do.
Mr. LAFFERTY. I would like to have the gentleman explain, if he will, what effect these reservations would have upon the owner of the land so far as it would work out in a practical way?

Mr. MONDELL. That is just what I was coming to. Of course, the gentlemen who are so free in offering these reservations have not studied the matter sufficiently to realize that they could not be placed upon the statute books without an elaborate and carefully digested set of provisions with respect to the right retained by the Government. That, in the first place, as a legal proposition you must retain the right to re-enter and that under that right retained you must work out a system under which the Government or its agents or its lessees may go upon those lands, what their rights would be, the conditions under which they may go upon them, and what shall be their rights when they do go upon them. Let us assume that this amendment becomes the law, just as it was proposed the other day, and a tract of 160 acres of land containing no sort or mineral, so far as anybody knows or is able to guess, should pass into the hands of a homesteader, and then in the course of years into the hands of his children and his children's children, and 10 or 20 or 50 or 100 years from now some one should want to dig or to drill upon this land in the hope of finding oil, gas, salt, hot water, limestone, fuller's earth, or clay. What would happen? Let us say that the first man who came along concluded that he would like to drill for oil. Suppose we should have a law—of course not under this amendment, because the of mineral, so far as anybody knows or is able to guess, should have a law-of course not under this amendment, because they have not even reserved the right of reentry, and the amendment proposed would therefore be practically ineffectual—but assum-ing that it was written so that it meant something, that it asserted the right of reentry and provided that a bond should be furnished by the lessee or prospector and he secured the right to prospect for oil—
Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield right there?
Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Would not this prospector, even 50 years after a patent was granted and an orchard was growing over the entire homestead, claim the right to an easement to go into that orchard and dig for oil, dig for coal, and any other form of minerals that he might claim was underneath the surface, and barass the owner in that way?

Mr. MONDELL. That would altogether depend upon what you write into your statute. If you did not write anything into the statute more than proposed by this amendment, the Lord only knows what he would claim and the Lord alone could tell what would occur; but if we did write into the statuteif we are going to do this thing, we ought to do it in a way to make it effective, in a way so it is understandable; if we did do it, and the party was to secure the right, whatever that right was, to bore for oil, and did bore for oil, what would his right be in the estate? Would he then claim to be the owner of the residue of the estate which the Government withheld? If not, and another party proposed to bore for gas, what would his rights be as compared with the man who bores for oil or the original claimant under this proposed squatter title?

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so. Mr. SLOAN. Could not you trust the Government, with its right of eminent domain and condemnation and entryway, in that case to do justice to the owner of that land where the minerals had been reserved?

Mr. MONDELL. You could not trust anyone to do justice where you had provided a condition under which justice was impossible. If the gentleman will listen to me for a moment, I think I can convince him it will be impossible.

Mr. SLOAN. It will be a pleasure for fifteen minutes on that proposition.

Mr. MONDELL. If the second claimant desired to bore for gas, what would his rights be as against the owner of the husk of the estate, as against the owner of the right to bore for oil? And if in the drilling operations neither should find oil or gas but should strike salt, then what would be their rights in the premises as compared with that of the squatter owner? What would the man who received the patent have? What would he own? Could he dig a well? And if so, could he take clay from the bottom of it with which to chink his barn, without by so doing being amenable to the law for having used a mineral upon his land? Could he sink an artesian well? And if so, how deep? And, as water is a mineral, what would be his right to the mineral after he found it? And if it were hot and mineralized, then who would own it, the Government or the man who owned the surface? And if he struck a cavern, with some few stalagmites and stalactites, whom would they belong to and who would own the hole in the ground in which they were found? How many coston is the product of the product of the stalagmine of the found? How many estates is it proposed to have and create on one small piece of ground?

How many different conflicting estates is it proposed to establish upon the farm of the homesteader, and would the time ever come that anybody would ever have a title to any part of that estate of which they would be confident and in which they could be secure?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so. Mr. LAFFERTY. Is it not true that under this provision that after the owner of the homestead has built a house, say, worth $40,000, the mineral that might be under the house having been reserved, that the Government, or those who claimed under the Government, might seek to mine it, and could compel him to move his house in order that they might seek or remove that mineral?

Mr. MONDELL. If the amendment means anything at all, of course it means that.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Is not that a certain implication?
Mr. MONDELL. I think so. Otherwise the courts would say that Congress did a senseless and a useless thing. If we are going to do this thing, we would have to have legislation in detail as to all these questions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to ask if it is not true that the proposed limitation on the titles of public lands, which are now sought to be placed in these bills by the Department of the Interior, would be a constant cloud on the title and a menace and a nuisance in conveyance, and be liable to create a multiplicity of suits for years to come between the owners and the occupiers or transferees of the property?

Mr. MONDELL. They not only would be liable to, but they would be absolutely certain to. It would be impossible to avoid it. It was suggested the other day that while we should not wipe out the distinction between mineral and nonmineral land, it would not be as necessary as it is now to be absolutely certain that land passing under nonmineral title is free from mineral or minerals of value. If we should have that sort of a policy, then the sort of thing that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] has suggested would multiply infinitely. But they say, "You gentlemen have already done this very thing. Why do you protest against something which you have yourselves proposed and brought about?" Of course, a man who propounds that sort of a question simply exposes his ignorance of the whole subject.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman give us any information as to what, if any, extent valuable mineral has been discovered on land to which the title has been acquired under the homestead laws during all the time that the homestead laws have been in force?

Mr. MONDELL. Practically none in recent years; and if I do not touch on that later I hope the gentleman will call my attention to it, for I want to refer to it. Our conservation friends say to us, You have done what we now propose, in the case of coal lands. Let us analyze for a moment what we have done as to coal lands, lands known or believed to contain coal. Coal of one sort or another is found over vast areas of the public domain. We have probably some 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 acres in the public domain of the United States that contain coal of some kind, a large portion of it of no present value, a considerable portion of which may never be workable.

But still it is coal land, its general location is known, and all has been withdrawn; a large amount classified. tinction being maintained between coal or mineral lands and agricultural lands, it was impossible to use the lands which are of value for agricultural purposes and of no present value for coal.

What did we do in those cases? Still maintaining the distinction between the two classes of land, we provided that if a man desired, with full knowledge of the situation, to go upon such lands and secure such title as was provided, he could do He goes upon the lands knowing them to be coal lands, and he files upon them under the nonmineral-land laws, waiving the right to what? To the body of the coal, to nothing below it, and to nothing above it, neither to the sandstone roof nor the clay floor; the Government retains title to nothing in the way of mineral except the coal deposit; the owner of the patent has an absolute fee to everything in that land saving alone the body of that one mineral.

There is no conflict there. Each man's right is as clear and well defined as it is possible to make a right in property. There is, in fact, no division of the estate, rather the reservation of the body of a deposit of known character and generally of known location. In such a case there is no difficulty in providing the terms and conditions under which the known reserved mineral may be taken. Such legislation has no relationship whatever to the blanket reservation of all minerals,
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will refer to the water reservation before he gets through.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I will in one moment.

Now, as to the suggestion of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] as to what extent mineral lands have passed under agricultural titles, there was a time when we paid no attention to coal lands, and all of the coal of the Virginias and Tennessee and of Illinois and Indiana and eastern Kansas passed under agricultural titles. I have never been able to find out who suffered thereby.

To me it is not a thing to be greatly regretted that an Illinois farmer owns some coal, I do not understand how anybody is injured by reason of that fact. But we departed from that policy long ago, and for years no man has been able to acquire land that has any coal on it under the agricultural-land laws. The Secretary of the Interior will assure you of that, and all the people in his office will assure you of it; and not only that, but they have kept on the safe side, and have called coal land much land which will never be worked for coal.

There was a time when iron was not considered of especial value and when some lands known to contain iron, in Minnesota and Wisconsin and Michigan, passed under agricultural titles. But no man secures any title to iron lands in these days unless he complies with all the provisions of the placer act. I give it as my belief that in the past 15 years there has not passed into private ownership under the agricultural-land laws an amount of lands containing mineral of any value that need worry anyone. Admit, for the sake of argument, that it should occur that here and there lands should pass into the hands of the homesteader on which in after years deep drilling should discover oil or gas or salt, deep shafting should flud valuable clays or fuller's earth, or in still rarer cases in our mountains deep mining might develop the metalliferous minerals. Who under heaven is going to be harmed, and who under the flag is going to be benefited, if in that event some Federal agent must be called in and some one must put up a bond and the owner of the surface must be injured in his property to the end that the Government may receive a miserable pittance in the form of a lease? In the very nature of things the cost of such administration would be five, ten, a hundred times more than all of its returns.

It has been suggested that as but few tracts patented under the homestead law are likely to be found, at any time in the future, to contain mineral, the majority of entrymen will not be affected one way or another, by a reservation of the mineral, and therefore should not object to such reservation.

This strikes me as being very curious reasoning. the titles of tens and hundreds of thousands of homesteaders be limited and abridged to their certain disadvantage and possible considerable loss in order that the National Government, like a miserly and avaricious landlord, may retain control over a dab of mineral that may be found on one tract out of a thousand years or centuries after the title has passed?

It is the part of wisdom for us to adhere to our time-honored system. They say that Canada has adopted a new system. I do not pretend to know why or when or how, but I do know that if it is what is proposed in this amendment it will not work in Canada any more than it would work with us. certainly is no reason on earth why such a system should be adopted here. It will be beneficial to no man unless to some Government lease agent. It will work hardship on the man who owns the land, and in the long run be beneficial to nobody.

We should maintain the distinction we have always maintained between mineral and agricultural lands; but when title passes, whoever secures the title should own what is contained in the land. There would be just as much sense in saying that a man who secures the title to 160 acres of land under the placer acts, because the land is valuable for gypsum or limestone, should not have the right to plow and raise wheat upon it if there be any part of it that is of a character permitting that to be done.

Should we withhold from a man who secures under the mineral-lode law land valuable for silver, the copper or the gold that might be found on his claims? And would you say that the man who, under the lode law, secures title to a mineral lode should not have the right, he or his successors a hundred years afterwards, to drill on the land and have the benefit of whatever he might find? It seems to me that this talk of the separation of our lands into numerous estates is based upon a misconception of what it would lead to or a misunderstanding of what is proposed, and certainly a failure to realize the endless confusions which would result.

RESERVING RIGHTS IN WATER.

Another provision of this amendment relates to water. It

Or any exclusive or other property or interest in, or any exclusive right or privilege with respect to any lake, river, spring, stream, or other body of water within or bordering on or passing through the land covered by the entry.

The Federal Government is a landed proprietor, holding the public lands in trust for their disposition. With regard to its lands it has the same rights in water that any other proprietor has. In the States where the common-law doctrine of riparian rights applies the Federal Government, as a landowner, owns the springs upon its lands and the right to have the waters of the streams that flow through its lands flow undiminished in volume and unaffected in quality. This is not a right arising out of national sovereignty, but appertaining as a landowner. In those States beyond the Mississippi, where the State has exercised its unquestioned right to modify or abrogate the rule of riparian rights in the waters of nonnavigable streams, the States have asserted or adopted the law of appropriation. The constitution of the State which I have the honor to represent provides that the waters of the State belong to the people of the State, and no one can acquire any right to the use of water except through an orderly procedure and process of ac-

Mr. SLOAN. If your State reserves the water rights, why should not our Government, with equal right and propriety, reserve its mineral rights?

Mr. MONDELL. The question the gentleman asks is so broad, and the two things are so utterly dissimilar—
Mr. SLOAN. You are discussing them both.
Mr. MONDELL. I am discussing them both, but the gentleman says if my State reserves the water, why should not the Federal Government reserve the mineral. The gentleman from Nebraska is a good lawyer. He knows how wide is the difference between the character of the sovereignty of the Federal Government and the sovereignty of the people within the States. The gentleman knows that this is a National Government of limited granted powers, and that the residue of the sovereignty of the American people abides in them and in their Commonwealths.

The gentlemen will realize that there is no analogy whatever between the proposition which contemplates the withholding by a proprietor in passing title of an interest in the estate, and the retention by the sovereign people of control over the use of an essential appurtenance to the estate. In the one case an attempt is made to perpetuate a permanent landlordism by a proprietor, which, though sovereign in certain respects, has no police powers, for the purpose of ultimately securing valuable returns for the thing retained. In the other case the State representing the complete police power and sovereignty of the people, maintains control over a valuable adjunct or appurtenance, not with a view of securing returns, but for the purpose of defending the citizen in the right of user he acquires. do not understand how the gentleman can recognize any similarity or relation between the two propositions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion in answer to the question of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly. Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The water was reserved to the arid States because it was absolutely necessary to make their land worth anything and for the purpose of building up that western country. If we had not had the water controlled for use, all of the lands would have been worthless, and our States never would have been what they are to-day.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, as the gentleman from Colorado knows, the Western States had the right to apply the law of riparian ownership or the law of appropriation. Under their condition the rule of public control and private appropriation was necessary. By reason of the necessities of aridity we apply the world-wide law of appropriation, the law which prevails nearly all over the earth, except in the British Isles and in portions of the eastern half of the United States—the old Roman law, the law on which ancient civilization was built, and the only law under which invitation goals are appropriation. and the only law under which irrigation systems can flourish.

The Congress of the United States has no more right to say that that water shall be given or withheld than it has power to determine that the bow of promise shall or shall not span the heavens after the rain.

What authority has the United States Government, in parting with the title to its lands, to reserve riparian rights in water? Who ever heard anywhere-and I propound this as a layman to you lawyers—that a riparian owner could part with the title to his land and retain his riparian rights? If any such doctrine was ever proposed outside of a madhouse, until this amendment, I never heard of it. What is a riparian right? It is a right appurtenant to the land. Whence comes it? It comes from ownership of the land. Whose is it? It is the property of the man that owns the land, as a right inseparable from the land. It is appurtenant to and a part of the real estate. The Federal Government is preceding to page a law under which it. Federal Government is proposing to pass a law under which it shall say to the States, "I will part with the title to my land as owner, but I will reserve whatever riparian rights are appurtenant thereto." It is absurd and ridiculous beyond words.

The Federal Government owns no water anywhere. It controls navigable streams—nothing more. So far as actually reserving any water, the amendment would not be effective. It would not cut any figure. The Federal Government has nothing to reserve, The people have reserved the control of water; it belongs to them, and no man acquires a property right in it and no right to it, except the right of use.

Let us analyze the water amendment and see what is actually proposed and what its effect would be. It provides:

No entry for a homestead or a patent issued on the same shall convey any right * * * or any exclusive or other property or interest in or any exclusive right or privilege with respect to any lake, river, spring, stream, or other body of water within or bordering on or passing through the land covered by the entry.

I think I have made it clear, if it was not already clear, in the minds of those having knowledge of the subject, that the National Government in parting with title to land can not retain any riparian rights. Whoever owns land has whatever rights such riparian ownership carries under the State laws or under the common law. In the arid States no riparian rights attach to land, therefore the Federal Government has no rights in nonnavigable waters in those States, riparian or otherwise. It might be urged, therefore, that so far as the arid States are concerned the statute would be ineffective and harmless. So far as reserving something the Government does not own, it would be ineffective, but infinitely harmful, nevertheless, as I shall attempt to show a little later.

HOW IT WOULD AFFECT THE HOMESTEADER.

Some people whose imaginations have been stirred over alleged dangers of water-power monopoly have no doubt imagined that this reservation was intended to, or would, ward off such dangers; such may have been the purpose; such would not be the effect, as no Federal legislation could prevent the owner of land acquired under a homestead from acquiring a water right from the State for any lawful purpose, including the generation of power. It does have, however, a concealed and sinister purpose, and its effect would be to at least give color to the assertion of the right of the Federal Government to prevent a home-steader from fencing his land if it had upon it a spring, a water hole, a stream, or a dry run occasionally carrying water; and this would seem to be its real purpose and intent.

There is at this time, as there has been for years, a considerable sentiment in certain quarters for the leasing of public lands for grazing purposes. Leaving out of consideration the question as to the wisdom or propriety of so doing, I trust there is no one who desires, in the furtherance of such a plan, to prevent bona fide homestead entry.

We are informed, however, that the Interior Department is at this time sending its agents abroad over the public-land States to spy out the location of public land containing springs, water holes, or streams, with a view of reserving the same from settlement, and that such reservations are being rapidly made under claim of authority and presumedly in the interest of a proposed leasing policy.

I can not believe such a policy of withdrawing lands that may have water upon them can or will be continued; if it should, a homesteader could acquire no such lands; but if peradventure he should, the water reservation proposed, if it had any effect at all, would certainly prevent the homestead settler from securing any exclusive right to such water, and to make that prohibition effective the homesteader and his grantees for all time would necessarily be prevented from building any fences which would prevent free access by all the world to such water; and if this provision should be written into this homestead bill it would apply to all unperfected home-steads as well as to all homesteads hereafter taken. As a matter of fact, the claim might be asserted under the proposed amendment that the homestead settler could not acquire the exclusive right to use water for irrigation or other purposes upon his land under State law. Does the condition thus created appeal to the present or intending homestead settler of the country or to anyone who does not desire to have the remaining public lands, without regard to their character, remain for all time to come an open grazing common, to be leased or otherwise controlled by the National Government?

POWER SITES.

But the latest and most unique proposition is not contained in this lovely amendment. The latest proposition suggested as a limitation on the homesteader's title is that there shall be reserved from all the lands which a homesteader may acquire the gentlemen are much disturbed lest the homesteader shall get something of value—they say nothing about the desert entry-man, about the timber-and-stone claimant, about the isolatedtract purchaser, about the Carey Act entryman-they put everything on the homesteader; he is the fellow from whom we must reserve everything but the empty husk of a title. [Applaus The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 15 min-

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I may not use all that time, but I want to go a little further into this power-site proposition. The proposition is now, as suggested to the conferees, that the title granted to the homestead settler shall, by some provision of legislation, the character of which I can not clearly contemplate, withhold from him the fee to such an extent that if his land should ever be needed for water-power purposes, for the development of power from water, for the transmission of power, he shall surrender his title, without payment, to such portion of his land as may be needed for such purposes.

I have asked why this was proposed, and all I can get is a hazy suggestion that somebody, somewhere, is threatening to monopolize the water power of the country. Inasmuch as it is claimed that somebody is attempting to monopolize the water power of the country, it is now proposed to hold up the homesteader and make him give up his land when the water mo-That is what it means if it means anything at all; and instead of striking at monopoly, it gives the monopolies an opportunity to secure without money and without price the property of the homesteader. Does anyone imagine that a homesteader will accept any such title as that, a mere temporary easement, terminable without compensation whenever anyone may desire to use any or all this land for a ditch, a plant, or a line for power?

Some one may suggest that only in an occasional instance would land be needed for such use. Perhaps not, but would that be any satisfaction to those whose lands were so taken? Under the laws of all the arid States lands may be taken for such purposes on payment of fair compensation. Shall the constitutional prohibition against taking property without due compensation be ignored in the case of the homesteader?

We have had withdrawn from entry some hundreds of thousands of acres of land under the title of "power sites." average citizen who has never seen these lands can not be expected to understand what they are like. Up here, within the sight of the dome of the Capitol, at the Great Falls of the Potomac, is a water power better than any within the 100,000 square miles of my State. And yet the waters of the Potomac have flowed over these precipices since time began. For many years, within easy carrying distance of transmission lines from this water power, a half a million people have dwelt. Yet that water flows unused, unharnessed, unuseful to men.

Out in the western mountains where there is one man to the square mile every tract of land near or upon which, by the most lively imagination, a dam or ditch may be built or a transmission line may ever be carried is withdrawn as a power site. You imagine power sites as occupying the sylvan dells and the rocky ledges abutting upon the dashing fountains of the mountains. Perhaps there are some such. Come out and see some of them on the desert, miles away from where water flows except in floods, along streams that have not fall enough to ever tempt power development, wherever a fervid imagination may conjure up a possible development, large or small. It is urged on behalf of this water-power reservation that if it is adopted the power sites may be restored to entry. Would it be impolite to call that executive coercion? For one, Mr. Chairman, I would say that, trying and vexatious as the powersite withdrawals are, they would stand unused and untenanted until Gabriel blew his horn before I would agree to that kind of a reservation in the patent of all homesteaders. [Applause.]

Certain gentlemen seem to fear that if we are not careful the people of the Western States will rob themselves or allow themselves to be despoiled by their own domestic enterprises; they will allow themselves to be crushed under the iron heel of monopoly; that they are so pusilianimous that they will allow their citizens to be plundered and their rights denied. If that is the kind of people that live in those Western States, the Federal arm is not strong enough to save them. But that is not the kind of people we have there.

Where have the people most successfully asserted their rights as against monopolistic combinations? In the States, What sovereignties have been most effective in controlling corporations? The States. But they say that the right of the State to control the development and use of power may be questioned; that great corporations may go out there and construct vast works and generate and transmit electricity and the State be powerless to control them.

STATE CONTROL COMPLETE.

There is absolutely nothing in the contention that the arid States can not fully control the use of water in the generation of electricity and provide the terms and conditions under which the power generated may be used and disposed of, but, in order that there might be no doubt in the minds of any on that question, I have introduced a bill for the restoration to appropriate entry the lands covered by the so-called power sites, as follows:

entry the lands covered by the so-called power sites, as follows:

A bill for the restoration under certain conditions of lands included in power-site withdrawals.

Be it enacted, ctc., That from and after the passage of this act lands included in power-site withdrawals shall be subject to disposal under the public-land laws applicable to such lands, but all locations, selections, or entries of such lands and all patents issued therefor shall be on the express condition that any denial on the part of the claimant or owner of such lands, or of any person or corporation occupying or using the same for the generation or transmission of electric power or energy, of the authority of the State in which such lands are located to supervise and control all such operations and to fix conditions and rates under which power may be generated, transmitted, or sold, or any refusal to accept or abide by any supervision, control, condition, or rate established by or under State authority shall work a forfeiture of all claim or title to such lands, and, upon the determination of such denial or refusal by a court of competent jurisdiction in a suit which may be instituted by any party in interest, the title to such lands shall revert to the United States.

In the State which I have the honor to represent there is no

In the State which I have the honor to represent there is no demand for power sites as such. I do not have in mind a single instance where anyone is seeking a power-site location on the public land in Wyoming. Fuel is cheap and steam plants are, in the main, and will be for many years to come, if not for all time, as cheap and more satisfactory than the majority of waterpower plants; but our people do desire here and there to utilize lands covered by power-site withdrawals for irrigation development, farming, and industrial purposes. Irrigation enterprises of considerable magnitude are delayed and sometimes made impossible by power-site withdrawals. The State alone can grant the right to use water for power and other purposes—the State can and does control such use. We are perfectly willing and we prefer, if there be any question about it, that the Govern-ment shall part with title to lands that may be used some day for power purposes, or to all lands, for that matter, with the express recognition of the right of the State to control. The right exists, but such a statute as I have proposed removes all doubt in the matter, and with such a law on the statute books no one can reasonably insist upon the continuation of the with-drawal of such lands from use, except those who use the bugaboo of water-power monopoly as an excuse for interference with the rights of the people in the States and to perpetuate a Federal bureaucratic control of the resources of the States.

Anyone securing the right to the use of water in the arid States secures it under condition that it shall be used under State control, and that being true, is it necessary for the Federal Government to step in and attempt to protect the people of the Western States against local water users? If we have reached a point where such control is necessary, then we have reached a stage where we must confess that self-government is a failure, and I have not as yet reached that point. Neither do

I ever expect to reach that point.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.
Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I wish before the gentleman closes that he would refer to the proposed limitation concerning timber.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, that is a proposition that was not contained in the amendment I have referred to. It was presented as a separate amendment and voted down. It proposed that no land principally valuable for its timber should pass under a homestead title. As a matter of fact, that is and always has been the law. Our laws have always contemplated that the land should pass into private ownership under that law which provided for the disposition of its resource of greatest value. Land is coal land if it is principally valuable for coal. Land is metalliferous mineral land if it is principally valuable for metalliferous products. It is oil land if it is principally valuable for oil; and by the same token it is timberland if it is principally valuable for timber. There are some of us whose people would never be affected by a provision of that kind. I do not believe that in the entire extent of my State there are 160 acres of land which any man would say were more valuable for timber than for agriculture that anybody would think of taking as a homestead.

The objection that comes principally from the gentleman from the Pacific slope is this, that we have now reached a time when along the slopes of the mountains and in the rugged hill country adjacent to irrigated ranches, adjacent to the farms, adjacent to the industries of the valley, are lands that are rough and broken and that contain some timber. They are not particularly valuable as farms, but they are valuable enough to make a good home for some man and his family who expects, in addition to the farming of his land, to earn his living partly by working in the adjacent vineyards or hayfields or in the industrial operations of the region of one sort and another.

So gradually people are taking up this rough, broken land, containing some timber, and I think there would be cases, and that is what gentlemen of the coast region fear, where an overzealous special agent would say that because the land was not valuable for agricultural purposes and did contain some timber therefore it was more valuable for timber than agricultural purposes. Now, we all know that there is practically no valuable timber anywhere on the public domain unreserved. All timberlands of any considerable value in the country have long since passed into private ownership or been included in forest reserves. What is left are the tag ends here and there

After our good lands have been disposed of, after all the better lands have gone, we have met this condition of public mind formed by a few—I was going to say fanatics, but I do not want to be offensive—formed by a few men of extreme views playing upon the cupidity of many well-meaning people who do not That has been the trouble. If the country could know as we know the conditions that surround us and confront us, if the country could know as we know that we have reached the time when we need the man on the land more than the man needs the land, that we are more anxious to get him than he is to come, that we are anxious to see our hillsides occupied and our valleys developed, that we know that our Commonwealths can not become great until we have a population such as they are capable of supporting, they would aid us in securing legislation which will encourage settlement and development instead of urging such as will retard and discourage it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Under the privilege to extend his remarks in the RECORD Mr. Mondell submitted a paper prepared by him giving reasons why, in his opinion, certain amendments proposed to the threeyear homestead bill should not be adopted.]

HOMESTEAD REQUIREMENTS.

Mr. MONDELL. In the letter of the Secretary of the Interior of February 15, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives the Secretary states that if Congress is to pass the three-year homestead law it should contain certain restrictions which are contained in Canadian homestead laws, and which he sets out as follows. I have suggested briefly why they should not be adopted.

"(1) No entry for a homestead shall convey any right to any minerals within or under the land covered by the entry, or any exclusive or other property or interest in, or any exclusive right or privileges with respect to, any lake, river, spring, stream, or other body of water within or bordering on or passing through the land covered by the entry."

Homestead entrymen under our laws must prove the nonmineral character of their lands. Except in the case of surface entries of coal land we have never departed from this policy. Mineral lands should be entered under mineral laws, with such exceptions of limited patents as Congress may from time to time provide. There is no more reason for departing from this policy under a three-year than under a five-year homestead.

The right which the homestead entryman acquires respecting water on or bordering his land depends on State law and not national legislation. In the few public-land States where the common-law rule of riparian rights prevails he has the usual rights of a riparian owner. In most of the remaining publicland States the law of appropriation prevails and no right to water attaches except by appropriation under State law and must be respected, else no reclamation could be accomplished. This feature of the Canadian law takes the place of our State statutes of appropriation. It has no place in American land laws.

"(2) The Commissioner of the General Land Office may, if he deems it necessary, require the holder of a homestead entry to furnish proof, by declaration or otherwise, that he is duly per-forming his homestead duties each year subsequent to the date of his entry.

This provision of yearly proof under the homestead law, similar to our provision under the desert-land law, may be necessary in Canada owing to the absence of the right of private contest. It is burdensome without being necessary under our system.

"(3) If a homestead entryman fails in any year to fulfill the requirements of the laws with respect thereto, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may cancel the entry, and all rights of the entryman therein shall cease and determine. Any subsequent applicant for the same land may be required to pay in cash reasonable compensation for the improvements of the person whose entry is canceled, and the commissioner may, in his discretion, pay to the latter the amount of such compensation in whole or in part."

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, or rather in the final analysis the Secretary of the Interior, now has the power to cancel entries for failure to comply with the provisions of the homestead laws, and does so cancel many entries every

The requirement of payment to the Government by the subsequent entryman of the value of improvements could not be grafted on our general homestead system without changing its entire character, and this is equally true of the repayment to the defeated entryman. These provisions are necessary under the Canadian system because of the fact that the Government makes loans to homesteaders and must have some means of reimbursement.

"(4) If the entry is obtained for lands which are ascertained to be valuable on account of merchantable timber upon it, the entry may be canceled within six months of its date.'

Our homestead laws have always recognized the right of the homesteader to homestead timbered lands fit for cultivation. If a departure was to have been made from this policy it should have been made when we had homestead lands containing valuable timber. There are no considerable areas of such lands now, and a provision of this kind now would simply increase the cost of administration and harass every settler who might homestead lands containing a few trees. The enlarged homestead law now prohibits the entry of lands containing merchantable timber.

"(5) If after entry is obtained it is ascertained that the land entered, or any portion thereof, is necessary for the protection of any water supply or for the location or construction of any works necessary to the development of any water power, or for purposes of any harbor or landing, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may, at any time prior to the issuance of patent, cancel the entry or withdraw any portion of the land entered; but where the land is required for the location or construction of works necessary to the development of any water power the withdrawal or cancellation shall extend only to such land as is necessary for that purpose."

We have no homestead lands on harbors or landings. When we did we had no such provision. The President now has power to withdraw lands for power sites, and rights of way for ditches are reserved in patents.

"(6) Everyone who buys, trades, or sells or professes to buy, trade, or sell land, or any interest in or control of land, open to homestead entry, or for which homestead entry has been made but upon which patent has not issued, shall be guilty of an indictable offense."

Any offer or contract to sell or encumber a homestead prior to submission of proof showing that a title has been earned subjects the entry to cancellation under our laws.

"(7) Every homestead entryman shall be required, in addition to residence, to have erected a habitable house on the land embraced in his entry and to have cultivated such an area of land in each year as is satisfactory to the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The bill reported requires proof of a habitable house, and as to the ordinary 160-acre homestead entry the amount of cultivation required is entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. On all other homesteads-enlarged and reclamation homesteads-the area of cultivation is prescribed

"(8) Every homestead entryman shall, prior to the issuance of patent and as a prerequisite therefor, make proof of his compliance with the law, such proof to be in the form of a sworn statement by the entryman, corroborated by the sworn statements of two disinterested parties resident in the vicinity of the lands covered by the entry.

All this and more is now required by our laws.

"(9) Any person who receives a consideration for abandoning a homestead or who pays a consideration for such abandonment shall forfeit the right of homestead entry.

Our laws do not recognize any consideration for relinquishing a homestead, but a homesteader is sometimes obliged to abandon his homestead before making proof, and it would work great hardship and serve no good purpose to attempt to punish him for securing what he can for his expenditures of time and money from another intending settler. Canada meets this situation by charging the new settler for improvements and paying the former settler. Their law recognizes certain direct assignments, and the prohibition against assignments generally is necessary to protect Government loans (see 5). Our plan is

The above statements make it clear that all the essential requirements contained in the Canadian law are met by our various statutes. Our Government makes no loans on homesteads, hence the Canadian provision for protecting loans has no place in our law. On the other hand, the right of private contest for failure to comply with the law is with us the strongest influence in enforcing compliance with the law.

On the other hand, Canada has many liberal provisions in her homestead laws we do not have, as follows:

1. In Canada one is a qualified entryman at 18 instead of 21, as with us, and a homestead may be reserved for a person

2. No one is barred by reason of owning other lands. us the entryman must not be proprietor of more than 160 acres.

3. The Canadian entryman need only reside on the land six months in a year, and residence on a farm owned by the entryman or his relatives within 9 miles of the homestead is accepted as residence on the homestead.

4. A Canadian homesteader may secure an additional 160 acres by preemption or purchase, and straight sales of agricultural lands are frequently made.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss for a few moments the question of the making of a tariff law and how certain bills have been made and passed by this Congress dealing with this subject, and why the President vetoed the bills that were passed during the special session. also want to point out that his action in vetoing the several bills was fortunate from a standpoint of the business of the country and the best interests of the people, and was justifiable from every standpoint. I will also discuss briefly the present position of the Republican Party in levying duties, and show why that party ought to be intrusted to enact tariff legislation. begin by asking and answering the following questions:

Are you a business man?

If so, would you voluntarily allow a lawyer or a professional politician to manage your business affairs?

Certainly not.

Then, are you willing that a tariff law which vitally affects your business shall be framed by a committee of lawyers who have no business training or experience and no knowledge of the conditions upon which your welfare depends?

The answer must be emphatically "No."

And yet this is the dangerous and absurd policy of the Democratic Party. It has attempted to carry out its program. The fact that it has been unsuccessful and that the country has been saved from disaster is due to the wisdom, courage, and patriotism of President Taft.

His action adds to his splendid record of notable achieve-

The story of what President Taft has done and is doing must appeal forcibly not only to business men everywhere, but to the farmer, the workingman, and to every class of citizen. It is due to the sagacity of President Taft that a Tariff Board has been created and that honest, straightforward, and sensible business principles are being applied to the revision of the tariff.

Whatever else the numerous and intricate details of the tariff may be, they are neither legal nor political in their nature. They are primarily questions of business. into every phase of production and manufacture. They enter The tariff schedules must take into consideration the practical questions of cost of production, the supply of raw material, the effect of foreign labor competition upon the welfare of the American workingman. The Tariff Board, a nonpolitical, nonpartisan organization of experts, investigates and reports upon these matters. No corporation would undertake to settle the all-important and vital details of manufacture by consulting either lawyers or professional politicians. Business men must manage business affairs.

This is President Taft's idea. He knows that the methods by which tariff schedules have been prepared in the past have been faulty and unsatisfactory. Tariff laws, almost invariably, have been framed to meet some political exigency and by men who, unfortunately, were not conversant with business affairs. President Taft realizes that whatever criticism may attach to the present tariff law is due to the fact, as stated by him in a message to Congress, that the rapidity with which it was pre-pared made it impossible to base it upon sufficient accurate information. Out of his wise suggestion that the imposition of tariff duties should be more of a business question and less of a political question and that the rates should be ascertained by experts of long training and accurate knowledge the Tariff Board was born.

Why did President Taft take this action so important to the business interests of the country?

Look at this list of Democratic Representatives and their OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama (no profession or occupation given in the Congressional Directory).

CHOICE B. RANDELL, of Texas, lawyer.

Francis Burton Harrison, of New York, lawyer.

WILLIAM G. BRANTLEY, of Georgia, lawyer.

Dorsey W. Shackleford, of Missouri (no profession or occupation given in the Congressional Directory)

CLAUDE KITCHIN, of North Carolina, lawyer. OLLIE M. JAMES, of Kentucky, lawyer.

HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, lawyer. Lincoln Dixon, of Indiana, lawyer.

WILLIAM HUGHES, of New Jersey (no profession or occupation given in the Congressional Directory).

CORDELL HULL, of Tennessee, lawyer. W. S. Hammond, of Minnesota, lawyer.

Andrew J. Peters, of Massachusetts, lawyer. A. MITCHELL PALMER, of Pennsylvania, lawyer.

Is this the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives? Not at all. It is the entire Democratic membership of the Ways and Means Committee, which has undertaken to regulate the enormous business of this country through the tariff bills which it has framed. The profession which they follow is shown in their autobiographies in the Congressional Directory.

Thus in a committee which prepares measures which are purely commercial and which deal with prices, weights, importations of all kinds, and business matters generally there are 11 lawyers out of 14 members, and if the other 3 have any business experience or training it was not of sufficient value or extent to be noted in their autobiographies. The great commercial interests of the country can not afford to have their enormous investments intrusted to the care of men who have no connection with nor knowledge of business affairs. wisdom in dealing with the adjustment of labor cost and the relation of raw material to the finished product is not as desirable as practical knowledge and experience. It could not be otherwise than that a bill prepared by lawyers should fail to stand the test of business analysis.

The mere fact that the bill framed by the Democratic Ways and Means Committee would have been enacted into law but for President Taft's veto illustrates the utter incapacity of the Democratic Party to deal with national affairs. It must not be forgotten that if the Democratic House of Representatives is continued in power this same committee of lawyers will again attempt to regulate the tariff, with certain disaster to the President Taft believes, and the country believes with him, that when legislation is attempted which vitally concerns the business interests of the country such legislation should be based upon an intelligent understanding of all the facts. The work done by the Tariff Board appointed by him is the first effort in the history of the country to place tariff revision upon a systematic and sensible basis. This is so true and the support which the American people will give President Taft for his course in the matter is so certain that the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives is doing its utmost to discredit the President's sagacious policy. It only needs, how-ever, an intelligent understanding throughout the country of the President's position to win him universal commendation. There is no comparison between the haphazard, uncertain, and inaccurate methods pursued by the Democrats and the direct, practical, and safe plan which the President originated, advocates, and would put into complete operation.

Labor constitutes a large proportion of the expense in all production and manufacture. The prime factor in the making of a tariff law is the difference in labor cost between the United States and foreign countries. The Tariff Board has thoroughly and conscientiously investigated this difference in order that duties should be made adequate, and only adequate, to equalize the difference in cost and production at home and abroad. Before it could make its report, the Democratic House of Representatives sought to create some popularity for itself by revising the wool schedule, regarding which there had been considerable controversy. Its work was so illogical, so far removed from all knowledge of business conditions, and so threatening to the industries of the country that President Taft promptly and emphatically vetoed the measure. He took the ground that the proposed law was injurious to public policy and failed to show a fair regard for the interests of the producers and the manufacturers, on the one hand, and the consumers on the other.

But when the Tariff Board, as the outcome of painstaking investigation into every phase of the wool industry, submitted a unanimous report upon the wool schedule President Taft promptly recommended to Congress that it "proceed to a consideration of this schedule with a view to its revision and a general reduction of rates."

And when the Tariff Board, having conducted a similar thorough and scientific inquiry into the details of the cotton schedule, submitted another unanimous report, President Taft, with true progressive spirit, again indicated his willingness to accept accurate and rational tariff revision. He asked Congress to proceed to revise the schedule and reduce the rates.

I base this recommendation-

He said-

on the declaration of the platform on which I was elected, that a reasonable protective tariff should be adjusted to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

The tariff law is composed of thousands of items, each one dealing with some American industry. These must be fitted together like some intricate piece of machinery, each one working in harmony with the other, so as to form a perfect union of labor and capital, production and consumption. To attempt to fit together these multitudinous parts without expert knowledge and advice is like asking a blacksmith to mend a watch.

Men whose minds are not trained along business lines, who have no conception of business details, and who have had no connection with business concerns can not revise the tariff with accuracy or justice. A committee of Congress may summon witnesses; but these, in the main, have only one point of view their own selfish considerations. What is needed, therefore, is the plan which President Taft has devised as the logical outcome of the declaration of the Republican national platform—a plan which enables an expert board to investigate thoroughly, intelligently, and impartially the conditions existing at home 1912 over $93,000,000 to the Army, and that was for war.

and abroad and to report its findings of fact. Under such a plan the element of uncertainty is eliminated and a compre hensive, satisfactory law is secured which, in the words of President Taft, is based upon public policy and has a fair regard for the interests of the producers and the manufacturers, on the one hand, and the consumers on the other.

The tariff law does not affect big business alone. It enters into the welfare of every manufacturer, whether he owns a single factory or operates upon a large scale. It concerns every farmer, whether he be the possessor of a few acres or an immense ranch. It is vital to the workingman, because it must take into consideration the product of his poorly paid fellow worker in foreign lands. It is, above all, the principal factor in the life of every American citizen, because upon the proper application of the principle of protection rests the prosperity of the entire country.

If the tariff is too low, as was the case with the Democratic tariff of 1803, manufactories are compelled to close, workmen are out of employment, and universal distress and suffering prevail. If the tariff is too high, as may happen when there is no intelligent basis of schedule construction, complaints of favoritism and undue advantage must necessarily arise. Republican Party, under the statesmanlike leadership of President Taft, would solve the tariff problem so as to avoid both extremes. Knowing that through the operation of the principle of protection the United States has reached its present un-paralleled prosperity, it will not allow that principle to be sacrificed. The years when protection was menaced were years of leanness and suffering. Neither will it willingly allow the welfare of the country to be jeopardized by tariff laws framed upon personal influence or through legislative guesswork. It proposes a revision and reduction of the tariff upon solid, substantial, and practical lines, which will avoid, to again quote the words of President Taft—

The evil from which the business of the country has in times past suffered most grievously by stagnation and uncertainty, pending a settlement of a law affecting all business directly or indirectly.

This is the intelligent policy and the comprehensive program which the Republican Party presents to the business interests of the country.

When it has become thoroughly known to the American people there can be but one response. It will be overwhelmingly sustained at the polls. It means business stability, a fair profit to the producer and manufacturer, the largest degree of consideration for the workingman and the consumer. It means a revision of the tariff schedules without serious disruption of business with its attendant evils of enforced idleness and hunger. It demonstrates the regard of the Republican Party for the public welfare and will be carried to a triumphant conclusion through the energy and wisdom of President Taft.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 40 minutes

Mr. MoON of Pennesylvania [Mr. Grecg].

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania [Mr. Chairman, the bill under present consideration, generally known as the Post Office appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, carrying with it not only the appropriation of money necessary for conducting the postal affairs of the Government for the ensuing year, but also new legislation in regard to postal affairs, is probably the most radical departure from past reports and bills known in the history of our country. Many reasons can possibly be given for the departure from previous custom in regard to the presentation of appropriation bills by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, but suffice it to say that sufficient reason is given when it is stated that progressive legislation has been demanded for years without any tangible results, and that the party in power in the House has concluded that the public is entitled to that relief for which it has been contending for years. That relief from past conditions was needed can not be denied. That relief is forthcoming and will be admitted upon a perusal of this bill, to which I shall refer Under the system of conducting the affairs of this Government there are many departments that are necessary to be taken care of in appropriations. They include Agriculture; the Army; the Diplomatic and Consular Service; the District of Columbia; fortifications; Indian affairs; the legislative, judicial, and executive branches; the Military Academy; the Navy; pensions; rivers and harbors; and many other items included in the sundry civil, deficiency, and miscellaneous appropriation bills, together with the permanent annual appropriations which are provided for by law. The grand total for appropriations made for the year ending June 30, 1912, was $1,026,682,881.72. Practically all of the revenue required to carry on the business of the Nation is received through the Treasury Department in the way of taxes, internal-revenue receipts, and the Post Office Department. We appropriated for

We appropriated in 1912 almost $5,500,000 for fortifications, and that was for war; we appropriated for the same period $1,163,000 and over for the Military Academy, and that was for war; for the same year we appropriated $126,478,000 and over for the Navy, and that was for war; for the same year we appropriated $153,682,000 for pensions, the fruits of war; and yet for agricultural purposes only $16,900,000, to be used in times of To the Diplomatic and Consular Service $3,988,000 and some dollars for obtaining and maintaining peace, and for the post office $259,134,468; and yet the post office, as I have stated, is practically the only self-sustaining branch of the Government outside of the Treasury Department.

A DEFICIT IN THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Early in this session of Congress we were all congratulating ourselves that the Post Office Department was self-sustaining, but the final figures from the auditor show a deficit in the department for the fiscal year of 1912 of $627,845.94, instead of a surplus of $219,118.12. No department of the Government is such a benefactor for its welfare and existence as the Post Office Department. Through it messages of love and letters of sorrow are transmitted with wonderful dispatch. The channels of business would be clogged without its regular and speedy use. Education, which has been said to be "the bulwark of our Nation," is contained in the numberless newspapers, magazines, and periodicals which are carried daily, weekly, and monthly by means of this wonderful system. And right here let me say that in this age of progress, in this new age, in this great twentieth century, when nearly all transportation is revolutionized by the wonderful motive power electricity, in this age of cheap and swift and ever cheaper and swifter transportation, in this age when the thoughts of the master minds and the pencilings of the less educated can be sent in the custody of our Federal Government from ocean to ocean and from the Lakes to the Gulf, it will not do for this great leader among nations to lag behind in this marvelous march of progress.

The most potent factor that we have had in developing our country, in educating our people, in making them more patri-otic, and in bringing them closer to others is the newspaper, the periodical, and the magazine. The post office, whether urban or interurban, has been a great factor in disseminating information to our people, and this great House of Representatives. which is so responsive to the wishes of the people, will not be picayunish in providing for the welfare of this branch of the Government.

While the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has been liberal in its allowances and has taken care of the various branches of the Post Office Department which are most instrumental in bringing about good service to the patrons, yet it is well to remember that, although the Postmaster General submitted revised estimates aggregating $261,180,631, the committee recommends for appropriation in this bill $259,829,749, which is a decrease in the amount of the final department estimates of $1,352,314.

STEEL BAILWAY MAIL CARS.

Heretofore I have said that radical changes in the existing law have been made in the bill now before the committee. In the first instance it has provided:

That after the 1st of July, 1917, the Postmaster General shall not approve or allow to be used or pay for any full railway post-office car not constructed of steel, steel underframe, or equally indestructible material, and not less than 20 per cent of the new equipment shall be put into operation annually after July, 1912; and after the passage of this act no contract shall be entered into for the construction of steel underframe cars.

This provision was inserted in the bill to provide for the ultimate protection of railway mail clerks, whose lives are in constant danger in the discharge of their duties from the defective postal-car construction. No class of men employed in the Government service to-day-and in saying this I take into consideration the naval and military services of our country-are in more constant danger of injury and death than they.

While it is true that the day for changes in cars was fixed at July, 1917, this was done to avoid injustice being done under the present contracts for the use of mail cars and to afford the department time for changing the cars to the class demanded.

Another section provides against fraud by mail contractors, preventing them from entering into any combination for furnishing supplies to the Government.

Another section provides for the increase in the bonds of naval mail clerks. Another provides against the fraud practiced in weighing the mail and the readjustment of compensation therefor. This bill also takes another advance step in fixing for all carriers in the City Delivery Service and clerks in the first and second class post offices an eight-hour day and extra pay, or compensatory time, for work by carriers in those offices.

This bill also provides for the reclassification of railway postal clerks and for increasing their pay. It provides for this important branch of the postal service the total sum of $21,035,550. Moreover, it allows an increase for travel allowance of railway mail clerks over the appropriation of 1912. This increase will provide for the full allowance of $1 per day provided for under existing law. It also provides for an increase in the compensation paid the carriers in the Rural Delivery Service.

FREE MAIL DELIVERY IN TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

Probably one of the most important extensions of the postal service will be found in section 10 of this bill, which provides that after June 30, 1912, an experimental mail delivery may be established in towns and villages having post offices of the second and third class that are not by law now entitled to Free Delivery Service. This practically means that in the future all of the towns of our country having a population of 1,000 or more will enjoy Free Delivery Service to the same extent as those patrons of the post offices who live in much larger towns and cities. Heretofore the free delivery of mail matter was confined to every incorporated city, village, or borough containing a population of 50,000 within its corporate limits and at every place containing a population not less than 10,000 within its corporate limits, or at any post office which provides a gross revenue not less than $10,000, and, of course, to the Rural Free Delivery Service. It also provides for the promotion of clerks in post offices of the first and second class by an automatic process.

THE "GAG RULE" CONDEMNED.

One of the most salient features of this bill is section 6, which is intended to protect employees against oppression and in the right of free speech and the right to consult their representatives. Two orders have emanated from the Executives, in the following language:

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S ORDER.

All officers and employees of the United States of every description, serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

It is hereby ordered that no bureau, office, or division chief, or subordinate in any department of the Government, and no officer of the Army or Navy or Marine Corps stationed in Washington, shall apply to either House of Congress, or to any committee of either House of Congress, or to any Member of Congress, for legislation, or for appropriations, or for congressional action of any kind, except with the consent and knowledge of the head of the department; nor shall any such person respond to any request for information from either House of Congress, or any committee of either House of Congress, or any Member of Congress, except through, or as authorized by, the head of his department.

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

Heretofore and now the post-office clerk, the carrier, and railway mail clerk was not permitted to appeal to his Representa-tive in Congress. If he appealed to one of the heads of the department that particular officer sent it back to the postmaster or the head of his division. The result was that forever thereafter this particular employee enjoyed the ill will of his immediate superior. The fact is that the postmaster becomes the boss of that particular locality, and a complaint not made to him receives no consideration whatever. It is responsible for the discontent that exists now among all of the postal employees of the Nation, and it is for the purpose of wiping out the existence of this despicable "gag rule" that this provision is inserted. The rule is unjust, unfair, and against the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which provides for the right of appeal and the right of free speech to all its citizens.

THE PARCEL POST.

By far the most important feature of this bill is that section providing for the parcel post. I doubt if any legislation enacted by the present Congress will be so important as the adoption of this provision. For years the people of our Nation have been petitioning Congress for the establishment of such a system, and the mouthpieces of the people of the Nation-the newspapers and periodicals-have been demanding that the United States Government should institute and maintain a parcel-post system. Attention has been directed time and again to the methods prevailing in foreign countries and the success that has attended the establishment of the parcel-post system, until today the general demand for some system of parcel post has become so great that this Congress will be required, if it desires to respond to the wishes of the people, to enact some legislation along this line. Whatever it is must necessarily be experimental in its character. Whatever this experiment, I am positive that ultimately—in fact, presently—there will be established a system that will give entire satisfaction to the entire country. There is no question about the legal right to carry on such a business. The fundamental law gives authority to Congress. In the final due to the Constitution of the United gress. In the final draft of the Constitution of the United States as adopted, among the granted and enumerated powers of the Federal Government, in section 8, we find the following language: "Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads.

Long before the adoption of this instrument the provisional government and the Colonies and the various States under the Articles of Confederation provided for the employment in the public service of expresses and special messengers in taking and carrying private letters. So that there was long precedent and carrying private letters. So that there was long precedent for including in the final draft of the Constitution the provision that I have herein referred to, viz: "Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads." The act of February 20, 1792, was the first after the adoption of the Constitution which fixed the rates of postage on mail matter, and it specifically provided for the carrying of packets. President Monroe, in a message to Congress dated May 4, 1822, called attention to the fact that Congress was given power to locate post offices and routes by which mails should be carried from one post

So as to diffuse intelligence as extensively and to make the institution as useful as possible; to fix the postage to be paid on every letter and packet that is carried; to support the establishment and to protect the post office.

Further on he said:

Post offices were made for the country, and not the country for them. They are the offspring of improvement.

And from that date on the importance of the post office in the development of the country and its usefulness to all the people was accentuated in the messages of Presidents succeeding Monroe and by the legislative actions of the various Congresses. PARCEL POST IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The present agitation of the parcel-post system, I believe, is indirectly chargeable to the fact that parcels can be sent to foreign countries under the international union agreements at a rate of 12 cents per pound up to 11 pounds, while it costs the people of our Nation 16 cents per pound to mail a parcel weighing not more than 4 pounds to any point within the United States. This discrimination is unjust and is more frequently used as an illustration in favor of a parcel-post system within the United States than any other argument that can be produced.

It is contended that if the Government of the United States can carry a parcel from San Francisco to Paris at 12 cents per pound, why should the American pay 16 cents per pound and the weight be limited to 4 pounds, while the foreigner's weight has an 11-pound limit? There was and is no answer to this question. Further it was inquired that if Italy, France, the United Kingdom, Germany, Austria, and many other foreign nations, 23 in all, and many of them much weaker than ourselves, can enjoy the blessings of a parcel post, why not this great and powerful Nation of ours? In the meantime free delivery has been extended to the rural communities and the telephone has been installed. Why can not the farmer have the benefit of a parcel-post system in order to market his products and bring him in closer touch with the outside world? these questions and the varying interests have culminated in a universal demand for a parcel-post system, and at this present session of Congress, in this House alone, we find no less than 17 different bills, varying from the number of pounds to be carried in the United States malls at a specific sum per pound to 2 bills providing for the condemnation and purchase of the franchises, and so forth, of the express companies of the United States for the purpose of establishing a parcel-postal express.

PROVISIONS OF PRESENT BILL.

Out of this multiplicity of bills the Committee has framed the bill which is now under consideration. This bill provides as follows:

That hereafter postage shall be paid on matter of the fourth class at the rate of 12 cents per pound, except as herein provided.

That no article, package, or parcel shall be mailable as matter of the fourth class which exceeds 11 pounds in weight, except as herein pro-

That no article, package, or parcel shall be maliable as matter of the fourth class which exceeds 11 pounds in weight, except as herein provided.

That on each and all rural mail delivery routes of the United States the postmaster at the starting point of such route shall, until June 30, 1914, receive and deliver to the carrier or carriers of said routes all articles, parcels, or packages not prohibited to the mails by law and failing under the definition of fourth-class matter and not weighing in excess of 11 pounds, for transportation and delivery on said routes only; and the carriers shall receive at intermediate points on all rural routes such mall matter of the fourth class for delivery on their respective routes only.

That postage shall be paid on all articles, parcels, or packages entitled to transportation under the provisions of this act as matter of the fourth class on rural mail delivery routes only at the following rates: One cent for each 2 ounces or less, 2 cents for more than 2 ounces but not more than 4 ounces, 3 cents for more than 4 ounces but not more than 8 ounces, 4 cents for more than 8 ounces but not more than 12 ounces, 5 cents for more than 12 ounces but not more than a pound, and 2 cents per pound for each additional pound or fraction thereof up to and including a total of 11 pounds. That the Postmaster General shall make all rules and regulations necessary and not inconsistent with law to the proper execution of this act.

That for the purpose of a full and complete inquiry and investigation into the feasibility and propriety of the establishment of a general parcel post a commission of six persons, three of whom shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and three by the President of the Senate, is constituted, with full power to appoint clerks, stenographers, and experts to assist them in this work. They shall review the testimony already taken on the subject of parcel post by deem desirable. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of this commission the su

This question, then, brings us squarely to the issue. I am satisfied that at this time there are those who will contend that this bill does not purpose giving a parcel post; that it is intended to delay action on this important subject; in short, that it is intended as a sop to the people; and, further, that it is intended to mollify certain interests. Nothing could be farther from the truth. When I recall the many meetings that were held by this great Post Office Committee, when I recall that for many days, yes, weeks, the committee, during the torrid weather of last summer, sat and listened with patience and interest to the arguments for and against the parcel-post system, undertaking to secure all possible information on the when I recall that for days this past winter the memsubject. bers of this committee, some of whom have been long in the service of this House and their country, considered, consulted, and argued on the parcel-post question, each trying to evolve a bill that would suit the demands of the country and respond to the wishes of the greatest number—I repeat, when I recall all these investigations, without hesitation I challenge any man in this Chamber to even doubt the integrity of the bill or the lofty purposes that inspired it. I know that when the fervor of this discussion has ended all, with one accord, will acclaim that this bill is entirely fair and satisfactory.

THE OPPOSITION TO THE PARCEL POST.

I am fully aware that great opposition has been manifested to the passage of a parcel-post measure. Since the report of the committee has been filed in the House an attack has been made on section 8 of this bill, which I have quoted, by those who are in favor of the immediate passage of an unlimited parcel-post bill and by those who demand a postal express. The opposition to a parcel-post system, in the first instance, originates with those who are unalterably opposed to a general parcel post, contending that not only this bill but all bills which attempt to regulate the rate of postage on fourth-class mail is an entering wedge to the system. Those who reason thus are likely correct, and all classes of people in the United States might as well make up their minds now as well as later that the parcel post is coming and that when it comes it will The opponents of a general unlimited parcel be here to stay. The opponents of a general unlimited parcel post insist that it will tend to concentrate business in the large cities and be injurious to rural communities and small towns and cities; that it will destroy the prosperity of innumerable towns and villages. In short, the principal opposition comes from those merchants who honestly believe and earnestly contend that it discriminates against the class known as the countered that the class known as the class known a try merchant and favors the great retail mail-order houses located in many of the large cities.

THE MAIL-ORDER HOUSE.

It is a fact that the mail-order house exists. It has existed for many years, and now as heretofore the great bulk of its business has been done throughout the country by freight and occasionally by express. The reason of this is that it makes the article to the consumer cheaper. The articles which are purchased from the mail-order house are usually of the character known as "staples." As I have stated, it is the rule that these are shipped by freight. The consumer pays the freight at the place of delivery. The mail-order house receives its money for the articles purchased before delivery, and so far as an individual transaction between the mail-order house and the purchaser is concerned, the transaction is ended there. If the mail-order house undertook to do business with its customer through the Post Office Department, a different condition would The mail-order house would be compelled to pay the postage freight, if you so desire to call it, in advance. result would be that the mail-order house would be compelled to do one of two things: First, to increase the price-list cost of the article in order to meet the paid-in-advance freight or postage; or, second, lose a profit to that exent. But the parcel post will not be the thorn in the side of the merchant that will hurt. The parcel post will not be the medium that will hurt the merchant. The mail-order house will continue to do business in the same old way, just as it has in the past, parcel post or no parcel post. The chief medium through which the mall-order house has been transacting its business in the past has been through its agents. The parcel post will not increase this character of business nor can it prohibit it. The system by which the agent works is something like this: Desiring to engage in business, the agent writes to a mail-order house and secures a catalogue, together with a contract from the house showing the amount of his commission. The agent then proceeds to solicit orders from the residents, householders of his community, and with the money, the cost price, less his commission, he mails these orders to the mail-order house. goods ordered are then selected, boxed or crated, and then consigned and shipped by freight to the agent, who proceeds to distribute the particular orders given by his customers. Just here is where the competition comes in with the local merchant.

The mail-order house buys in large quantities, or perhaps buys what is known as "seconds," and consequently thus is enabled to undersell the local merchant either by selling cheaper for the reason already given or because it is an inferior article which it not known by the customer. This agent will not cease to work and cease to sell. He can not and will not use the parcel post. The freight rate is much cheaper, and for the further reason that he is protected by law by the decisions of the highest court in our land.

More than once actions at law have been instituted for the purpose of having the court declare that when a mail-order house filled an order, for example, in the city of Chicago and shipped it to Pittsburgh, and at the latter place was distributed snipped it to Pittsburgh, and at the latter place was distributed by the agent of the mail-order house, that the sale took place in Pittsburgh and therefore the agent would be amenable to the local and mercantile laws of Pittsburgh. The Supreme Court of the United States held otherwise, and in two cases which I now recall, both being Pennsylvania cases, specifically that such a sale was local. In the case of Regular, that held that such a sale was legal. In the case of Rearick v. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (203 U. S., 507), the Supreme Court of the United States, reversing the Superior

Supreme Court of the United States, reversing the Superior Court of Pennsylvania, said:

Interstate commerce is unlawfully burdened by a municipal ordinance exacting a license fee from a person employed by a foreign corporation to solicit within the municipality orders for groceries, which the company fills by shipping goods to him for delivery to, and the collection of the purchase price from, the customer, who has the right to refuse the goods if not equal to samples, such goods always being shipped in distinct packages, corresponding to the several orders, except in the case of brooms, which, after being tagged and marked like the other articles, according to their number, are then tied together in bundles of about a dozen and wrapped up conveniently for shipment.

This same doctrine was laid to

This same doctrine was laid down earlier in another Pennsylvania case, Brennan v. City of Titusville (153 U. S., 289), and was followed in the case of the Chicago Portrait Co. v. City of Macon (147 Fed. Rep.). Thus it will be seen that the retail merchant will not need fear the parcel post, but his ancient enemy the agent who represents a foreign concern and who uses the railroad freight as his medium for distribution.

THE COUNTRY MERCHANT.

Again it is urged that the parcel post will drive the exclusively country merchant out of business-the merchant who trades in the small villages. I can not see that this will happen; but, on the contrary, I believe it will help. To-day he handles a small stock and his customers are confined to the residents of his immediate vicinity. His stock is not necessarily There is no need that it should be big, consequently he makes a small profit and is satisfied. But institute the parcel post on his rural route, and with the telephone, watch his business increase. The trade he enjoyed before will not leave him. His old customers will remain and trade with him just as they did before, and in addition will bring to him their produce, so that he can in turn trade with the resident of the larger town or city. In other words, the country merchant who is up to date will extend his former small trade heretofore confined to his small community by getting in touch with various householders of the larger towns and cities, and daily, if necessary, furnish them with the necessaries of life, fresh, pure, and unstored. It will be but a simple process of expansion, and the live, active, American storekeeper will readily adapt himself to the changed conditions and establish a trade which will greatly exceed his fondest dreams. Moreover, this merchant, of necessity, purchases in small quantities. He buys from a jobber or a merchant in a larger adjoining town who carries a larger stock with a greater assortment. He will, under the parcel post, write or telephone, and in a day replenish his stock, outside of large orders for groceries and like articles, at a cost much below the price he now pays in freight or expressage, with the additional drayage or the time lost in using his own conveyance.

Postmaster General Meyer, in 1908, said:

Postmaster General Meyer, in 1998, said:

The free rural delivery has improved materially and intellectually the life of great numbers of the farmers and those living in rural communities. Is it too much to ask that the department shall make a further use of this important system, a use which, while adding appreciably to the postal revenues, will directly and vitally benefit every man, woman, and child within reach of a rural route? The countryman would have the necessities of life delivered at his age at an average cost of 2 cents a pound, thereby facilitating and increasing consumption. This would mean augmentation of the trade of the thousands of country merchants. The commercial traveler should appreciate the advantages of this system; it would increase his orders, because the country merchant buys from the jobber or wholesaler. Every component part of our commercial system would feel the effects of an increased prosperity.

What the Postmaster General said in 1908 is true to a greater degree to-day

As I said before, another objection to the present bill comes from those who contend that this bill which provides a system of parcel post does not go far enough; that it is a makeshift and will not give an unlimited parcel post. A careful reading of the bill will disclose the fact that the real purpose is to provide the very thing that its opponents deuy it has given. It not only provides a flat rate of 12 cents per pound upon packages up to 11 pounds and a rate of 5 cents per pound for the first pound and 2 cents additional up to 11 pounds over the rural routes, but it specifically provides that a commission to be composed of Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate take up the question in an orderly, systematic way, and specifically provides the sum of $25,000 for "a full and complete inquiry and investigation into the feasibility and propriety of the establishment of a general parcel post." This committee will have the assistance of all the testimony, documents, and records of the House and Senate, together with the very valuable testimony recently adduced at the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Commission, when the question of the excessive charges of express companies for carrying goods was in process of investigation, as well as the right to call experts to assist them in this work. It is proposed in at least two bills which have been introduced in the House and which, to all intents and purposes and the end to be obtained, to condemn and purchase the franchise, rights, real, and personal property of express companies. Much circulation has been given not only to these bills, but to the speeches delivered on this subject in the House, with the result that there is a general demand caused, I think, by a misunderstanding of the facts and a wrong impression of the effects of these bills by the people at large, and especially by the farmers of the Nation. It is proposed in both these bills to condemn the franchises of the express companies and to cause them to be operated under the powers conferred upon the Post Office Department. To my mind, such a course is unwarranted.

THE EXPRESS COMPANIES AND THE PARCEL POST.

It is true that for years the express companies have been preying upon the people of the country who have had occasion and necessity to ship packages and parcels over their routes. It is also true that these express companies have made fabulous sums from their business. The revelations made in the Interstate Commerce Commission investigation into the conduct of the express business are astounding. For instance, it was discovered that the earnings of one company from the time of its formation to the time of the hearings had been $598,158,930, and in that time it had distributed dividends amounting to $43,500,000, yet it practically began business without a cent of actually invested capital. The Interstate Commerce Commission, in its second annual report on the statistics of express companies in the United States for the year ended June 30, 1910, shows that the net operating revenue of the 13 companies covered by its report increased from $12,294,008 in 1909 to $14,508,280 in 1910, a gain of $2,214,272, or 18.01 per cent. I only offer these figures at this time for the purpose of showing that if the Federal Government undertakes to go into this business of a general parcel post-and it can do so at a profit-it will practically wipe out any deficit in the Post Office Department. But why should the United States Government, by condemnation proceedings or by contract of sale with these express companies, take over their franchises, rights, and properties?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to yield? If he does not, I will not press the question.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. My time is very limited.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not want to take up the gentleman's time, of course, if he does not desire me to ask the question.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has six minutes remaining. Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I think that is just about sufficient time to enable me to conclude.

Mr. LEWIS. If the gentleman prefers not to yield, under the circumstances, that is all right.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. If we proceed according to either of the bills that have been introduced, we do so by condemnation proceedings. Now, how do these bills provide, then that the Government shall acquire the rights, privileges, and properties of the express companies? The bills themselves answer, by appraisement. This appraise that shall be made in the first instance by the Interstate Commerce Commission. And then, if either party shall be dissatisfied with the amount awarded, the same may, on appeal by either party, be reviewed and revised by a court of commerce, and from its determina-tion a further appeal may lie on behalf of either party to the Supreme Court of the United States to determine the amount of the just compensation to which said express companies shall be entitled. If the express companies are making the fabulous sums that I have named, and which are correct according to the best statistics we can gather, will they willingly relinquish their franchises, rights, and properties to the Government, or will they contest this condemnation not only through the Interstate Commerce Commission but in the Commerce Court and in the Supreme Court of the United States?

You all know the delays of the appellate courts and the technicalities that are raised. Do you suppose that these express companies would give up their great profits without a fight to the last ditch? No. I will venture the prediction that with the usual law's delays, and in either case there would be no usual delays but unusual ones, that a decade would not see the end of these cases. Then why should the United States Government with all its facilities and with all its equipments pay the express companies gigantic prices and sums for a business that it is fully able to institute, originate, and conduct. The general balance-sheet statement of the express companies as of June 30, 1910, shows that the total assets of these 13 companies were $204,710,036.91, and of this amount the items which are most directly devoted to the service approximate:

5, 685, 833, 34

10, 916, 445, 46 Real property_____ Equipment
Materials and supplies
Advance payments on contracts
Franchises, good will, etc 43, 260, 442, 50

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman ought to yield on that point. The gentleman is quoting the general balance sheet of the express companies of America as being something over $200,000,000. He has not stated that at least $160,000,000 of that balance sheet represents investments of the express companies in outside undertakings—investments wholly separable from the capital invested in the express functions per se, and without intention, of course, he may lead his hearers and readers to a false conception of the cost of acquiring the express companies of the country.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I am afraid the gentleman was not paying very close attention.

Mr. LEWIS. I paid very close attention.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I said the total assets of these 13 companies were $204,710,000, and of this amount the items which are most directly devoted to the service approximate a total of $43,260,442.50, which leaves a balance to be applied to the particular item to which the gentleman refers, and that is the very reason I say that the express companies will not, under any circumstance, agree to give up the things they now own without a great long fight.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Yes. Mr. LOBECK. Would it be best for the Government, in the opinion of the gentleman, to buy their outside investments-

Mr. LOBECK. To prosecute the postal express company? Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. What I do mean to say is this, that owing to the fact that these 13 express companies own these particular investments-

Mr. LOBECK. Outside—
Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Yes; if you would in any way attempt to take away from them the carrying of express matter, such as they are carrying now, under those circumstances and owing to the fact that they do own these things that are probably valuable, and in view of the fact that they carry the amount of express matter that they do, they would fight us to the last ditch. We do not need to condemn the property of the last difen. We do not need to condemn the property of the express companies. I should oppose that feature of it. What I contend for is this, that through this commission that is provided for in section 8 of this bill, the United States Government can and will operate a system of express according to zones and according to the ideas which that particular commission shall report to Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I would like to have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman. Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Gregg] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LOBECK. Then the gentleman would favor a zone system? Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I will come to that in a moment.

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD ESTABLISH ITS OWN EXPRESS SYSTEM.

Thus it will be seen that these express companies can not be taken over by the Government without great cost and long and tedious legislation. I repeat that there is no necessity for an investment of this kind. The Government does not need to take them over at a cost of $1,000,000 or many million dollars. All it needs to do is to establish its own express service by a parcel-post system.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, will the gentleman yield again?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman is a very ardent advocate, as I judge from his remarks, of the postal transport of the small shipment. Naturally, of course, he will favor its being carried on the most economical terms. I want to suggest to him that the advantage in taking over the express companies and the express contracts is that the Government would then be paying about 7 cents a ton-mile to the railways for carrying the shipments, whereas under the present postal railway pay we are paying about 12 cents a ton-mile, and the cost of acquiring the express companies would probably be saved to the Government in the first year of postal-express management in the mere matter of railway pay.

The gentleman used the expression "postal express," and I have no doubt that as a public servant he means the same general proposition that I do myself. That is the reason I sug-gested to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I was constrained to take the view that the express proposition must be eliminated from the bill and the most advantageous terms of transportation by the railways be secured by securing the express contracts.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. The gentleman interrupted me for the purpose of asking a question, and now he has repeated a speech that I have already read in the Record. But I want to say to the gentleman that while it is true in a general way that it costs 12 cents a pound to carry the mail, I believe that includes mail of the first class and all similar mail. But if I read the report of the Postmaster General correctly, I think it was Postmaster General Meyer who said that mail of this character can be carried by arrangement with the railway companies at not over 9 cents a pound. I may be mistaken.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman misunderstood me. I spoke of 12 cents a ton-mile

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I regret I can not yield. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. By an expenditure of sums of money, which do not necessarily need to be great, to enlarge its equipment and by the employment of more men it can give a service equal to and greater and better than any that any express company can render. This Government has always been able to handle great problems. Our superstructure has been built upon a sound basis, a business basis. On that we stand

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. I do not know whether it would be or not, if the gentleman from Nebraska will pardon me. Every opportunity has been grasped and we have taken advantage of every statistic that we could to add to our resourcefulness as a business Nation. We can forge to the front in this kind of a parcel post. We can outclass the United Kingdom, France, Germany, and the other countries that have established and now maintain a parcel post. We can give to the people of our country, to the business men of our country a system of parcel post which will be universal in its character, which will stand first among the nations of the world.

I repeat there is no necessity for the purchase of express companies by this Government. Let us establish a system of our own. Let us establish a system that will give to our people such trade relations as they demand and as they need. This bill proposes this very thing. This bill temporarily provides for a general parcel post and for a limited parcel post over the rural routes. The commission that is provided for will take into consideration and will report to this Congress such facts, such statistics that will enable us to proceed along the lines I have suggested. This commission, through the information that has already been obtained and through expert testimony that will be taken, will seek to fix broad zones within which express matter can be carried at its actual cost. This actual cost will embrace no profits fabulous in their amount, but the real cost of transportation and the necessary amount of expense connected with its handling.

This bill if passed will give to the American people a parcel post unexcelled, unequaled, a strictly and emphatically American parcel post, and that means a system which will render the greatest service to the greatest number at the lowest cost, and without profit. [Applause.]
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALICE V. HOUGHTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton,

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRIMARY NOMINATING ELECTION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on House bill 21768, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ask that the report be printed and a reprint of the bill be had, showing amendments made by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 21768) to provide for a primary nominating election in the District of Columbia, at which the qualified electors of the said District shall have the opportunity to vote for their first and second choice among those aspiring to be candidates of their respective political parties for President and Vice President of the United States, to elect their party delegates to their national conventions, and to elect their national committeemen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, do I understand that the bill as reported to the House does not carry all the amendments that were agreed to in the committee?

Mr. LOBECK. No, sir; it does not. I was instructed by the committee to put in the necessary amendments, so as to make it of date May 28, so that the election can take place this year. Hereafter it will be in April.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Lobeck] asks unanimous consent to file a supplemental report on the bill H. R. 21768, a primary bill for the District of Columbia, and also for a reprint of the bill and committee amendments thereto. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20728) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 5137) for the relief of Alice V. Houghton.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of the Association of Commerce of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to permit corporations to make returns at the end of their fiscal years, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Memorial Christian Church, of Rock Island, Ill., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the Illinois Lumber and Builders' Supply Dealers' Association, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of Local Division No. 417, Order of Railway Conductors, of Woodsville, N. H., praying for the passage of the so-called workmen's compensation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange No. 188, Patrons of Husbandry, of Rumney, N. H., praying for the establishment of a parcel-post system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Reads.

He also presented a memorial of the Columbia Heights Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to provide for the widening and extension of Spring Road, Washington, D. C., which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the improvement of navigation on the Merrimac River. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1912.

Resolutions relative to the improvement of navigation on the Merrimae River.

Whereas the Merrimac River, the second largest stream in this Commonwealth, has not received from the National Government such attention as a river of so great commercial value should receive; and Whereas the Merrimac Valley can be made an ideal locality for great industries if adequate facilities for water transportation are provided by the Government of the United States by improving the navigability of the said river and thereby developing a suitable waterway from Lowell to the sea: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts are hereby requested to take early and concerted action to bring before Congress the necessity of such an appropriation as may be sufficient for the purpose above specified.

Resolved, That certified copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Secretary of War and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts. In house of representatives, adopted March 12, 1912. In senate, adopted in concurrence March 21, 1912.

A true copy. Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGTRY, Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Phoenix, Ariz., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullifica-tion of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of the board of supervisors of Pima County, of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce and of the mayor and members of the city council of Tucson, all in the State of Arizona, praying for the enactment of legislation providing that the United States court for the district of Arizona shall hold one term of court annually at Tucson, as well as at other cities in that State, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of sundry citizens of Yuma County, Ariz., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a bridge across the Colorado River at Yuma, in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a memorial of the Kyle Creamery Association, of Dearborn County, Ind., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to permit the coloring of oleomargarine in imitation of butter, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. PERKINS presented a memorial of the board of supervisors of Yuba County, Cal., remonstrating against any reduction of the duty on sugar, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Berkeley and Santa Cruz, in the State of California, praying that an appropriation be made for the suppression of the so-called white-slave traffic, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CRANE presented resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, relative to the improve-ment of navigation on the Merrimac River, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 18336. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 595); and

H. R. 18335. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 596).

Mr. DU PONT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21170) granting to El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory and State of Arizona, a right of way through the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, in the State of Arizona, and authorizing said corporation and its successors or assigns to construct and operate a rallway through said Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 599) thereon. I ask that the House bill take the place of Senate bill 5658 of a similar title on the calendar, being Order of Business No. 398.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the House bill reported by the Senator from Delaware will take the place of the Senate bill on the calendar, and the Senate bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 117) granting an increase of pension to Annie G. Hawkins, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 597), together with the adverse views of the minority, thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 598), together with the adverse views of the minority, thereon.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 276, submitted by Mr. Gallinger on the 5th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ a clerk at a salary of $2,220 per annum and a messenger at $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHURST:
A bill (S. 6245) to provide for an enlarged homestead entry in Arizona where sufficient water suitable for domestic purposes is not obtainable upon the lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL (H. B. 21477).

Mr. BACON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for improving Altamaha, Oconee, and Ocmul- resolution should go over under the rule. I did so, thinking gee Rivers, Ga., from $40,000 to $75,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill. which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRONNA (for Mr. McCumber) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for improving the Missouri River from Kansas City to Le Beau, S. Dak., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also (for Mr. McCumper) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $235,000 for the construction of a lock in the Yellowstone River, Mont., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BORAH (by request) submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to approve the findings of the District Court of Oklahoma for Kay County in the matter of the determination of the heirs of Buck Bill, a deceased Tonkawa Indian, etc., intended to be proposed to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the post office at Greeley, Colo., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $500,000 for the post office at Denver, Colo., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase and distribution of seeds where on account of climatic conditions in 1911 the crops were a failure, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agriculture appropriation bill (H. R. 18960), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the construction of a steel bridge across the Kansas River at Fort Riley, Kans., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to expend not exceeding $5,000 of the appropriation for the enforcement of the food and drugs act for the purchase of all right, title, and interest in and to the Marsh test for detecting artificial coloring matter in whisky, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Agriculture appropriation bill (H. R. 18960), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 out of any moneys of the Osage Indians for the removal of restrictions upon the alienation of all or only a described portion of the surplus lands of any Osage allottee, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20728. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

QUORUM OF COMMITTEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution, coming over from the previous legislative day.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 280, submitted yesterday by Mr. Clarke of Arkansas, as follows:

day by Mr. CLARKE of Afkansas, as follows:

Resolved, That the several standing committees of the Senate, having a membership of more than three Senators, are hereby respectfully authorized to fix, each for itself, the number of its members who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee; but in no case shall a committee, acting under authority of this resolution, fix as a quorum thereof any number less than one-third of its entire membership.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, yesterday I asked that the that possibly the chairman of the Committee on Rules, who was not present, might have some wish concerning it. If the chairman of the Committee on Rules has not expressed a desire that the resolution should go to the committee, I certainly shall not interpose any objection to its consideration.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The chairman of the committee has not communicated any such request to me. I have no information that the chairman of the Committee on Rules desires that it shall be referred to the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then, it is agreeable to the Senator to have it referred?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No: I do not see any necessity for referring it. Nobody has requested that that should be done. It contains a simple proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought the Senator said the chairman of the committee desired to have it referred.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No; I said he did not indicate any desire to have it referred.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think it would be unwise to pass the resolution, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the resolution presents a simple proposition, and it might just as well be defeated by the direct action of the Senate as to die by being buried in the Committee on Rules. It does not propose any very radical change in the procedure here. I understand it to be a fact that a number of committees, without any authoriza-tion from the Senate, have now fixed their own quorum at less than a majority. The large increase that has been made in the membership of the important committees of the Senate makes it exceedingly difficult to conduct the business that regularly comes before the committee. If a majority is required to attend on all occasions, it frequently results in no meeting being held. The purpose of the resolution is to stimulate a desire upon the part of those who are indifferent to committee service to be present on occasions where they have something to say, or something to offer, or something to resist.

This is not any invention of my own. The presentation of it at this time has resulted from an inconvenience that we have encountered on several occasions before one of the important committees of the Senate. The proposition was made to institute the rule indicated in the resolution by the action of the committee itself. The proposition involving the power of the committee to do that was referred to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend] and myself as a committee to ascertain the condition of the law as we understood it as to the power of the committee to inaugurate a practice of this kind. We came to the conclusion that that could not be done by the action of the committee alone; that the committee itself, being a creature of the Senate, has no legislative power and must be governed by such limitations as the common law or the action of the Senate impose upon it.

The matter has been mentioned to several who are connected with important committees of the Senate, and they deem it a real improvement in the conditions. It is so safeguarded that it can not operate to the detriment of any public interest. The matter is always subject to the control of the full committee, and in the last analysis it is subject to the control of the Sen-If abuses under it should grow up, they can be readily ascertained and corrected.

I do not believe there is anything connected with it that would justify its reference at this time. I see no difference between referring it now and defeating it at this time. opposed to its being referred, for the reason that there is not anything in the subject matter that calls for a very elaborate examination at the hands of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I fully realize the truth of what the Senator from Arkansas says regarding the attendance of the larger committees. Many of those committees have regular days to meet, and at times a quorum is not present. Some Senators are so situated on committees that they are often required to attend two meetings a day, and they do meet that requirement, while other Senators on perhaps the same committees neglect' to attend, resulting, of course, in the lack of a quorum.

I believe it would be a mistake upon the part of the Senate by a resolution to say to Senators, "We are going to excuse you from attending to your duty on committees." Our form of government provides for the rule of the majority, and I can not believe this rule should be either restricted or abandoned. think, instead of passing this resolution, a little publicity would result beneficially. Let every standing committee report to the mously in favor of such measures.

Senate, if efforts to secure a quorum fail, the names of the members who do attend their meetings, and let those who do not attend give here their excuses for failing in their obvious duty. Senators know there are Members of this body who have not attended the sessions of this body 20 days since last December, while other Members are here continuously attending to their business trying and endeavoring to secure reports from committees

I think the adoption of this resolution would be not only a mistake for this reason, but for additional reasons. If you do not require the attendance of a quorum in order to report a measure from a committee, you will have reports on bills by two, three, four, and five members of committees. It seems to me that would be a very serious mistake. I believe, rather than reduce the number required to make a quorum, it would be better to adopt some rule making it necessary that members attend the committee meetings.

I am, for one, opposed to the resolution. Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] be

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the several standing committees of the Senate, having a membership of more than three Senators, are hereby respectively authorized to fix, each for itself, the number of its members who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee; but in no case shall a committee, acting under authority of this resolution, fix as a quorum thereof any number less than one-third of its entire membership.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I can understand the anxiety of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] and those who wish this resolution to pass, because we had at the last session and have had in the present session great inconveniences from nonattendance of members of committees. We have enlarged all of the committees, I think, too much; they have too many members; but that ought not to be a reason for nonattendance. It seems to me, however, that the change in the rule proposed should at least go to the Committee on Rules, as it must under the rules of this body. I think there will be a way found so that committees can relieve themselves in some degree by doing more subcommittee work.

I know in some of the committees, for instance, in the Committee on Claims, which has some thousands of bills before it during every Congress, that committee finds it very difficult to get its members to attend and to obtain a quorum. When I was chairman of that committee, and I think since then, there has been an understanding that a certain number, perhaps half or one or two less than half, could report unimportant bills, when those members of the committee present were unani-

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the Committee on Claims is now doing practically what this resolution calls for-that is, it decides what number of members shall be regarded as a quorum for the transaction of business-and by the full committee that number has been fixed and agreed upon. So that when that number that the committee has already agreed shall act as a quorum is present, their action is taken as the action of the full committee. I did not suppose that any such resolution as this was necessary, because the Committee on Claims, I repeat, has been doing that very thing.

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, I understand that in a degree that is true; but I will ask the Senator, for instance, if he, as chairman, has a third of his committee present, and of that third he barely has one majority for a measure, is that considered the action of the entire committee, and is a bill reported here in consequence?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not, because, unless we have the number which has been agreed upon by the full committee as a quorum present and acting, the committee does not regard that it has authority to act.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly the point that I wish to make, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that I think, if the Senator will examine the authorities, he will find that a committee has no right to make a ruling providing that a smaller number than one-half shall constitute a quorum of the committee, and if the committees are proceeding in that way I think they should change their mode of procedure, unless, by the passage of a resolution or in some other manner, such authority is given by the Senate.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will admit that I have never looked into the matter critically; but, as I understand, it is a rule that has prevailed in the Committee on Claims for a long time, and it is one which seems to have been accepted as the permanent policy of the committee since I became a member of it.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; but we provided that those questions should go before the whole committee, or that at least a majority of the whole committee should ratify before reporting to

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—— Mr. WARREN. Just a moment. Mr. President, it seems to me that this Senate has a right to expect, and to demand, of every committee that, when a measure comes in here accompanied by the report of that committee, it shall have been considered and passed upon by a majority of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly the Senator from Wyoming is under a misapprehension in regard to the terms of the pending resolution. The resolution does not fix one-third of the membership of the committee as a quorum. It gives the committee the power to determine the number which shall constitute a quorum, and the provision is that the committee shall not fix less than one-third of its members in determining what shall constitute a quorum.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that.

Mr. CUMMINS. It can not be assumed, therefore, that if this resolution were to be passed, each committee or every committee would fix one-third of its membership as sufficient for

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if he thinks it a good thing to have the Senate as a body pass upon the question that each committee need have only a third of its members present to do business?

Mr. CUMMINS. Answering the question, I will say that I think it would be very wise of the Senate to give to each committee the authority proposed to be vested by this resolution. It can not be assumed that the committees would abuse the There is most urgent need for some such remedy as this. I think the initial trouble is that the committees of the Senate are too large.

Mr. WARREN. There is no doubt about that.
Mr. CUMMINS. And some of the committees are made up of Senators who have a great deal of work to do, and it is utterly impossible for them to attend the meetings of the committees, so as to transact the business which has been deputed to their care. But I intend to speak upon the resolution a little later.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will admit, however, that the busiest ones are usually those who are present, and the ones who are not present at the committee meetings are usually those who shirk all or nearly all committee work.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not want to be invidious or to make any invidious comparisons. I think, generally speaking, what the Senator from Wyoming has just stated is true; but with a committee of 16 or 17 members, having important work before it, having tried for weeks and months to secure a quorum, it is obvious that we must do something in order that the important legislation now before the committees may be reported to the Senate. I believe that one-half of the bills upon the calendar have been reported without a majority of the committees from which they came concurring in them.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know; that is a mere estimate of

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is mistaken about that, Mr. CUMMINS. But I know that a large number are so The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] reported. has just stated what the rule of the Committee on Claims is. and there are a great many bills here from that committee; but if this rule were adopted the members of a committee could still be present if they wanted to be. It simply enables the committee to do business and to put the Senate in possession of some of the bills that have been introduced and have been referred to the committees.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me just a word there, I would not want the impression to go out that the Committee on Claims were acting upon important matters with only a negligible number present. The rule to which I have referred requires at least 7 members to be present to authorize the reporting of a bill, the committee consisting of 15 members. They never undertake to authorize the reporting of a bill unless there have been at least 7 members present at the meeting.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.
Mr. SMOOT. And then the members of the committee must be unanimous in their action.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is a mere matter of adjustment. I do not think that an important bill ought to be sent back to the Senate without the concurrence of a very substantial part of the committee that have considered it; but unless some remedy is devised for the trouble we are now experiencing this session will close without a report upon a very great deal of legislation which many Members believe to be most important.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.
Mr. DU PONT. I simply desire to say to the Senator from Iowa that, so far as the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, that is not the rule of procedure. No bills have been reported at this session from the Military Committee without having received the assent of a quorum of the committee.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Kansas?
Mr. WARREN. I yield.
Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if it is not a frequent custom for members of the committee just to telephone "Count me in making a quorum," and never to appear in the committee room at all while bills are being considered?

Mr. DU PONT. In reply to that I will say that sometimes that occurs, not only in the Military Committee, but in every other committee of the Senate that I have ever sat upon, and sometimes an absent Senator authorizes another to cast his vote.

Mr. CUMMINS. Permit me, then, to ask the Senator from Delaware if he believes that it is lawful for any member of any committee to telephone to the chairman of the committee or to the clerk of the committee giving authority to be counted as a member present and thus create a quorum?

Mr. DU PONT. I have never examined critically the rules of the Senate in regard to that question. I only know that ever since I have been a Member of this body it has been the custom.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is entitled to the floor, but five other Senators are on it.

Mr. WARREN. We seem to be getting into a running debate. I am perfectly willing to yield, but I can only yield to one Senator at a time.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. GALLINGER. I want to call attention to section 5 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, which pro-

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifi-cations of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that a full quorum of a committee is as important as a quorum of the Senate. Jefferson's Manual, page 102, says "a majority of the committee constitutes a quorum for business." I hope that will not be There is a remedy, and that is to discharge a committee by a vote of a majority of the Senate if a committee does not report; but I think it a very dangerous precedent to establish to provide by a resolution of the Senate that less than a majority shall constitute a quorum of any committee of the body. Mr. McCUMBER.

Mr. President-

Mr. WARREN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.
Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask, in answer to the statement made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], would the Senator think it a good practice for a committee consisting of 15 members to authorize 5 members, or one-third, to act as a quorum, and then on any matter that comes before them 3 would constitute a majority of the 5, so that any bill coming to the Senate from a committee of 15 would only represent the votes and the sentiment of 3, or one-fifth of the entire com-Is not the Senator getting on dangerous ground and advocating a proposition that will return to plague us and be disastrous by reason of legislation not having proper consideration in committee and the Senate having to consider it wholly upon the floor?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it would require extraordinary circumstances to warrant a committee of 15 or 16 in fixing the number 5 as a qourum and permitting a majority of the quorum to report a bill. There are circumstances, however, which, I think, would justify that procedure, because, after all, if the procedure was instituted the Senate would know when the bill was reported whether it represented the views of a majority of the committee or the views of a majority of a quorum.

Mr. McCUMBER. But is not the Senate entitled to an opinion of the majority of the committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am, however, not at all insistent about the number which shall constitute a quorum. My idea is that when a committee is constituted, and has had long experience, and has discovered that there are about so many members who can be induced to attend its meetings and no more, it ought to have the power to fix a less number than a majority as a quorum in order to do its business, and there are committees of the Senate in that condition.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is a single committee of the Senate in that condition, there should be a resolution reducing the number upon the committee. If the committee is too large, then the number ought to be reduced, so that we will have at least a majority of the committee report on every bill reported to the Senate.

I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Wyoming. Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from North Dakota will talk sufficiently loud so that I may hear him.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Iowa suggested that we are overcoming the rule by receiving a telephone message from a member of the committee-

Mr. CUMMINS. By a phone message. Mr. McCUMBER. Is it not better to have a phone message from a member who has studied the question than not to have his vote at all and nothing but a minority of the committee to present the matter to the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. I should say undoubtedly so.

Mr. McCUMBER. It seems to me very dangerous. Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question on that point. Do we derive very much benefit or value from a member who does not attend the committee meetings? If he has not sufficient interest to attend the meetings of the committee, do we derive very much benefit from his formal vote? Mr. McCUMBER. Quite often we do. In many instances two committees meet at the same hour. The subject may have been considered by the member who is absent, and while he can not be present at both places, he may have very clear convictions as to what his vote ought to be.

This is doubly true when the Finance Committee is holding meetings every day and its members can not attend it and other committees of which they are members. The Senator knows that as well as I do. I have been here 13 years, and I The Senator those who attend the sessions of the Senate may be divided properly into two classes-one class doing work in the committee, the other class doing very little work in committee, but doing the talking in the Senate. I think we need their attendance in committee, and I think we ought to forego a great deal of talking in the Senate in order that Members may do some of the work before the committees, and for that reason, if I had no other, I would have them present in committee before the legislation was voted upon.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
Mr. WARREN. Of course, I yield, but I—
Mr. CUMMINS. How will the Senator from North Dakota force any other Senator to be present at a committee meeting? Mr. McCUMBER. By reporting nothing out of a committee until all the Senators, or at least a quorum, are present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President—
Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I rise to a point of order. We can not hear what is going on. The VICE PRESIDENT. T The Senator from Arkansas rises to the point of order that there is so much confusion in the Senate Chamber that those not favored with seats in close proximity to the speaker do not know what is going on. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have only a few words to say. It is not to resist the spirit behind this resolution. I intended to call the attention of the Senate to the matter to which the Senator from New Hampshire directed attention and which must have attention, of course. It seems to me we ought to follow the general rule and have this resolution go to the Committee on Rules and see if we can not help to solve this problem. I think it can be solved, but I am not prepared to reduce the Committee on Finance, and the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Committee on Military Affairs, or any other committee to a point where it is expected to have only three or four members present to do business. I think we ought to provide some way so that the work may be expeditiously done by one or two or three men, if you please, in subcommittee, as to the details, but before we are called upon to pass upon a bill we ought to know that a majority of the committee members have passed upon it.

Mr. SHIVELY. I should like to know whether the Senator is impressed with the clause of the Constitution that was read by the Senator from New Hampshire as bearing on this question. Of course, as the Senator knows, all committee work is minority work.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I take broader grounds. I believe in the majority ruling in committee and everywhere else, and that we ought to have no bill here until we know it has had proper consideration by the committee. That is my desire.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not true that a great many appropriation bills come here that have not been considered by a majority of that committee?

Mr. WARREN. I have never known, in my service in the Senate, an appropriation bill to come here that did not have the consideration of the majority of the committee, and if the Senator from Georgia knows of any instance, I wish he would inform me. Of course such a bill may have come here, but certainly I have never been one to report or to knowingly consent to the report of a bill from the Appropriations Committee that did not have the consideration of a majority of that committee.

Mr. BACON. I have never been a member of that committee, and I do not speak with personal knowledge, but I certainly have heard members of that committee, when certain measures came up, say that they had been considered by two or three members of the committee and that the committee at large had not considered them. I have heard statements to that effect made.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to believe that any bills have come in in that way. I know of none. It is true, however, that a Senator on the Appropriations Committee, who is not on the subcommittee considering that particular subject, may not be able to be present when the full committee is in session, and therefore he knows nothing of what is in the bill unless he has given it his personal attention and study; but if he is absent, there are enough of the Members present to make a majority of the committee. So far as I know, in the various appropriation bills, in the Committee on Agriculture, in the Committee on Military Affairs, and in the Committee on Appropriations proper, and others, it would be considered almost treason to bring into the Senate an appropriation bill unless it had had the consideration of a majority of the committee.

Why do we have committees? Why do we have majority have found that those who attend the committee meetings and rule? Why should we let a committee of 17 allow, 2 or 3 Members to do the business? It is preposterous, in my mind, and yet I think the very object can be reached through the proper subdivision of the committees into subcommittees.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to misrepresent the committee at all, but I have very frequently had the matter called to my attention. A House bill carrying possibly a hundred million dollars goes to the Committee on Appropriations. It is considered by two or three men, constituting a subcommittee. It goes to the full committee and is passed upon by the full committee on the recommendation of the subcommittee without examination and consideration by the full committee. That is what I mean.

Mr. WARREN. If the full committee, when they meet, have sufficient confidence in the subcommittee, it is rather hard to expect them to give close detailed study to it.

Mr. BACON. Yes.
Mr. WARREN. But by their presence and by their assent they form a majority of the committee, and it is thus agreed to. I do not dispute the Senator when he says there may have been such occasions, but I do not know of one.

Mr. BACON. The illustration given by the Senator covers the whole ground. I spoke of the fact of a bill embracing a hundred million dollars being considered by a subcommittee and then a very hasty session of a majority of the full committee. The committee would not act by any examination of the bill, but simply take it upon the faith they have in the subcommittee. I say that is practically the same as if two members of the committee had sat.

The full committee does not give it consideration. I think it is a very great evil. I am not arguing in favor of the proposition to have less than a majority of a quorum of the committee do business. I call attention to the fact that in practice that is now done, and what the Senator from Wyoming has said is a full substantiation of the statement previously made to me by members of the committee-not the committee as at present constituted—that a bill covering a hundred million dollars would come before the Senate without its ever having been examined in detail by more than two members of the committee. That is what I say, and the Senator by his statement practically concedes it. I say that is a great evil.

Mr. WARREN. I can hardly give full assent to the broad statement the Senator has made. The subcommittees on appropriation bills are always composed of five members, and it is, of course, quite possible that all the five members may not be present, but there has been great care in all the bills I have ever assisted in bringing out. I have never sat at the table where the bills were not considered. When a great bill like the sundry civil bill comes over here, at the last night of the session, a few hours before it is to be put upon its passage, naturally the consideration of the full committee has to be best. There is no one on this side or on the other side to be blamed, but it is a matter which is pushed hard upon us at the last end of the session, when we have an hour fixed for adjournment.

Mr. LODGE. If debate is to continue, I should like to suggest that the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] gave notice several days ago of his desire to address the Senate this morning, and it seems to me we might allow this matter, which evidently is liable to give rise to further debate, to go over until to-morrow, in order to allow the Senator from Washington to proceed with his speech.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, that is entirely in the hands of the Senator from Arkansas, but I do not use a few minutes in explanation of a bill he introduced this morning. If it is agreeable to the Senate, it will be entirely agreeable to me to yield to him.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to thank the Senator from Washington for his courtesy in yielding to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6247) to provide for the bringing The Secretary. A bill (S. 6247) to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States by Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Georgia, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maryland, South Carolina, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, and Rhode Island.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I introduced a few moments ago a bill giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in certain metters offering the thirteen original States as to glain metters.

matters affecting the thirteen original States as to claims which the people of Virginia and West Virginia believe they have against the Federal Government. I do not desire to take much of the time of the Senate, for two reasons, first, because this is not the time to discuss fully the provisions of the bill and to state the reasons why the Senate should pass it; and I have the additional reason that the very attractive subject of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] and his well-known ability to handle that or any other subject so as to both entertain and enlighten the Senate constrain me to wish that he should have as much time as possible during the day.

The bill which I have introduced has in mind a condition in this country more than a hundred years ago, and it is what might be termed a smasher of idols. Confessedly, the bill and what it purports to do will change what is the common understanding of history.

It has always been supposed that the State of Virginia in 1784 conveyed to the Federal Government what is known as the Northwest Territory, without reserve and without condition, and that the Federal Government took title to that property as an individual would do, with the absolute right to dispose of the subject matter and also with the right to appropriate the proceeds of the sales. There never was a greater error committed by history, and it is my purpose now simply to review briefly the history of this grant and to put in the Record some of the papers and public documents bearing upon this question so that the proper committee, in the consideration of this bill, of so much importance to the thirteen original States, and especially to my State, and of so much importance to the Government, should start off in the investigation that will be made of it in possession of the facts and with a general understanding of the contention of the States of West Virginia and Virginia.

It is well known that at the time the original Confederation or Federal alliance of the States was made, one of them, the State of Maryland, declined to become a party to that compact. She made remonstrances to what was then the Federal organization against the large boundaries of land held by New York, Connecticut, Georgia, Virginia, and possibly other She made it known to the Continental Congress that she would decline to become a party to the original Federal compact until such time as that question should be settled, claiming that it would give the States having the large boundaries of western lands a power and an influence in the Federal organization inconsistent with the position which Maryland, without a public domain, would occupy in that compact.

I want to put the remonstrance of the State of Maryland into the RECORD, and I ask permission, without reading it, that that document may be inserted as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is

ACTION OF MARYLAND.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have not any reason to object to the resolution going over for a reasonable length of time. If the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] wants to submit some remarks, I would not want to take him off the floor. Otherwise let the resolution go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let it go over until to-morrow, and I shall desire then to resume the floor and make some observations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution, with the pending motion to refer, will go over until the last moment of the morning hour to-morrow.

UNITED STATES V. AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

Mr. CUMMINS. While I am on my feet I desire to give note that on Friday morning immediately after the morning business I will ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 3607) to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States against American Tobacco Co. and others.

STATE CLAIMS FOR NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] has informed me that he has to go away, and he would like to and some other neculiar circumatances may have induced some State to accede to the present Confederation, contrary to their own interests and judgments, it requires no great share of foresight to predict that when those causes cross to operate the States which have thus acceded to the Confederation will consider it as no longer binding and the long the consideration of the confederation will consider the same applied to the least shadow of exclusive right, in our judgment, they are considered the same spirit which hath prompted them to insist on a claim so extravagant, so of acquire them? We think not. We are convinced the same spirit which hath prompted them to insist on a claim so extravagant, so wild are considered. It is a superiority of wealth and strength to oppress by open force their less wealthy and less powerfur those States, will necessarily follow, which, by an unfair construction of the Confederation, may be stripped of a common interest and the common banefits derivable from the western country. Suppose, for the consequences to Maryland of such an undisturbed and undisputed possession? They can not escape the least discerning a small proportion of the confederation which we have the probabile consequences to Maryland of such an undisturbed and undisputed possession? They can not escape the least discerning a small proportion of the lands in question, would draw into her treasury was sume of money, and, in proportion to the sum arising from such sales, would be enabled to lesses her taxes. Lands comparatively cheen and taxed to the lands of the confederation of the confederation of the

T. DUCKETT, Clerk of the House of Delegates.

Mr. CHILTON. West Virginia is prepared to show at the proper time that the above protest of Maryland against Virginia's title to the Northwest Territory was not based upon any substantial defect in Virginia's title nor upon any fact unknown to the country at that time. But whatever may have been Virginia's title, it proved to be ample to secure every foot of the Territory to the Federal Government. It need not be argued here that a trustee can not sell the land and then refuse to account for the proceeds upon the ground of a defective title. Here the trustee disposed of the land, and her grantees are in undisputed possession.

The Continental Congress fully appreciated the gravity of the situation and its helplessness to induce Maryland to come into the Confederation. The Articles of Confederation left to the States unconditional control of their western lands. The power of the Congress respecting these lands was limited to the settlement of boundaries in dispute between States. (Art. IX.) Therefore Virginia, as to her territory, was sovereign and independent, and there was no power that could compel her to part with her title except upon her own terms. The Congress referred the above instructions of Maryland to her delegates to a committee, which made a report, and on the 6th day of September, 1780, the following proceedings were enacted:

IN CONGRESS OF THE CONFEDERATION, Wednesday, September 6, 1780.

Congress took into consideration the report of the committee to whom were referred the instructions of the General Assembly of Maryland to their delegates in Congress respecting the Articles of Confederation and the declaration therein referred to, the act of the Legislature of New York on the same subject, and the remonstrance of the General Assembly of Virginia, which report was agreed to and is in the words following.

bly of Virginia, which report was agreed to and is in the words following:

"That, having duly considered the several matters to them submitted, they consider it unnecessary to examine into the merits or policy of the Instructions or declarations of the General Assembly of Maryland or of the remonstrance of the General Assembly of Virginia, as they involve questions, a discussion of which was declined, on mature consideration, when the Articles of Confederation were debated; nor, in the opinion of the committee, can such questions be now revived with any prospect of conciliation; that it appears more advisable to press upon those States which can remove the embarrassments respecting the western country a liberal surrender of a portion of their territorial claims, since they can not be presserved entire without endangering the stability of the general Confederacy; to remind them how indispensably necessary it is to establish the Federal Union on a fixed and permanent basis and on principles acceptable to all its members; how essential to public credit and confidence, to the support of our Army, to the vigor of our councils and success or our measures, to our tranquillity at home, our reputation abroad, to our very existence as a free, sovereign, and independent people; that they are fully persuaded the wisdom of the respective legislatures will lead them to a full and impartial consideration of a subject so interesting to the United States and so necessary to the happy establishment of the Federal Union; that they are confirmed in these expectations by a review of the before-mentioned act of the Legislature of New York, submitted to their consideration; that this act is expressly calculated to accelerate the Federal alliance, by removing, as far as depends on that State, the impediment arising from the western country, and for that purpose to yield up a portion of territorial claim for the general benefit: Whereupon

"Resolved, That copies of the several papers referred to the consideration; that this act is exp

Tuesday, October 10, 1780.

Resolved, That the unappropriated lands that may be ceded or relinquished to the United States, by any particular State, pursuant to the recommendation of Congress of the 6th day of September last, shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States, and be settled and formed into distinct republican States, which shall become members of the Union, and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States; that each State which shall be so formed shall contain a suitable extent of territory, not less than 100 nor more than 150 miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit; that the necessary and reasonable expenses which any particular State shall have incurred since the commencement of the present war in subduing any British posts, or in maintaining forts or garrisons within and for the defense, or in acquiring any part of the territory that may be ceded or relinquished to the United States shall be reimbursed. reimbursed.

That the said lands shall be granted or settled at such times and under such regulations as shall hereafter be agreed on by the United States in Congress assembled, or any nine or more of them.

Shortly thereafter the State of Virginia passed a resolution of her legislature suggesting a plan under which she would convey this northwest domain to the then Federal Alliance. That was passed in January, 1781, and amounted to a proposition to the Continental Congress. In two months thereafter, to wit, in March, 1781, Maryland ratified the Federal compact and became a part of the first Federal Government formed upon this continent, and thereby the way was paved to form what is now the United States Government under our present Constitution.

But, Mr. President, the cession that was made by Virginia, under the grant of authority to her commissioners to make that cession, was not an absolute one. Virginia made certain reservations in her deed of cession, and to those particularly I want to call the attention of the Senate.

The deed made by Virginia was in strict conformity to the act of its legislature authorizing it to be made. The legislative act is, indeed, recited in the deed. The grant, it will be seen, is to "the said States, Virginia inclusive," and "for the uses and purposes and on the conditions of the said recited act."

On the 20th day of October, 1783, Virginia, through her legislative branch, authorized the cession of the Northwest Territory to be made, and on March 1, 1784, her delegates in the Continental Congress presented the deed of cession, and the following proceedings took place:

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

March 1, 1784, Virginia, through her delegates in the Continental Congress, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee, and James Monroe, completed the act of cession, the following proceedings being had in Congress:

On motion of Mr. Howell, of Rhode Island, the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas the General Assembly of Virginia, at their session commencing on the 20th day of October, 1783, passed an act to authorize their delegates in Congress to convey to the United States, in Congress assembled, all the right of that Commonwealth to the territory northwestward of the River Ohio; and

Whereas the delegates of the said Commonwealth have presented to Congress the form of a deed proposed to be executed pursuant to the said act, in the words following:

"To all who shall see these presents, we, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee, and James Monroe, the underwritten delegates for the Commonwealth of Virginia, in the Congress of the United States of America, send greeting:

"Whereas the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia, at their sessions begin on the 20th day of October, 1783, passed an act entitled 'An act to authorize the delegates of this State in Congress to convey to the United States, in Congress assembled, all the right of this Commonwealth to the territory northwestward of the River Ohio,' in these words following, to wit:

"Whereas the Congress of the United States did, by their act of the 6th day of September, in the year 1780, recommend to the several States in the Union having claims to waste and unappropriated lands in the western country a liberal cession to the United States, for the benefit of said States, all right, title, and claim which the said Commonwealth had to the territory northwest of the River Ohio, subject to the conditions annexed to the said act of cession.

"Now, therefore, know ye that we, the said Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee, and James Monroe, by virtue of the power and authority committed to us by the act of the said General Assembly of Virginia before recited, and in the name and for and on behalf of the said Commonwealth, do by these presents convey, transfer, assign, and make over unto the United States, in Congress assembled, for the benefit of the said States, Virginia inclusive, all right, title, and claim, as well of soil as jurisdiction, which the said Commonwealth hath to the territory or tract of country within the limits of the Virginia charter situate, lying, and being to the northwest of the River Ohio, to and for the uses and purposes and on the conditions of the said recited act. Resolved, That the United States in Congress assembled are ready receive this deed whenever the delegates of the State of Virginia are

The delegates of Virginia then proceeded and signed, scaled, and delivered the said deed, whereupon Congress came to the following resolution:

Resolved, That the same be recorded and enrolled among the acts of the United States in Congress assembled.

The claim which will be urged arises out of the following clause in the act of Virginia and in the deed of cession:

Clause in the act of virginia and in the deed of cession:

That all land within the territory so ceded to the United States and not reserved or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American Army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the Confederation, or Federal Alliance, of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose and for no other use or purpose whatsoever.

The contention, torsely stated is that the United States has

The contention, tersely stated, is that the United States has treated this territory as if it had the absolute title and ownership thereof, and has failed to respect the rights of the thirteen original States, for whose "use and benefit" the territory was granted. There is no great mystery about the proposition. courts are sought in order to settle, first, what is the construction of the above reservation; and, second, if a trust was created, how much does the trustee owe to the beneficiaries, if anything?

It is hard to conceive how lawyers and statesmen could drop into the error that by such a grant as that and with such a reservation as that the Federal Government could dispose of, give away, or sell this vast domain without regarding the reserva-tions which I have just read. There is no room for construc-tion. It construes itself. It either creates a trusteeship in the National Government, with the National Government as the trustee and the thirteen original States as the beneficiaries, or else it is a conveyance with a condition subsequent, and a condition subsequent is just as binding upon the grantee who accepts as a condition precedent. A condition precedent prevents title from vesting until the condition shall be performed. A condition subsequent allows the title to vest at once, but it does not relieve the grantee from the duty of performing each and every condition when he accepts the conveyance and takes the property under it.

The Confederation was little more than a limited partnership among the States for common defense. There was no way of enforcing against a State in that Confederation an order or law of the Congress concerning western lands. There was no power delegated to the Congress concerning territory or its management and government. The sovereign States were paying the expenses of the Revolutionary War out of a common fund "supplied" by the States "in proportion to the value of the land in each State," and so forth. (Art. VIII, Confederation.) The Federal Government was then a mere agent of the States, and the grant made by Virginia kept that relation in view. Each of the original States had the right to own land and to be the beneficiary under a trust. Each could purchase, hold, and sell land. The Confederation owned nothing, but many of the States, like Virginia, claimed western lands. This was the situation when the present Constitution was framed and ratified. The Constitution afterwards formed provided that when ratified by nine States it would be effective as to those ratifying.

Suppose, Mr. President, that only the nine States necessary to make the present Constitution binding should have ratified it, surely those nine could not have appropriated a trust subject belonging to the thirteen States, for the other four would then have come to the trustee, the National Government, for a set-It so happened that the thirteen States did ratify it, but if they had not done so we can at once see that the other four, which had been left out, even under the construction which history has mistakenly made of this grant, could have had their part of it proportioned and could have compelled the trustee by wellknown principles of equity practice to account for the trust

Mr. President, we are not left alone to the circumstances of the parties and contemporaneous history for the construction of that instrument. Before the Constitution of the United States was ratified, while we had nothing but the slim Federal Alliance, the National Government applied to the State of Virginia to change some of the terms of the original cession, thus recognizing the rights of Virginia. Even when she wanted to change the number of States that should be made out of that great territory she had to go back to the State of Virginia and ask Virginia's consent to it, which consent Virginia gave as to that particular matter and none other, not changing the terms of the grant with which my bill deals. This action of the United States is set forth fully in the paper prepared by Dr. Fuller, to which I will call attention later, and I will, therefore, not read any part of that action of Congress here.

But the Constitution of the United States was, bear in mind, a contemporaneous act. We had as president of the Constitutional Convention George Washington, a citizen of Virginia, who was familiar with the whole subject of Virginia's territorial limits and her cession to the Federal Government. was provided in that Constitution that contracts, similar to this, which were made with the States, should be preserved, and were not thereby swallowed up by the national entity which was created when the Constitution was adopted.

I call attention especially, first, to section 3 of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that-

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

There could not have been any claim of any particular State except the claims regarding the Revolutionary War and this particular claim which was reserved to all of the thirteen original States by the munificence of the old State of Virginia. This clause of the Constitution could not possibly have had any purpose except to protect the States in their prior dealings with the Federal Government. The first part of the sentence grants power to govern the "territory" of the United States; the second part protects all "claims" of the States. The fact that this protection to "claims" of the States is inserted in the clause dealing with the "territory" of the United States is most convincing that the framers of the Constitution had in mind the Virginia cession.

Again, Article VI of the Constitution provides that—

All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

We must keep in mind the very limited powers of the Confederation, the enlarged powers of the Federal Government under the Constitution, and the fact that when the Constitution was written the proceedings of the Legislature of Virginia and the Continental Congress concerning this cession were recent events. Virginia's part in drafting and ratifying the Constitu-tion must be construed from the standpoint of her prominence in the Union, her importance as a State, the prominent position occupied by her representatives in the convention, and the great deliberation which she pursued in making the cession. Having created a trust for herself and her 12 sister States, it was natural that her representatives in the convention would see to it that in creating a new government in which the States would reserve less of their sovereignty, the trust would be protected. It seems to me that the two clauses of the Constitution quoted furnish all the guaranties needed by the thirteen original States to preserve their rights in the cession of 1784; but I would hate to think that this great Government would choose to occupy the unenviable position of administrator de son tort, much less that of a faithless trustee.

I shall reserve for a later time, when this bill shall come back into the Senate, as I hope it will, a more minute discussion of what this grant has meant to this Government, what has been brought to this Government from the great munificence of the State of Virginia; but suffice it to say at the present time that that grant embraced the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and a part of Minnesota, 170,000,000 acres of land, a munificence unknown anywhere else in history. It stands to-day as a monument to the old State of Virginia that in the hour of the Government's peril, when others hesitated Virginia gave her all that this might become a great Nation; and in view of the small reservation that she made here for the benefit of those interested, for the benefit of those most concerned, it is not asking too much, it seems to me, when she and those occupying the same position which she does in reference to this fund should come now to the Government, I when positions have changed, when the Government has all and the States of Virginia and West Virginia have littlesay it is not asking too much when they come now to the Federal Government and ask that a simple, plain trust shall be executed as the parties to it evidently intended it should be

I should mention that this territory or the great States which have been formed from it have furnished seven Presidents of the United States. The present President of the United States came from that territory. All the three who died at the hand of an assassin came from those States. I may say further that it will not be the fault of the States in that territory if they do not continue the habit of furnishing Presidents of the United States for some time to come, because we have in that territory at least four active candidates and I think about five dark horses at the last tabulation that I made. When we think what this territory has been to the United States; what has been enacted within the States created from it; what its men have done for commerce, art, literature, and humanity; and then consider what might have been Virginia's position had she retained it and thus kept her boundaries intact, from the ocean to the Great Lakes and the Mississippi, the imagination is baffled in any attempt to conceive what differences it would have made in history, and at the same time the generosity of Virginia towers above the most extreme view that may be taken of the possibilities to the national purse strings that may result from a settlement of this trust.

Mr. President, it may be asked why Virginia and West Virginia have so long remained silent and why they should demand at this particular time that this trust be settled. That really has nothing to do with the case, but it may be answered that you need not call upon the trustee to account until the trustee has disposed of the trust subject. It has only been recently that the United States Government has disposed of the last of this land.

Another reason, Mr. President, is that there has been no tri-bunal in which my State, West Virginia, could litigate this matter, either at law or in equity.

But it may be said as a third reason that the States and the people who were generous to the Federal Government in 1784 would be equally so now, only that the time has come when their creditors are pressing them for a settlement, and it is but just and right that they should call upon their greatest debtor, the National Government, to make a settlement of a matter long, long standing.

Mr. President, this bill asks for no appropriation; it does not ask the Government to commit itself to anything except justice and a "square deal"; but it does ask that a jurisdiction and a tribunal may be provided in which each and all of the thirteen original States, including the two daughters of Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky, may present their claims, may have them heard, and finally that an appeal may be had to the Supreme Court of the United States. Certainly the United States can trust its own courts to do it ample and complete justice. can trust its own courts to do it ample and complete justice. So thoroughly have the people of Virginia and West Virginia convinced themselves of the justice of this cause that they are perfectly willing to leave it in the last instance to the highest tribunal of the Government. This bill provides that the case may be first tried by the Court of Claims, and then, on appeal, by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. President, as a part of my remarks I should like to introduce a resolution of the State of Virginia passed in 1910, which I will not read, but ask to have inserted in the RECORD, calling upon her Representatives in Congress to present this claim.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be inserted in the RECORD.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

House journal and document, Legislature of Virginia, 1910 (p. 757).

Mr. Page offered the following joint resolution:

Mr. Page offered the following joint resolution:

"Be it resolved by the house of delegates (the senate concurring), That the question of the rights of Virginia in the Northwest Territory, or in the proceeds derived or to be derived from the sales or other disposition of the lands granted under the ordinance session [cession] and disposed of in contravention of such ordinance by the Government of the United States, be submitted to the Virginia delegation in Congress with the request and direction that they take such steps as may be necessary to determine and safeguard the rights of Virginia in the premises, if any she may have, and the governor of Virginia is requested to cooperate with the said Virginia delegation in regard to this matter."

Which was agreed to.

Ordered, That Mr. Page carry this joint resolution to the senate and request their concurrence.

A message was received from the senate by Mr. Halsey, who informed the house that the senate had agreed to the joint resolution.

Mr. CHILITON I will say Mr. Provident that for a long

Mr. CHILTON. I will say, Mr. President, that for a long time the Senators from Virginia and West Virginia have been investigating this subject, and the bill which I have presented. as shown from the memoranda on the back of it, is the result of the labors of the two Senators from Virginia and the two Senators from West Virginia. When one of the present Senators from Virginia was governor of that State he took a great interest in this subject and transmitted to the general assembly of that State a communication, a very strong paper, from Dr. R. B. Fulton, formerly of the University of Mississippi, who made a very thorough investigation of this subject. I should like permission to insert, as a part of my remarks, the message of the governor of Virginia and the accompanying papers. It is Virginia Senate Document No. 3. I would ask to omit such parts of this document as I have already quoted, indicating in the Record the omitted part by stars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The document referred to is as follows:

(Senate Document No. 3.)

COMMUNICATION FROM THE GOVERNOR OF VIEGINIA, TRANSMITTING CERTAIN CORRESPONDENCE AND REPORTS IN REFERENCE TO THE CLAIM OF VIEGINIA AGAINST THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT ON ACCOUNT OF THE CESSION OF THE NORTHWEST TERRITORY.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, Richmond, Va., January 21, 1919.

To the General Assembly of Virginia:

Richmond, Va., January 21, 1010.

To the General Assembly of Virginia:

Superintendent of Public Instruction Hon. J. D. Eggleston, and Dr. Robert B. Fulton, superintendent of the Miller School, have called to my attention a large claim which the State of Virginia has against the Federal Government, arising from the cession to the United States of the vast territory once possessed by this Commonwealth north of the Oblo River. Dr. Fulton has, at the request of Superintendent Eggleston and myself, for some time been making a thorough investigation of this matter, and has compiled a complete and detailed statement of this claim, which appears to establish its justice and legality, and imposes upon me the duty of transmitting the facts and information obtained by him to you for consideration and action.

Prominent Virginians, including Commodore Maury and Superintendent of Public Instruction Dr. William H. Ruffner, have presented in writings and reports this claim of the State of Virginia.

Succinctly stated, the claim presented is as follows:

The vast territory north of the Obio River was included in Virginia's original charter of 1609, which charter was prior to the charter of any other State, and which territory was included in the boundaries of Virginia when she asserted her independence and organized her government as a sovereign State in 1770. This territory, in addition to being Virginia's by charter rights, became hers also by conquest, since it was conquered from the British by Virginia troops, commissioned by the governor and council of Virginia. The expenses incurred by these troops in this conquest were paid out of the treasury of this Commonwealth. Virginia was in actual possession and control of this territory until her ecssion to the Federal Government and the acceptance of her cession by the Federal Government. Prior to this cession this territory until her by charter rights, by conquest, and by actual possession, this territory was derived from this eession of the State of Virginia to the United St

Thus the prior rights of Virginia to this territory have been judicially determined.

In the act of Virginia making the cession of this large territory to the United States and in the deed of conveyance in pursuance of the act of the general assembly executed by her representatives in the Continental Congress, Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee, and James Monroe, according to her directions, were contained certain conditions, which conditions the Federal Government accepted. Among the conditions thus enumerated and accepted by the Federal Government was the following:

"That all the land within the territory so ceded to the United States and not reserved or appropriated to any of the before-mentioned purposes, or disposed of in bounties to the officers and soldiers of the American Army, shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the confederation or Federal alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use of the United States Government, through Congress, has uniformly the littled States Government, through Congress, has uniformly bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsover."

The United States Government, through Congress, has uniformly recognized that this territory ceded was derived from Virginia, and that she was bound by the conditions contained in the act of cession. Desirous of changing some of the conditions contained in the act of cession regarding the establishment of new States in the ceded territory, she requested Virginia to make some alterations in these conditions, which Virginia consented to, permitting the creation of States different from the original cession. By requesting Virginia to make this change Congress recognized that she had no right, even in the creation of States in this territory, to alter the terms of the original act of conveyance without the consent of the State of Virginia.

Out of this territory ceded by Virginia were formed the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinols, Michigan, Wisconsin, and a portion of Minnesota. The United States received by this cession 170,208.623 acress of land. Of this land some was appropriated to comply with the conditions contained in the act of cession accepted, other than the one above stated. The largest portion of it was soid and paid into the Treasury of the United States and used in payment of the public debt and in the payment of Federal expenditures. It may possibly be contended that this portion was, under the terms of the cession, used for the benefit of all States, as contained in the cession made by Virginia. But, contrary to the expressed conditions contained in the act of cession descended in the act of cession, used for the benefit of all States, as contained in the cession made by Virginia.

sion, Congress at different times, in the aggregate, appropriated 28,808, 212 acres of land, and $2,953,654.70, derived from the sale of these public lands, entirely to local uses within these six States. These amounts of land and money were appropriated for local school purposes, construction of canals, improvement of local roads, and other purposes within these States, entirely local. Thus it appears that more than one-fifth of the lands ceded by Virginia under definite provisions and conditions, reserving to Virginia an interest in them, has been disposed of in ways that have given no "use and benefit" to Virginia, as distinctly reserved for her in her "use and benefit" to Virginia, as distinctly reserved for her in her act of cession. At the time that Virginia ceded her western territory to the United States Virginia's proportion in the general charge and expenditure was about one-seventh of the whole, and thus her reserved interest in the lands not specifically applied for the purposes stated in the deed of concession was about one-seventh. The value of this land donated to local uses was the price fixed by Congress when it was fast offered for sale, would be $77.713.424. This, added to the amount of money appropriated of $2,958,6534, would make the total value of the donation for local purposes, clearly contrary to the terms and provisions of cession, amount to $80,695,078. Subject to such claims as might exist in behalf of Kentucky and West Virginia, which were then a part of Virginia, Virginia has a right to demand of the Federal Government her part of these lands and money, which Congress appropriated entirely to local uses and for which Virginia received no benefit.

The full statement of Dr. Fulton, which I file with this message, indicates other large and fair claims of Virginia, which the limit necessarily given to this message precludes me from mentioning. Though reserving to herself a fair share of the use and benefits to be derived from these many millions of acres of land, it appears that Virgi

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION, Richmond, Va., January 22, 1910.

His Excellency CLAUDE A. SWANSON,

His Excellency Claude A. Swanson,

Governor of Virginia, Richmond, Va.

My Dean Governor: In the State school reports of Supt. W. H. Ruffner for the years 1871-1873, extended mention is made of the claims of Virginia against the United States, based on the cession of the Northwest Territory.

I started an investigation of these claims in 1906, but found that it would take too much of my time from official duties. Knowing that Dr. R. B. Fulton, at one time chancellor of the University of Mississippi and now president of the Milier School of Virginia, had an intimate acquaintance with the public-land legislation and policies of the United States Government, I asked him, in the spring of 1907, to make a thorough investigation of Virginia's rights in the premises.

A few months ago, as you will recall, Dr. Fulton and I had a conference with you in regard to this matter and laid before you the results of the investigation made by Dr. Fulton. You suggested certain further lines of inquiry, which have been carefully pursued since that I transmit herewith a letter from Dr. Fulton, with accompanying documents, for your consideration and for such action as you think the interests of the State demand.

I am, sir, with high regard,

Respectfully, yours,

J. D. Eggleston, Jr.,

J. D. Eggleston, Jr., Euperintendent of Public Instruction.

THE MILLER SCHOOL,
MILLER SCHOOL POST OFFICE, ALBEMARIE COUNTY, VA.,
Miller School, Va., December 22, 1909.

Hon. Joseph D. Eggleston,
Superintendent of Public Instruction, Richmond, Va.

My Dean Mr. Eggleston: In the spring of the year 1907 you called my attention to the statements published by your predecessor in office, the late Dr. William H. Ruffner, in his first, second, and third annual reports as superintendent of public instruction (1871–1873), regarding the reserved interest of the State of Virginia in the lands northwest of the Ohio River, which lands she ceded, under certain conditions, to the United States in 1784. Soon after this conversation, in June, 1907, you requested me to make an examination of the matter to which Dr. Ruffner referred, and you supplied me with copies of the reports above mentioned and gave many helpful suggestions.

The matter has had my most careful consideration. I have sought original sources of information, as well as the opinions of statesmen and writers which might throw light upon the subject. While its various ramifications have led in many directions, have been involved with many coordinate or conflicting interests, and have extended over a long historical period, I trust that the essential facts which should form the basis of a correct judgment are shown with sufficient clearness in the condensed statement herewith presented.

In this statement I have brought together, in proper sequence, certain well-known historical facts, and have made references to the authorities consulted.

The subject is of more than academic interest, since it involves questions of right and justice and patriotism, and concerns the great State of Virginia in her relations to her sister States and to the kepublic.

You are at liberty to use this paper in any way which you may think proper.

proper. Very sincerely, yours,

ROBERT B. FULTON.

THE VIRGINIA LAND CESSION OF 1784.

THE VIRGINIA LAND CESSION OF 1784.

The first settlements of the English upon the Atlantic coast of North America were made under charters or grants from the British Crown. The texts of these charters may be found in "Poore's Charters and Constitutions of the United States." A brief discussion of the 13 original American colonies, as constituted under the royal charters, may be found in Dr. B. A. Hinsdale's "The Old Northwest." (Published by Silver, Burdett & Co., 1899.) Hinsdale follows the texts of the charters as given by Poore. In these charters the attempts made to specify limits and boundaries in an unknown continent unavoidably led to controversy when the settlements were extended from their original centers. It is not the present purpose to discuss these controverses, but only to state such facts as relate to the subject in hand.

The settlement at Jamestown in 1607 was made under a charter given in 1606 by King James I. "But as it did not prove satisfactory, the King in 1609 granted to the London Co. a second charter, in which he bounded the colony that henceforth monopolized the name of Virginia, as follows:

"* * Situate, lying, and being in that part of America called ginia, as follows:

"* * Situate, lying, and being in that part of America called Virginia, from the point of land called Cape or Point Comfort, all along the seacoast to the northward 200 miles, and from the said point of Cape Comfort all along the seacoast to the southward 200 miles, and all that space and circuit of land lying from the seacost of the precinct aforesaid up into the land throughout from sea to sea. And also all the islands lying within 100 miles along the coast of both seas of the precinct aforesaid. * * * " (Hinsdale, "The Old Northwest," p. 73.)

the precinct aforesaid. * * * " (Hinsdale, "The Old Northwest," p. 73.)

When Virginia asserted her independence and organized her government as a sovereign State in 1776 she reaffirmed her charter right to the territory in the limits fixed by King James I in 1609. Section 21 of her constitution, adopted June 29, 1776, reads:

"The territories contained within the charters erecting the colonies Maryland, Pennsylvania, North and South Carolina are hereby ceded, released, and forever confirmed to the people of those colonies, respectively, with all the rights of property, jurisdiction, and government, and all other rights whatsoever which might at any time heretofore have been claimed by Virginia, excepting the free navigation and use of the rivers Potomack and Pohomoke, with the property of the Virginia shores or strands bordering on either of the said rivers, and all improvements which have been or shall be made thereon.

"The western and northern extent of Virginia shall in all other respects stand as fixed by the charter of King James I, in the year 1609, and by the public treaty of peace between the courts of Great Britain and France in the year 1763, unless by act of legislature one or more territories shall hereafter be laid off and governments established westward of the Alleghany Mountains. And no purchase of lands shall be made of the Indian natives but on behalf of the public by authority of the general assembly." (Hening's Stats, of Va., vol. 9, pp. 118-119.)

lished westward of the Alleghany Mountains. And no purenase or lands shall be made of the Indian natives but on behalf of the public by authority of the general assembly." (Hening's Stats. of Va., vol. 0, pp. 118–119.)

This territorial claim of Virginia, based upon her charter, placed her western boundary at the Mississippi River, and left an undetermined extension northward for her territory northwest of the Ohio River.

Acting under instructions from the governor and council of Virginia, dated January 2, 1778. George Rogers Clark, in command of Virginia troops, in 1778 and 1779 captured all the British posts in the territory northwest of the Ohio, excepting those in the extreme north on the Great Lakes, and held the territory from the Ohio to the Lakes in the name of Virginia.

"The Northwest had been won by a Virginia army, commanded by a Virginia officer put in the field at Virginia's expense." (Hinsdale's "The Old Northwest." p. 158.)

On October 27, 1777, the Continental Congress in framing the Articles of Confederation which were to be submitted to the several States for acceptance, inserted a clause to the effect that "No State shall be deprived of territory for the benefit of the United States." (Secret Journals of Congress under date Oct. 27, 1777.)

"The six smaller States which held no western lands contended with tenacity and determination that said lands should not be held by the States owning them for their exclusive use, while the seven States which claimed and under the Confederation held vast sections of Crown grant lands in the West held the contrary opinion." (History of the Public Domain, p. 60, Government Printing Office.)

Maryland refused to sign the Articles of Confederation until the States holding or claiming western territory should make a surrender of these lands or claims to the United States. Her general assembly voted, on December 15, 1778, vigorous instructions to her delegates in Congress urging the views and contentions of Maryland, which were presented in Congress, January 6

Virginia ceded and the United States in Congress assembled accepted all of her territory northwest of the river Ohio, under the several conditions above shown. On July 7, 1786, Congress asked of Virginia alterations of the conditions of the above act of cession, as far as these conditions relate to the limits of new States to be formed in the territory so ceded, on account of difficulty in forming the lands into States with boundaries as contemplated in the deed of cession. Following is the resolution adopted in Congress July 7, 1786 (History of the Public Domain, pp. 69-70. Journals of Congress, July 7, 1786. Hening's Statutes of Virginia, Dec. 30, 1788, vol. 12, p. 789):

"Resolved, That it be, and it hereby is, recommended to the Legislature of Virginia to take into consideration their act of cession, and revise the same so far as to empower the United States in Congress assembled to make such a division of the territory of the United States lying northerly and westerly of the river Ohio, into distinct republican States, not more than five nor less than three, as the situation of that country and future circumstances may require, which States shall hereafter become members of the Federal Union, and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence, as the original States, in conformity with the resolution of Congress of the 10th of October, 1780."

On July 13, 1787, Congress passed the ordinance for the government hereafter become members of the Federal Union, and have the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence, as the original States, in conformity with the resolution of Cengress of the 10th of October, 1780."

On July 13, 1787, Congress passed the ordinance for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio, which embraced the above proposition as to the number of States in the Virginia cession. The subject matter of this ordinance had been under consideration by Congress from May 10, 1786. (History of the Public Domain, p. 150.)
December 30, 1788, the General Assembly of the State of Virginia passed the following (act of Virginia of 30th December, 1788):

"Whereas the United States in Congress assembled did, on the 7th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1786, state certain reasons showing that a division of the territory which hath been ceded to the said United States by this Commonwealth, into States, in conformity to the terms of cession, should the same be adhered to, would be attended with many inconveniences, and did recommend a revision of the act of cession, so far as to empower Congress to make such a division of the said territory into distinct and republican States, not more than five nor less than three in number, as the situation of that country and nuture circumstances might require. And the said united States in Congress assembled have, in an ordinance for the government of the original States and the people and States in the said territory, it:

"ART. V. There shall be formed in the said territory not less than three nor more than five states; and the boundaries of the States, as soon as Virginia Shall alter ber act of cession and consent to the same, shall become fixed and established as follows, to wit: The western State in the said territory shall be bounded by the Mississippi, the Ohio, and Wabash Rivers; a direct line drawn from the Wabash and Post Vincents, due north to the territorial line to the Lake of the Woods and Mississippi. The middle State shall be bounded by

And it is expedient that this Commonwealth do assent to the proposed alteration, so as to ratify and conform the said article of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said territory.

2. Be it therefore enacted by the general assembly, That the afore-recited article of compact between the original States and the people and States in the said territory northwest of Ohio River be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed, anything to the contrary in the deed of cession of the said territory by this Commonwealth to the United States notwithstanding. (History of the Public Domain, p. 70. Hening's Statutes of Virginia, vol. 12, p. 780.)

That there was thus formed a definite contract and agreement between the United States and the State of Virginia, and an engagement by Congress to carry out the definite purposes and conditions of this agreement, is clearly shown by the words of the acts above quoted, and the circumstances under which they were passed.

That the distinct conditions upon which Virginia's deed of cession was made were recognized as binding by the United States, at the first, is shown by the fact that the several conditions, marked (A), (B), (C), (D), (E), above, have, through various later enactments, been carefully fulfilled by Congress. (See Land Laws of the United States.)

The obligation and engagement distinctly stated in the last condition upon which the Virginia cession was made and accepted, marked (F) above, must remain forever binding as at first, unless annulled by formal joint action by Congress and the State of Virginia, or rendered void by the adoption of the Constitution of the United States after the cession was made, or specifically fulfilled by Congress.

There has been no legislation by the State of Virginia and the Congress changing this last condition.

The Constitution of the United States, Article IV, section 3, declares that the Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or oth be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

Article VI of the Constitution of the United States declares that "All debts contracted, and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the confederation."

The engagement entered into by the United States with Virginia is thus not rendered void, but reaffirmed by the terms of the Constitution of the United States.

As to the fulfillment of this last and most important of the conditions and engagements in Virginia's act of cession, it appears from all the history and record of the matter that Virginia, through no fault of hers, has entirely failed to receive her due and proportionate share of the use and benefit of these lands in the territory northwest of the river Ohio, as distinctly provided and reserved in her deed of cession.

The following statement, relating to the specific performance of the engagement entered into by Congress to dispose of the lands ceded by Virginia in the manner and for the purpose stipulated, can be verified by the citations given.

As above recited, on March 1, 1784, the United States acquired from Virginia title to the soil and jurisdiction of the territory northwest of the river Ohio under the conditions stated. Immediately Congress began the enertment of legislation for the government of this territory, and for the disposition of the lands therein.

On March 1, 1784 (History of the Public Domain, pp. 147-149, Journals of Congress, Mar. 1, 1784), a committee, consisting of Mirgonia, and Virginia, Mr. Chaec, of Maryland; and Mr. Howell, of month of the western territory. This report was discussed and finally adopted, after amendment, on April 23, 1784. (History of the Public Domain, pp. 148-149. Journals of Congress, Apr. 23, 1784.)

This remained in force as law until the adoption of the ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio of July 13, 1787. (History of the Public Domain, pp. 149-133. Journals of Congress, July 13, 1787.)

This remained in force as law until the adoption of the ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio of July 13, 1787. (History of the Public Domain, pp. 149-133. Journals of Congress, July 13, 1787.)

On April 29, 1784 (History of the Public Domain, pp. 149-137.)

On April 29, 1784 (History of the Public Domain, pp. 196-197), Congress, by resolution, called the attention of the States still holding western lands to the fact of former resolutions of Congress asking for cessions; and "in presenting another request for further cessions," stated (speaking of persons who had furnished supplies to carry on the war; "These several creditors have a right to expect that funds shall be appeared to the construction of the States still holding western lands to the fact of former resolutions of Congress asking for constructions of the states of

Under this policy Congress fell into the habit of donating lands freely and liberally in the territory ceded by Virginia, apparently without considering whether or not the conditions of this cession were being fulfilled by such donations and grants for local benefit.

As the result of this indefinite policy, the lands in the territory ceded by Virginia have been practically all disposed of by the United States without any adjustment or settlement of Virginia's reserved interest therein.

fulfilled by such donations and grants for local benefit.

As the result of this indefinite policy, the lands in the territory ceded by Virginia have been practically all disposed of by the United States without any adjustment or settlement of Virginia's reserved interest therein.

Passing by for the present the facts, which are of record in the Treasury Department of the Government, showing the receipts from the lands which were sold by the United States in the territory ceded by Virginia, and the disposition made of these receipts in the payment of the public indebtedness or otherwise, attention is called to the facts regarding the disposal by Congress of large tracts of land in the territory ceded by Virginia for various purposes, essentially local in their character, in the States organized in that territory, in which purposes and the subsequent uses and benefits of the land thus donated Virginia and the other of the original 13 States had no part.

The History of the Public Domain, prepared by the Public Land Commission in pursuance of the acts of Congress of March 3, 1879, and June 16, 1880, revised under subsequent acts of Congress and published by the Government Printing Office, 1884, and the Land Laws of the United States, Volume I and II (House Miscellaneous, 2d sess, 47th Cong., 1882-83, Vols. XVII and XVIII), show that Congress has made grants or donations of lands for the special benefit of the five States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin—formed out of the territory ceded by Virginia as follows:

1. One section or square mile in each township of 36 square miles was given in these States by Congress to the legislatures of these five States for public schools. This means one thirty-sixth part of the lands in each State, a total of 4,365,917 acres. (History of the Public Domain, pp. 223-228. Land Laws of the United States, Vol. I, Nos. 28, 215, 346, 493, 622.)

3. Three per cent or 5 per cent of the net receipts for sales of lands by the United States in each of these States was given to t and in Michigan and Wisconsin 5 per cent of such proceeds; total, $2,854,254.70. (History of the Public Domain, p. 238.)

4. Congress gave to each of these five States 500,000 acres of the public lands in these State for internal improvements—a total of 2,500,000 acres. (History of the Public Domain, p. 255.)

5. For canal-construction purposes Congress gave to Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan, from the year 1824 to June 30, 1880, a total of 4,424,073,06 acres. (History of the Public Domain, p. 250.)

6. For military roads in Wisconsin and Michigan within the same period Congress gave more than 523,000 acres. (History of the Public Domain, p. 260.)

7. Land grants for railroads to these States and corporations therein, up to June 30, 1880, amounted to, in Illinois, 2,595,053 acres; in Michigan, 3,355,043 acres; in Wisconsin, 3,553,865 acres; total, 9,504,861 acres. (History of the Public Domain, pp. 269, 270.)

8. Congress gave to these several States salt springs and saline lands as follows: To Ohio, 24,216 acres; to Indiana, 23,040 acres; to Illinois, 121,029 acres; to Michigan, 46,080 acres—a total of 214,371 acres. (History of the Public Domain, p. 218.)

9. Under the swamp land acts Congress gave to Illinois 1,451,974 acres: to Indiana, 1,252,708 acres; to Michigan, over 5,640,000 acres; to Wisconsin, over 3,036,548 acres; to Ohio, 25,640 acres—a total of over 11,406,847 acres. (History of the Public Domain, p. 223.)

10. Congress gave in land bounties to soldiers of the Continental Line and in the War of 1812, 8,095,220 acres in the territory ceded by Virginia, and the grants made in the reserved Virginia military district for the Virginia troops on Continental establishment amounted to 3,770,000 acres—a total granted in bounties up to 1861 on these two accounts of 11,865,220 acres. (History of the Public Domain, pp. 232–234.)

That part of Minnesota lying east of the Mississippi River and of the ninety-fifth meridian was included in Virginia's cession. It includes, by count of townships and fractions on our efficial United States map, 16,588,800 acres.

The total acreage of lands surveyed by the United States in the territory ceded by Virginia is as follows [History of the Public Domain, p. 189]:

In Wisconsin	34, 511, 360
In Minnesota, east of Mississippi River	16, 588, 800

In Minnesota Congress gave even more liberally to local uses. As shown by the citations above, one-eighteenth of the area of Minnesota was given for schools, and for all the local uses above specified a total of 17.184.233 acres was granted. Approximately one-third of all the land in this State was thus given for local uses. In that part of the State lying in the Virginia cession this would amount to 5,529,600 acres, and $99,400 in cash.

The amounts of land granted by Congress to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and Wisconsin, or to persons in these States, for local uses, as shown under the headings numbered above, omitting the tenth heading, are as follows:

"benefit" to Virginia, having been donated by Congress to local interests.

At the time when Virginia ceded her western territory to the United States her "usual respective proportion in the general charge and expenditure" was about one-seventh of the whole, as shown by the requisition made by Congress upon the 13 States at that time. At the time of the cession her reserved interest was, therefore, one-seventh of all the lands not specifically applied to the purposes stated in the deed of cession.

The value of the lands donated to local uses, amounting to 38,864,189 acres, as shown above, computed at $2 per acre, which was the price fixed by Congress when they were offered for sale, by the act of May 18, 1796 [History of the Public Domain.

The price received varied from time to time, but probably averaged at least $1 per acre. This would indicate receipts from sales of lands in the Virginia cession aggregating probably $100,000,000. The exact facts are matters of record in the departments in Washington.

A study of all the acts and resolutions passed by Congress and the several States regarding the cession of lands claimed by the original States, as set forth in the History of the Public Domain, pages 60 to $1, shows that these cessions were asked by Congress, and made by the States for the purpose of securing, through the sale of the lands, funds by which the financial embarrassment of Congress could be relieved, and the public debt extinguished. The act of Congress of March 3, 1795, above quoted, distinctly provides for this use of the proceeds of the lands edded. The public debt incurred in the War of the Revolution was eventually extinguished, and it appears from the last condition in Virginia's deed of cession that, as soon as this was accomplished, her reserved interest should have become immediately available for her use and benefit.

No attempt has been made in this paper to discuss the interest of any other of the original 13 States in Virginia's cession. It appears that Kentucky and West Virginia, being formed out of territory was made, would logically have an interest dependent on Virginia's interest. I have not found that the State of Virginia has ever taken formal action looking to an investigation or adjustment of her reserved interest in the lands ceded to the United States March 1, 1784.

Very respectfully,

R. B. Fullton.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, the State of West Virginia would not have it thought that this "claim," reserved in the cession of 1784 and protected by two clauses of the Constitution, is an idea born of her troubles concerning the debt of the State of Virginia referred to in the first constitution of West Vir-The suit between the two States growing out of that debt is now pending in the Supreme Court and will proceed in an orderly manner. West Virginia will meet her just obligaan orderly manner. West Virginia will meet her just obliga-tions, whether the Federal Government shall be compelled to settle the trusteeship created by the Virginia cession or not. But it need not be denied that the proceedings in the suit which I have mentioned have been disappointing to West Virginia, and if she be compelled to pay a large sum of money to Virginia she will look upon it as a hardship. But, by the same rule which would hold her liable for Virginia's debt, she would be entitled to the funds accruing to Virginia prior to the division of the State. If territory or population be a basis for apportioning obligations, it is also a basis for a division of assets. West Virginia shall, in the end, have any part of the Virginia debt to pay she will need her share of the trust funds now in the hands of the Federal Government; if she be not required to respond, then her share of that fund is none the less the heritage of the two Virginias.

There is a court provided by law in which anyone having a claim against the Government can litigate it. All sorts of claims of Indians and citizens, Indian tribes, and corporations are settled in this tribunal. The Government denies justice to none. It was in response to the demand that this Government. ment shall be just to everyone that the Court of Claims was created. But shall it be said that the Government will deny to any State the same justice which she grants to all the world besides?

It can not, then, be conceived that the Government will make Virginia and West Virginia, whose bounty she accepted in times when she was in sore straits and the other beneficiaries under an express trust, the only exceptions to the rule that no creditor shall be denied a hearing in a court of justice. A hearing is all that is asked. The States interested will accept the decision of the courts of the United States upon the construction to be placed upon the cession and upon every matter involved in the claim. Congress is not called upon to take any position upon the merits of the controversy. It would be an arbitrary course for any alleged trustee to deny the trust and refuse the beneficiaries an opportunity to establish it; but under the peculiar relations occupied by the Government, under the facts which I have outlined, it would be unspeakably arbitrary, unfair, and unwise to refuse a sovereign State the poor boon of a fair and impartial hearing in a court of justice.

This bill makes no appropriation, recites no facts, and assumes no position upon the title papers or upon the acts of any of the parties. The Government's liability can not be fixed until the last word shall be said by the Supreme Court. States interested ask for no favors, but they do demand justice. I thank the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] for his courtesy in yielding to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. JONES. I am pleased to yield to the Senator from Virginia

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I do not propose to make an address, but I wish to say, in regard to the bill introduced by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chilton], that the senior | presented for decision by some tribunal; and we concur in the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Martin] and myself, who were directed by the general assembly of our State to take this matter up, have concurred in the bill and that we shall cooperate with the Senator for the presentation and prosecution of this claim according to instructions given us by the General Assembly of Virginia.

I wish to say in this connection that this is the first time the Senators or the Representatives in the other House from Virginia have had authority to present this matter for the consideration of Congress. As the Senator from West Virginia has well said, this territory, amounting to 170,000,000 acres, was ceded to the Federal Government by the State of Virginia, with the reservations the Senator has named. One hundred and seventy million acres were included in this cession. Forty million acres of that land were diverted from the trust; in other words, it was not used for the common good and benefit of the 13 States, but was used for local purposes within the States embedied in this cession; used for road purposes; used for school purposes; used for entirely local purposes; within the States, contrary to the terms of the cession made by the State. The purpose of this bill is to ascertain the amount of this land and its value that was perverted from the trust which was to be used for all the 13 States, and after that is ascertained, to see what is a proper division of this fund, which was improperly diverted, improperly used, and to divide it justly and fairly among the States according to the terms of the cession from Virginia.

This cession from Virginia has always been recognized as the only title that the United States possessed to this territory. It was Virginia's by her charter of 1609; it was Virginia's by She commissioned the soldiers; out of the treasury of the State she paid the troops that, under George Rogers Clark, captured this territory and held it from the British Government.

It was Virginia territory when the cession was made. that territory was a part of the State of Virginia, and was known as Illinois County. Virginia exercised authority over it; writs ran in her name in the territory; cessions to land were made by her, and everybody acquiesced in her title. The United States Government has accepted this cession. It contained conditions as to the creation of States. The Federal Government desired to change these conditions, and, recognizing that it had no authority except through this cession, sent a request to the General Assembly of Virginia asking the General Assembly of Virginia to change the conditions under which States could be created out of this territory, and Virginia consented to the changes.

This cession has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 5th Wheaton, where a case was decided affecting the boundary line between Kentucky and Indiana. It was contended that Indiana had a right of admission to the Union independent of this cession. The Supreme Court of the United States, in an opinion delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, said that the Federal Government had no authority and no right to this territory, except as it obtained it through this cession, and that the boundary line between Indiana and Kentucky must be fixed by the cession made by Virginia of the Northwestern Territory.

Thus the right to the Northwestern Territory, the right of the trust, has been recognized by every department of the Federal Government, recognized by Congress when it asked Virginia to change the conditions under which States could be created, recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States in fixing the territory of Kentucky and the territory of Indiana. It has been recognized also by reason of the fact that it has always been held that the provision made by Virginia for excluding slavery from the Northwestern Territory was a condition that could not be changed. This was the condition imposed by the General Assembly of Virginia. With these conditions recognized by all the departments of the Government, it is a clear, legal, just, and fair case; and I am satisfied that there is no tribunal in the world that would not render a judgment for Virginia in accordance with the terms of this trust.

The question is asked, Why has not this case been presented earlier? There have been no representatives in Congress authorized by the State to present it.

The amount of money that has been thus diverted at the sale price of $2 an acre, which was obtained for the land, will amount to over $80,000,000, and there can be no question that that $80,000,000 of this trust fund has been perverted from a general use for the good of the 13 original Colonies to local uses within these States.

It seems to me that Virginia, which has been generous to this Union in gifts and in States, has a right to have this claim measure introduced by the Senator from West Virginia to let the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States determine this question. If it is right, if it is just, if it is honest, the Federal Government should pay it to the States and to those who have aided Federal power and Federal growth by such a magnificent gift as the State of Virginia presented to the Federal Government,

I simply desired to make these remarks, following the speech made by the Senator from West Virginia, to let it be understood that Virginia, through her authorities in the State, has directed her Senators and Representatives to present this claim to the Federal Government for settlement and adjudication.

PROGRESSIVE RULE OF ACTION IN JUDICIAL MATTERS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, anyone expecting the sensational in what I have to say will be disappointed. Anyone expecting a discussion of the presidential campaign need not listen. The temptation to jest, to be sarcastic, to denounce, to talk politics, or characterize is very strong, but I shall not do either. not the place nor the time to talk politics; too much politics is attempted here. We are not sent here for that, and, in my judgment, the best politics would be to go seriously about our duties and pass such legislation as we believe would be for the good of the people, rather than to seek party or factional advantage.

He plays politics best who serves his people best.

A most peculiar condition exists in this country to-day. Our people, as a whole, are living better now than ever before and better than any other people on the face of the earth. sume more of the necessaries of life and enjoy more of the lux-uries than ever. There is more employment at better wages. We are better clad and better fed, as well as better housed. Farmers, merchants, and business men are more successful. Markets, foreign and domestic, are growing and extending with rapid strides. Manufacturing is increasing. Transportation rapid strides. Manufacturing is increasing. Transportation lines are taxed to the utmost to handle the country's business. Every material, social, and moral condition is on a higher plane. Justice is administered more impartially. Legislators are more responsive to the deliberate will and well-considered desires of the people. The Nation is more prosperous. Life is sweeter, and the future is brighter in its prospects for peace, happiness, and prosperity than at any one time in our history. With everything to make us happy and everything to make us confident of the future, with everything to inspire us with trust in our Government, ourselves, and our future, and with everything to make us contented and happy, we are restless, uneasy, discontented, unhappy, suspicious, and intolerant. We are engaged in a saturnalla of political vituperation. Justice and fair dealing are thrown to the winds. Appeals to passion and prejudice dis-place reason and logic. Vileness and corruption are sought for eagerly, and we rejoice if we are successful in our search. Sinister motives prompt those who disagree with us, and none are good save ourselves.

Under the banner of progression anarchy is preached in honeyed phrase and fulsome flattery. Our sense of justice and fairness is deadened by loud declamation and insidious suggestion. Rules of conduct evolved through centuries of struggles for human rights and liberty, and at the cost of blood and treasure, are cast aside as worthless by self-proclaimed apostles of progression, and the rules and methods of ages ago are now held up to us as the only safe, sane, and progressive rules for our guidance.

Until a short time ago supposedly new ideas, as old as governments among men, were advocated with some show of reason and prudence. A new Richmond, however, has rushed upon the political field. The real, consistent, faithful leader of radical political thought, whose courage, consistency, and faithfulness we all admired, even if we did not accept all the doctrines advocated, became ill and exhausted. The banner he was faithfully and bravely carrying was drooping. This new Richmond rushed upon the political scene, threw his hat into the ring, and shouted to the wavering hosts to follow him on the highway of progress and victory. Hoping to reap where others had sown, he sought to pluck the fruit of victory to his own bosom. Having worked and won with the despised standpatters, and not being practiced in the principles of modern political progress, he, with the recklessness of ignorance and the rashness of the new convert, is appealing to all that is base, selfish, and unjust in the apparent hope of gratifying an insatiable ambition.

In his campaign for place and power he seems to have forgotten the honors bestowed upon him by his party and by the people of the country. He seems to be unmindful of the dignity and deportment of one who has filled the most exalted position in the gift of man. We expect and tolerate the actions and utterances of the ordinary politician, but it is a shock to our people to see their idol seeking place and power by appealing to passions, prejudices, and hatreds and whose most powerful passions, prejudices, and hatreds and whose most powerful argument is denunciation of the motives and honesty of those who oppose him. For temporary applause, to secure the support of the unthinking, he would substitute the biased, warped, and inflamed opinions of the multitude for the judgment of those acting in a judicial capacity based on sworn evidence, weighed and balanced by those rules and principles which have been brought forth from the crucible of time to insure justice to the poor and the rich, the weak and the strong.

I do not propose to discuss the initiative, referendum, or the recall, of which this overnight convert would have the people believe he has always been a devoted advocate. I shall notice only the latest suggestion advanced for the guidance of those acting in a judicial capacity. It is so startling that its mere statement should be enough to bring it condemnation.

In my judgment the most appalling proposition ever suggested for the approval of a justice-loving and a fair-dealing people was advanced by former President Roosevelt in a speech delivered at Detroit, Mich., on the evening of March 30, last. Mr. Roosevelt said, according to the report contained in the Washington Post of March 31, and I quote not a mere sentence, but at length from this utterance, so as to be perfectly fair:

I wish to direct your attention to the last instance of the working in actual practice of the President's theory of government of the people by what he calls a representative part of the people. Remember that Abraham Lincoln's statement was that we needed a "government of the people, for the people, by the people," and that the proposed improvement is to have it a government by a "representative part" of the people. In practice, as I have already said, this has always meant government by a thoroughly unrepresentative part of the people against the interests of the whole people; it means and can only mean government of the people, for the special interests, by the bosses.

CITES LORIMER CASE.

The immediate illustration of this fact is afforded by what the Senate committee has done in the Lorimer case. The reactionary members of both parties of the committee have stood by Lorimer, and against the protest of the minority have recommended that he be allowed to continue in his place.

Do you think that the representatives who have acted in this way really represent the people? I don't. Do you think that this specimen of government of the people by a representative part of the people—represents an improvement on government by the people? I don't. For instance, one of the gentlemen who signed the report on behalf of Mr. Lorimer was Senator Dilligham, of Vermont. I do not for one moment believe that if the people of Vermont could vote on this issue they would vote to retain Mr. Lorimer in the Senate. I do not for one moment believe that the people of Washington and South Dakota would have voted for Mr. Lorimer, and yet their Senators, Messrs. Gamele and Jones, did. It seems to me that this Lorimer case, so far from being an argument in favor of the President's position that we should have government of the people by a part of the people, is a strong argument for more direct government by the people, a strong argument for the direct election of United Statos Senators by the people.

In passing, I desire to say that, in my judgment, Mr. Roosevelt presented in this suggestion the strongest possible argument that can be made against the election of Senators by the people. I am in favor of the election of Senators by the people; people. I am in favor of the election of Senators by the people; I voted for that proposition before Mr. Roosevelt ever even thought of it, and yet if to elect Senators by the people is to make them cowards and faithless to their duty, their trust, their conscience, and their convictions, then I would have none of it. I do not believe the suggestion of ex-President Roosevelt that it would make cowards of men to have them elected by the people to the Senate is worthy of our consideration. I think such a suggestion is an insult to the intelligence of the people of this country. I was elected to this body just as directly by the people as any man will ever be if we should amend the Constitution as proposed, and I do not think such election has made me hesitate to do what I believe to be right on any question that may come up.

This argument may have caught the fancy of those who listened without grasping the full significance of the statements made, but no proposition was ever advanced by the wildest made, but no proposition was ever advanced by the principal anarchist more subversive of the principals of human justice or human rights and good government than the principal suggestion contained in this statement. What is that suggestion? To what does it lead? Let us see. What is the Lorimer case? To what does it lead? Let us see. What is the Lorimer case? Is it a legislative matter? No. Does Mr. Roosevelt understand it to be a matter of legislation? To assume so is to charge him with woeful ignorance. This I will not do, although it probably would be much more charitable to him to do so.

The Lorimer case does not involve legislative discretion and judgment, and he knows it. It is a solemn, judicial matter, and judgment, and he knows it. It is a solemn, judicial matter, and he knows it. Mr. Lorimer has a certificate of title to a seat in this body from the State of Illinois. It is charged that this certificate was secured by corruption. Is that true? That is the issue Senators are to decide, not as legislators, but as judges. We are made judges by the Constitution of our country, which we have taken a solemn oath to uphold and defend. The committee to which he refers was appointed to investigate the charge of corruption in connection with Mr. LORIMER'S elec-

It was charged with the duty of taking testimony to sustain or refute this charge and to report upon its truth or We have for days and weeks and months listened to sworn testimony on both sides of the issue. Every suggestion of evidence bearing upon it has been followed and fully examined. Almost 9,000 pages of testimony have been taken and every individual having any knowledge that relates to the truth of this charge has been invited to present it. Each and every member of the committee has deliberated over that evidence, weighed it, and reached a conclusion upon it. A majority have reached the conclusion that the charge is not true. Our consciences and our judgments, upon a careful weighing of the evidence, tell us that corruption was not used to secure the election of Mr. LORIMER.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator at this time, if he prefers to have interruptions postponed until he concludes, but I want to ask the Senator at some time a question or two for the purpose of securing information upon the particular matter he is now discussing.

Mr. JONES. The Senator may ask his question. I will say to the Senator that I do not propose to go into the merits or the demerits of the Lorimer case.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to lead the Senator into a discussion of the merits of the Lorimer case, but I wish to know whether the Senator and those who agree with him are controlled by the doctrine of res adjudicata or by the fact that the evidence as retaken failed to sustain the charge against Senator LORIMER.

Mr. JONES. Speaking for myself, I am governed by the evidence taken before the committee, in addition to the view that the matter, being settled by the solemn judgment of the Senate, ought to remain settled. But I am convinced by the evidence, however, that corruption was not shown.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator was not controlled, in his judgment, by the legal doctrine, which, it is claimed by some, would prohibit the Senate from again going into the question?

Mr. JONES. I was not.
Mr. BORAH. May I ask a further question, in order that the matter may be clear to my mind? The Senator was convinced by evidence controlling to his mind other than that brought out at the former hearing?

Mr. JONES. Not only that, but the evidence brought out previously was absolutely discredited on this hearing.

Mr. BORAH. Then the position of the Senator is that the evidence on this hearing was entirely different in its probative effect from the evidence taken in the former hearing?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir.

What should we do? Should we condemn Mr. Lorimer or should we acquit him? The question is not whether our judgment is correct or not, but whether, having reached it, we should follow it. Shall we disregard our own judgment and our own convictions and deny him a seat in this body? Where is the man who would say "Yes" to that? No one, save Mr.

What does former President Roosevelt say? He says, in effect: "Senator Jones, you read the testimony; you weighed the evidence; your judgment and conscience tell you to find that this seat was not secured by corruption, but the people who elected you believe otherwise, not upon the evidence but upon impressions secured through biased and warped newspaper reports, and you therefore should disregard your judgment, violate your conscience, and condemn Mr. Lorimer." This is the latest rule for judicial action suggested by this selfproclaimed leader of progress. Because we have not followed it we are not progressive, but reactionary. This was the rule of action followed by Pilate nearly nineteen hundred years ago. This is the first time, I venture to say, in our history, or in the history of any civilized people, that Pilate's rule of judicial action has met the approval of any man, save those who crucified Jesus, and they despised him for following it. If former President Roosevelt had been standing on one side when Pilate delivered Jesus to the Jews, after having examined into the charges and found no fault in him, but, at the demand of the people, turned him over to them for crucifixion, he would have clapped his hands and exclaimed "Most righteous, most honorable, most just judge!"
Mr. POINDEXTER.

Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. JONES. Certainly. Mr. POINDEXTER, I do not know that I am exactly clear as to the illustration which the Senator is now making. Does the Senator mean to parallel Jesus Christ with the Senator from Illinois

Mr. JONES. At least he would have done this if he had been as progressive then as he is now. I am charitable enough to believe, however, that he would have been a reactionary

He says the people of the State of Washington will not approve of my course. I am proud of the people who elected me. They are as intelligent, as just, and as righteous a people as can be found in any State of this Union. They may have the impression that Mr. Lorimer should not be seated. They may have the impression that he secured his seat corruptly, but they would despise me, and justly so, if they believed for one moment that I would set aside my solemn judgment and conviction based on the evidence and vote against him because I thought such a course would please them. I have so much fulth in them and their sense of what is right that I do not believe one can be found within the confines of my State who is such a reactionary as to approve and desire to see applied to-day in this or any other case the rule of judicial conduct practiced by Pontius Pilate. If Mr. Roosevelt made this suggestion seriously it is shocking. If he made it ignorantly it is pitiable. If he made it to secure votes it is despicable.

You will note that this is not a suggestion that the judges should decide a case according to their judgment of the law and the evidence and then allow the people to pass upon it and reverse it if they do not approve. It goes further than that. It suggests that the people shall make the decision, that the judge shall disregard the law and the evidence and try to ascertain what he thinks the people desire to be done in the case, and then act in accordance with what he believes is their This proposition is so extreme, so shocking, so conjudgment. trary to all principles of enlightened jurisprudence, so antagonistic to the basic principles of judicial action that have been brought forth in the crucible of time for the protection of life. liberty, and property that I can not conceive of the state of mind or the purpose that prompted its utterance. I leave this mystery for the people themselves to solve. Not until the founda-tions of the Republic rock under the assaults of passion and injustice will such a proposition meet the approval of any considerable number of our people.

I wish I could think he was misquoted. I wish I could think he inadvertently spoke as he did. I wish I could think it a slip of the tongue. No one can read the statement I have quoted, however, and conclude otherwise than that it was a deliberate, premeditated, and carefully prepared statement, and as such, it seems to me, it must challenge the universal condemnation of our people regardless of political belief or station in life. If this rule is to be followed then judges must instruct juries that they are not to decide cases upon the law and the evidence submitted to them, but they must endeavor to find out what the public sentiment is with reference to the matter at issue and decide it in accordance with that. Judges instead of instructing the jury as to what the law is should try to tell them what the public sentiment is.

This is the essence of lynch law. In the paper yesterday afternoon I saw that a poor wretch who had been acquitted because the evidence against him was not sufficient to convict him was taken out and riddled with bullets. There is no more excuse, gentlemen of the Senate, for disregarding the law and the judgments of the courts if they do not agree with the opinion of the people than there is for the riddling of that poor wretch Suggestions from those in high standing that with bullets. laws should be disregarded and no heed given to judgments not in accord with what may seem to be public opinion encourage and foster these lawless outbreaks, and those who promulgate such suggestions are more dangerous to our institutions and our public welfare than the open lawbreaker.

A few weeks ago the former President was called as a juror, but was always excused from service. According to the newspapers he was much disappointed and could not understand why the attorneys would not allow him to act as a juror in any of the cases that were brought for trial. When finally excused he expressed his disappointment and declared he would have given the parties to the suits a square deal. I wondered myself why he was not allowed to act as a juror; I understand now. The attorneys no doubt understood or had knowledge of his progressive ideas as to the duty of the judge or jury to decide a case, not on the law or the evidence, but in accordance with popular opinion on the matter at issue; and it is no wonder that they did not desire to trust the interests of their clients to him.

If such a rule is to be followed in judicial matters, what of the safeguards about human rights and liberties of which we have so proudly boasted? What of our ideas as to justice and the judge? What of the figures of justice, blindfolded, with scales evenly balanced? These should be razed from our temples and in their place should be placed a masked figure with a rope about the neck of the trembling victim. This is the ultimate of this monstrous doctrine. Instead of the judge instructing the jury to try the poor, trembling, friendless outcast at the bar by the law and evidence adduced against him, he must instruct them to disregard this and to try him by a biased and influmed public opinion. This is the doctrine of the leader of alleged progression. "Oh! Justice, thou art fled to brutish beasts."

This statement of Mr. Roosevelt is an insult to the members of the minority of the committee. He assumes that they have rendered their verdict in accordance with what they believe to be the views of the people of their respective States rather than from their conviction. He intimates that they have followed the supposed views of their constituents rather than the sworn evidence to which they have listened. I do not agree with them, but I am so confident of their integrity and courage, and of their realization of their duty as judges, that I will not believe they are acting upon any such theory until they

Mr. Roosevelt seemed to be confident that Mr. Lorimer secured his seat in the Senate by corruption. What does he know about it? Has he heard the testimony? No. Has he read the testimony? No. Does he form his judgment on the case from his knowledge of the facts? No. What is the foundation for his judgment? Not evidence; not facts. What, then? The record in this case shows the basis for his action. It was reported last year with a great blare of trumpets that Mr. Roosevelt had refused to sit at the banquet table with Mr. LORIMER. It was a spectacular performance and one which doubtless impressed the country with the high sense of honor which it suposed actuated him. In the minds of the people he condemned Mr. LORIMER, and it was, no doubt, so intended. It helped to create the impression that Mr. LORIMER has acted corruptly in securing his election. Upon what evidence did he base this action? The record in this case shows that the sole basis for his action was the following:

An enemy of Mr. LORIMER told Mr. Roosevelt that another enemy of Mr. Lorimer had told him that a friend of Mr. LOHIMER had told him that money had been raised to secure Mr. Lorimer's election. Mr. Roosevelt told his informant that this was the reason he had refused to sit at the table with Mr. LORIMER. I leave the people of the country to say whether or not any man is justified in condemning another man upon such

Mr. President, there are some so constituted that they rejoice when an evil charge is brought against another and weep and lament when a jury brings in a verdict of not guilty. I can not understand such a nature. It is a pleasure to me to believe an evil charge unfounded and I rejoice when, after a fair trial and no undue influence, a verdict of "not guilty" is brought in, A few days ago the validity of the title of the venerable Senator from Wisconsin to a seat in this body was attacked. I was strongly against him, but I rejoiced when a majority of this Senate, men abler than I and acting just as honestly and conscientiously as I, held his title good. The majority may not always be right, but it is more apt to be right than the minority, and when it decides in favor of innocence I accept its verdict with no regrets. Am I wrong in this? Is such a state of mind an evidence of reactionary tendencies? If so, I prefer it to being a progressive, with the disposition of a vulture or a hyena.

Mr. President, the former President of the United States says, in effect, that he does not believe for a moment the people of Washington would approve my vote on the Lorimer case. They may not approve my verdict, but they are not condemning my action. They may doubt the correctness of my judgment, but they will not condemn me for doing what I believe to be right. I have received but one letter from my constituents condemning my course, and that was written in Chicago. I have received many commending my action. The communication which I received condemning my action only strengthens my conviction that I am right. I am going to read the communication to the Senate as a sample of the state of mind of many of those who have helped create the public opinion and as showing the character of that phase of public opinion that Mr. Roosevelt asks us to follow. Listen:

Say, Jones, honestly, how much did you get? Everybody knows that ou would not reverse your position, disgrace your State, ruin yourself s far as you have done, without getting a big swag for it. Shame!

He did not dare sign his name.

ONE ILLINOISAN.

Gentlemen of the Senate, are we to be controlled in our action by a public sentiment upon matters of which the Constisentiment growing out of minds so inflamed that they can not see any good in any man or any decision if it is not in accordance with their view.

I have been told that some suggestions similar to this have been made in some of the papers, and it is peculiar, to say the least of it, that every paper containing any such suggestion is a paper that claims to be progressive. I feel sorry for a man whose mind is in the condition that this man's is. He can not help it. No man, controlled by a mental cesspool, can act any differently from that, and he deserves pity, pity of the profoundest kind.

I have received letters commending my course, and I am going to read an extract from one. This man is not afraid to sign his name. He does not ask that it be treated as confidential, but I am not going to give his name because I am not going to turn loose upon him a lot of human hyenas who could see no honesty in our acting contrary to their opinions. He is dean of the law school of one of the oldest colleges in one of the oldest States of the Union. This is what he says:

DEAR SENATOR-

I want to say that I never met him in my life-

Just a line to assure you of my appreciation, respect, and thanks for your conscientious, courageous, and manly course in voting for the acquittal of Senator Lorimen on the evidence before your committee.

As a lawyer, I would consider my conscience outraged and be heartily ashamed to vote otherwise. My dear Senator, I fail to comprehend how any lawyer, deep in the lore of the profession, could fail to coincide with your view of the case. I should dislike to have it appear in my life record that prejudice mastered my reason in the interest of vague rumor and irremediable injustice.

Mr. President, it may not be necessary, but, nevertheless, I desire to state what has been my course in this case. When charges were made and it was certain that the Senate would be called upon to pass upon the truth of these charges, I realized that I would be called upon to act as a judge in the case. therefore did not read any newspaper comments upon it; I wanted to be free to decide it on the law, the evidence, and the record. I did so. My verdict on the first record was against Mr. LORIMER. I have followed the same course in this investigation and purpose continuing to do so. I have not read any newspaper reports or comments of or upon the evidence. have endeavored to free my mind as much as possible from the conclusion reached in the other case in order that I might consider and weigh the evidence upon which this decision must be based. Is this course wrong? I think not. I have heard the evidence; I have seen the witnesses. I believe the record will show that I have been present on every day, except two just before Christmas, the committee was in session. I shall not now discuss the case or the reasons for my verdict. I shall do that later on. I will only say that in my judgment no new facts have been brought out that militate against Mr. Lorimer, and the old case against him has been overturned and destroyed. I am as firmly convinced as it is possible to be that this election was not secured by corruption, and that his title to a seat in this body is just as valid as that of any Senator against whom no charges have been brought. I know that minds may differ upon the effect of certain testimony. They may weigh it differently; they may reach different conclusions upon the same state of facts and both be perfectly honest in their conclusions. I may be wrong in the conclusion I already have reached, but I have reached my conclusion, my judgment is determined, my conscience is satisfied, and I could not act otherwise. I have too much confidence and faith in the adherence of the people in this country to those principles which have been recognized as insuring a fair and honest judgment to believe that they will condemn any man for acting in accordance with what he believes to be right.

And Pilate, when he had called together the chief priests and the rulers and the people, Sald unto them, Ye have brought this man unto me, as one that perverteth the people: and, behold, I, having examined him before you, have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him;

And he said unto them the third time, Why, what evil hath he done? I have found no cause of death in him: I will therefore chastise him, and let him go.
And they were instant with loud voices, requiring that he might be crucified. And the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed.
And Pilate gave sentence that it should be as they required. (St. Luke xxiii, 13, 14, 22, 23, 24.

This is the rule of action which Theodore Roosevelt advocates to-day as a progressive rule of action. This is the rule of action he would have me follow. Let every liberty-loving, fair-dealing citizen in this Republic answer to himself this question: "Do I approve this rule of action?" As for me, I will never follow it under any circumstances, here or elsewhere.

During the delivery of Mr. Jones's speech,

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington will suspend. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays tution makes us judges, and are we to be influenced by a public | before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, upon the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Washington will proceed.

At the conclusion of Mr. Jones's speech,

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] that this is merely a judicial question. On the contrary, I believe that the Lorimer case should be determined as a legislative question, the Senate of the United States determining for itself under the rule and under the law its own membership, and that it should be guided in its determination of the question of Mr. LORIMER retaining his scat by the best interests of this Republic.

Regardless of the question as to whether Mr. Lorimer was guilty of personal corruption, and regardless of whether or not Mr. LORIMER knew of corruption in the Legislature of Illinois, I believe, provided always that there was established by competent evidence proof of corruption in the purchase of a single vote in obtaining this seat for Mr. LORIMER, that the election should be declared void. In no other way can the power of corruption be so effectually and adequately checked in electing Senators under the present system.

Mr. President, the Senator from Washington has ventured to repeat on the floor of the United States Senate the precedent of Pontius Pilate delivering Christ to be crucified as an example of the folly of permitting the judgment of the common people to prevail over the decision or conduct of an upright judge. This Pontius Pilate precedent has been repeated many times in the public press recently as an argument against the progressive program of "the rule of the people" in this country. This argument implies that Pontius Pilate was a fair example of an upright judge who was compelled to yield to the clamor of the unthinking people, to "the inflamed opinion of the mul-titude," as the Senator from Washington says. I take issue with the Senator from Washington in his apparent interpretation of the Pontius Pilate precedent. I believe in the recall of such a judge as Pontius Pilate.

Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that he and I might not be far apart on that proposition.

Mr. OWEN. I am glad to know that we are together on some proposition.

Mr. JONES. I am myself in favor of the recall, the initiative, and referendum within proper restrictions, within State lines, but I do not think that question was at all involved in what I said.

Mr. OWEN. I should even prefer the recall of the unjust judgment of Pontius Pilate rather than to allow to stand his criminal decision of yielding innocence to murder.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Washington, Mr. JONES. It seems to me the Senator fails to appreclate just the position I took. My position is that Pontius Pilate should not have yielded at all, but should have sacrificed his office and his life if necessary to avoid the conviction of a man whom he thought was innocent.

Mr. OWEN. I agree with that view of the Senator from Washington, but the fact is that this judge did not do that. This wicked judge sent to death the innocent prisoner at the bar before him, and the common people are wrongfully charged with his political crime by those using the Pontius Pilate prece-

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. JONES. The only difference between Pontius Pilate and myself on that proposition is that I am not going to yield to the clamor.

Mr. OWEN. I congratulate the Senator from Washington on having established an important difference between himself and Pontius Pilate.

In the first place, Pontius Pilate was not an upright judge. He was a stand-pat, pie-counter politician from the house of Tiberius Cæsar, serving as governor in Judea under the patronage system of the Roman Empire.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. JONES. The only fault that I have to find with Pontius Pilate's stand-pat proclivities is that when it was necessary to stand pat he became a progressive.

Mr. OWEN. He had but little conception of justice or mercy, Mr. President, or of the progressive movement of to-day, which stands for equal rights to all; but he well understood how to stand pat with the political machine in Rome and in Jerusalem that gave special privilege to him and his allies at the expense of the common people. His master, Tiberius, under whom he was trained, found amusement in having men and wild beasts fight to the death in the arena at Rome for his entertainment. When Jesus Christ was brought before Pontius Pilate and Pilate found no wrong in him, the chief priests falsely charged Christ with seeking to be "King of the Jews" and threatened Pilate as an office holder. "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend. Whosoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cæsar."

Then it was that this governor, this political judge from Rome, the direct product of political patronage, yielded the innocent prisoner at the bar to be crucified in the face of justice and the prayers of his own good wife to save himself from possible inconvenience or misrepresentation at Rome, and he was sufficiently a villain that he wrote a false title and put it on the

Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews. (John xix, 19.)

Pilate's wife advised him to mercy and justice. No woman had a dishonorable part in the crucifixion of our Lord.

Not she with traitorous kiss her Saviour stung, Not she denied him with unholy tongue, She, when apostles shrunk, could dangers brave, Last at the cross and earliest at the grave.

This unspeakable scoundrel, who ended his base career by suicide, is held up by the standpatters who use the Pontius Pilate precedent as a model judge, who wanted to do right, and the common people are charged with being to blame for his infamous crime.

The common people were not responsible for the death of Christ. They in reality admired and loved Christ. It is of record in St. Mark (xii, 37) that "the common people heard Him gladly," and throughout the Scriptures it is manifest that great multitudes of the common people surrounded Jesus and hung upon His teachings, which, though not recorded, were so engraved in the memory of those same common people who heard Him that the wonderful prophecy of Christ after nineteen hundred years is still verified-

Heaven and earth shall pass away, but My words shall not pass away. (Matt. xxiv, 35.)

The chief priests had soldiers employed to watch the grave of Christ to keep the common people from removing the body, and the common people—the fishermen, the sailors, the laborers, the farmers of Judea—instead of condemning Him to death, treasured His words in their hearts, although they could not read and could not write, and treasured these words so faithfully that they were handed down from generation to generation until they have converted the whole world to the wisdom and beauty of His teachings. And I remind the Senator from Washington that the essence of the doctrine of Christ is the moving force now of the progressive movement in America and throughout the world. It is the doctrine of the brotherhood of man. The doctrine of altruism. The doctrine of service. It is a doctrine which was utterly opposed to the system of government in Judea in the days of Pontius Pilate, which Christ expressly criticized and condemned. He opposed the exercise of unjust authority by the rulers over the people, and advised His followers to the contrary in the following words:

But it shall not be so among you; but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant. (Matt. xx, 26-27.)

This is the doctrine of the progressive movement in the United States—that the people shall rule and the official shall be a minister, a scrvant, and not a ruler.

The truth is the people did not exercise the power to rule in Judea. Christ Himself, in speaking to His disciples, reminded them of this fact:

Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. (Matt. xx, 25.)

In reality Pontius Pilate and Herod were "the princes of the Gentiles" who exercised this dominion over the common people, and Annas and Caiaphas, the chief priests, the captains of the temple and the elders, were those who exercised authority over the common people.

Christ was not condemned to death by the common people, but was sent to His death at the hands of the Roman soldiers by the chief priests and scribes of the hierarchy at Jerusalemthe misrepresentatives of the common people.

Christ Himself said:

Behold, we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be be-trayed unto the chief priests and unto the seribes, and they shall con-demn Him to death, and shall deliver Him to the Gentiles (the Roman soldiers) to mock, and to scourge, and to crucify Him. (Matt. soldiers) t xx, 18-19.)

At the very time that this prophecy was made Christ entered Jerusalem, and the common people met Him with great enthusiasm.

A very great multitude spread their garments in the way: others cut down branches from the trees, and strewed them in the way, and the multitudes that went before, and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the son of David: blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord: Hosanna in the highest. (Matt. xxi, 8-0.)

And it was with this enthusiastic following of the common people behind him that-

Jesus went into the Temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the Temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers * * and said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves. (Matt. xxi, 12-13.)

The "den of thieves" was a part of the political machine of Jerusalem.

And when the chief priests and seribes saw the wonderful things that He did, * * * they were sore displeased. (Matt. xxl, 15.)

It was not the common people who condemned Christ, as the Senator from Washington erroneously believes. It was "the chief priests and the elders," who "were sore displeased," who took counsel against Jesus to put Him to death. (Matt. xxvii, 1.) It was "the chief priests and elders" who were guilty of the unspeakable infamy of bribing Judas Iscariot with 30 pieces of silver to betray Christ. (Matt. xxvii, 3.) It was "the chief priests and the elders" that persuaded their strikers and hangers-on that they should prefer Barabbas and destroy Jesus. (Matt. xxvii, 20.)

Jesus was not accused by the common people; he was accused by "the chief priests and the elders." (Matt, xxvii, 12.) It was "the chief priests and elders" that selzed Jesus in the garden and led Him to Annas and then to Caiaphas, the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled. (Matt. xxvi,

It was "the high priest" who charged Christ with blasphemy and it was the priests and the elders who declared Him guilty of blasphemy and worthy of death. (Matt. xxvii, 65-66.)

It was "the chief priests, the captains of the temple, and the elders" who seized Christ in the garden and to whom He replied. (Luke xxii, 52.)

It was they who took Him and led Him and brought Him to the high priest's house. (Luke xxii, 52-54.) It was the chief priests and scribes who stood and vehemently accused Him before Pilate and Herod. (Luke xxiii, 10.)

Mr. President, the men who were responsible for the crucifixion of Christ were Pilate, the political judge, the beneficiary of a despicable standpat military patronage, and the machine politicians of the hierarchy in Jerusalem, who had wormed themselves in authority, and it was not the common people who were responsible.

The common people heard Him gladly. The common people threw their clothes and palm branches in the streets for Him to ride over, and shouted hosannas, and when Pilate and Herod yielded to the demand of the machine politicians of Jerusalem, of the reactionaries and conservatives of Jerusalem, and turned Christ over to the soldiers of Herod for crucifixion, the common people followed Him with weeping and with sorrow. The Scripture says:

And there followed Him a great company of people, and of women, which also bewalled and lamented Him. (Luke, xxIII, 27.)

Jesus, turning unto them, said, "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for e, but weep for yourselves and for your children." (Luke xxili, 28.)

If the people of Judea had had the power which had been delegated to the machine politicians of Jerusalem they would not have permitted Christ to be crucified.

The Senator from Washington evidently thinks that Pilate was a virtuous judge and that the common people of Jerusalem were a howling meb. The fact is Pontius Pilate was a typical machine politician from Rome, the beneficiary of imperial patronage, willing to crucify Christ himself and write with his own hand a false epitaph over the cross, rather than risk the loss of his political job, and the web that Jed Ponting risk the loss of his political job, and the mob that led Pontins Pliate to this crime was not a mob of the common people but was a mob of temple thieves led by "the high priests," "the captains of the temple," "the elders," the beneficiaries of the hierarchy of Jerusalem, who, being possessed of delegated power, used it in defiance of the will of the masses of the common people of Jerusalem.

Let us hear no more of the Pontius Pilate precedent. Even if it had been true that the masses of the common people of Judea had been as ignorant and as bloodthirsty as the standpat politicians of Rome and of Jerusalem, who murdered Christ under the pretense of law, still no parallel is justified to be drawn between people worthy of this description and the common people of the United States of America. Nineteen hundred years ago the common people could not read; nineteen hundred years ago the common people could not write; nineteen hundred years ago the common people had no books, no newspapers, no telegraph, no telephones, no transportation; nineteen hundred years ago the common people had no opportunity to understand the problems of government. In this day and generation nearly every single one of the great mass of the common people can read, can write, and has before him every morning the news of the world for his information. The average citizen of the United States to-day knows more than Herod and Pilate and Tiberius Cæsar rolled into one, and knows more than the chief priests, the captains of the temple, and the scribes of that era. I believe in the rule of the people, and I invite the Senator from Washington and all*those who oppose the progressive inovement to find a new argument and to abandon the precedent of Pontius Pilate.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I fear that some one has imposed upon the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] by palming off upon him a progressive version of my speech before he began the preparation of the speech that he has just delivered in answer to mine, or else I have failed to make myself clearly understood. It has been the furthest from my intention to make any attack upon Christ, and yet the Senator's very carefully delivered address seems to be based upon that idea. I join with him in his attack upon Pontius Pilate; I join in his commendation of the life, the doctrines, and the character of

STANDARD OIL AND AMERICAN TOBACCO COS.

Mr. POMERENE. The senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Cum-MINS] gave notice that he would address the Senate on Friday I desire to give notice that immediately following his speech I shall, with the permission of the Senate, submit some remarks on Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be waived and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that is the order of the Senate.

hears none, and that is the order of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief of Staff," on page 2, line 3, after the word "stationery," to insert "typewriters and exchange of same," so as to make the clause read:

Army War College: For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery, typewriters and exchange of same, office, tollet, and desk furniture, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals, printing and binding, maps, police utensits, employment of temporary, technical, or special services, and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk of division for superintendence of the War College Building, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief Signal Officer," on page 5, line 13, after the word "and," to strike out "airplanes" and insert "aeroplanes"; in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "fifty"; in line 24, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred"; and on page 6, line 1, after the words "repair of," to strike out "airplanes" and insert "aeroplanes," so as to make the clause read:

Simal Service of the Army: For express of the Simal Service of Simal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons and aeroplanes, including their maintenance and repair; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise, $350,000: Provided, however, That not more than $100,000 of said amount shall be used for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of aeroplanes and other aerial machines.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to reduce the tolls on Alaska cable and telegraph messages to 50 per cent of the present rates during a period of six months from and after July 1, 1912, and then to fix such rates as he may deem warranted by the business developed during said period of reduced rates.

So as to make the clause read:

Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: For defraying the cost of such extension and betterments of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1914, from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system that have been covered into the Treasury of the United Sates, the extent of such extensions and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $50,000; Provided, That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to reduce the toils on Alaska cable and telegraph messages to 50 per cent of the present rates during a period of six months from and after July 1, 1912, and then to fix such rates as he may deem warranted by the business developed during said period of reduced rates.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Pay of officers of the line," on page 6, line 26, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six million eight hundred and ninety-three thousand nine hundred and eight" and insert "seven million seven hundred thousand seven hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of officers of the line, $7,700,700.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire why the increase of a million dollars in this appropriation? I think we ought to have some explanation.

Mr. DU PONT. I did not hear the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I notice an increase in this appropriation over the amount carried by the House bill of a million dollars or more in this clause.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the estimate was $7,700,700. The Senate committee has made the bill agree with the estimate, because it is based on the number of men in the Army and their salaries. It is simply a mathematical computation. The evidence before us shows that if this appropriation is reduced, it will simply make a deficit. I will read to the Senator what Paymaster Gen. Whipple says on the subject:

The CHAIRMAN. * * With respect to this, there appears to be an increase of nearly $500,000.

Gen. Whipple. The number and grades of officers authorized by law in the several branches of the line of the Army are provided for in this estimate. The rate of pay computed as provided by the act of May 11, 1908, and the additional pay for length of service is based upon the longevity record of the officers as shown by the Official Army Register. The authorized number of second lieutenants of the line is 963, but it is estimated that the original vacancies to the number of 242 created by the promotions incident to increase of officers of higher grade by the net of March 3, 1911, will not be filled in excess of 150 during the fiscal year 1913. Therefore, the estimate is submitted for 871 second lieutenants of the line instead of 963, the authorized number.

Then he goes on to say that, with this reduction, the amount reported by the committee is the exact sum that will be required to pay the officers of the Army.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why did the House of Representatives cut it down a million dollars? Do they propose to dismiss some of the officers?

Mr. DU PONT. That is a question that the Senate Military Committee has not been able to determine, but I have stated the facts. We have decided that it would be useless to decrease the amount; if we should do so, the decrease would simply appear in a deficiency bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to remind the Senator from Delaware that the House proposed to reduce the Army by five regiments of Cavalry.

Mr. DU PONT. Yes; that has been taken into consideration. Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. And the Senate amendment proposes to put that back.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the reason for this? Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. That is the only reason. Mr. DU PONT. That is one of the reasons.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 2, after the word "million," to strike out "five hundred and twenty-four" insert "seven hundred and sixty-seven," so as to read:

For additional pay to officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,767,120.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 4, after the word "dollars." to strike out:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

And insert:

And insert:

Provided, That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached or permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least three years of the preceding period of six years prior to such detachment with the regiment or regiments of Cavairy, Field Artillery, or Infantry, or with the organizations of the Coast Artillery Corps, to which he shall have been assigned by the War Department; but this shall not apply to officers detailed in the Ordnance Department and the Burcau of Insular Affairs, as authorized by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1906, and March 2, 1907.

Mr. WARDEN, I cell the attention of the Senator from

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the three-year period referred to in the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the provision in this bill as it came from the other House for the purpose of curing the evil aimed at in the proviso was much stronger and much more satisfactory. I shall therefore move that the language of the amendment, beginning on line 11 of page 7, be stricken out, and that there be substituted for it the language of the original bill, which reads as follows:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

The language of the bill as it came from the other House contained these two cardinal ideas: That no money appropriated by this act should be put where the provisions of the act are violated. The amendment strikes that proviso out. And then it contains the idea that unless such continuous detachment from his command for more than four years was specially authorized by law the officer shall receive no pay. The amendment as reported by the Senate committee—I registered my objection to that in the committee—reads in this way:

Provided, That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached or permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least three years of the preceding period of six years prior to such detachment with the regiment or regiments of Cavalry, etc.

In other words, it forbids this thing to be done; but if it is done, there is no punishment for it to anybody; there is no deprivation of pay. I think the Houses of Congress had better keep their hands upon the purse strings, and that the right way to control the executive departments is to keep our hands upon the purse strings and to see to it that when laws which we make are violated no pay shall go to those who are complicit in their violation.

Then, in addition to that, the Senate amendment provides:

But this shall not apply to officers detailed in the Ordnance Department and the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as authorized by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1906, and March 2, 1907.

It may be possible that that language is equivalent to the language of the House provision:

Unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

But it may be possible that there are other statutes also that are as worthy of consideration in this connection as the act of June 25, 1906, and the act of March 2, 1907. I think the language of the House bill is stronger, simpler, more direct, and better calculated to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, the trouble about the provision in the House bill is that the officer might be detailed by order of his superior officer and kept on detailed duty longer than he desires to stay, so that he will be unable to get back to his command within the time prescribed. In such a case it is not the fault of such an officer. He is bound to obey his superior officer. He may be detailed by the President. So the punishment is put on the wrong man; you punish him for not going back to his regiment when he is ordered not to go back.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am familiar with that argument. It does not seem to me to be cogent, because I believe if you provide that officers shall not be paid in these cases their superior officers are not going to order these violations of the law. I am sure the President would not violate the law when he knew that the man who was ordered to violate it would have to suffer for it, and I am sure if some other officer of the Government undertook to violate it by giving such an order that his attention would be called to it by the inferior officer, and if he still persisted in it, it seems to me, he would render himself liable to a penalty. But, at any rate, as it is render himself liable to a penalty. But, at any rate, as it is now you have no means to enforce the law after you make it, and you will have, I think, just as much of this huddling around Washington on the part of pets in the Army as you ever have had, and each man will excuse himself upon the ground that he was ordered by some superior officer and that he could not help it. I am familiar with that argument in connection with a great many other organizations besides the Army. I am told that if a railroad man obeys his boss and violates the interstatecommerce law of the country he ought not to be punished, I am in favor of teaching men in every department of this Government that their so-called boss is not their boss, but that the law is their boss, and that ought to be carried even into the Army itself.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the discipline of the Army is not like that of civil institutions. It is based upon prompt, unquestioned obedience of orders from superiors. the Senator in the desire to put an end to this continuous detail of officers about Washington or other so-called "soft places"; but the House strikes at the wrong parties. The House strikes at the officer himself, who may be obeying the orders of his superior officer, and takes away his pay. If there is to be any fine or stoppage of pay, it ought to be upon the responsible man, the man who gives the order, and not upon the poor second lieutenant or first lieutenant or captain who may be obeying the order. Therefore, the Senate amendment is considered better than the House provision; and in any event, if the Senate amendment carries, both will go to conference, and if any arguments can be advanced or any papers can be produced that give us a different light, we can avail ourselves of them; but it looks to me as if the House provision seeks to punish some one other than the responsible party.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, there are one or two points in connection with this matter that have not been touched upon, to which I should like to call the attention of the Senate. The House provision is so framed that it will be possible to evade the intention of the proposed law, as I shall proceed to point out. The House provision is as follows:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

This proposed legislation is defective in that officers are not now commissioned in organizations, but in an arm of the service. Section 2 of the act of October 1, 1890, Twenty-sixth Statutes, page 562, provided that "all appointments in the line of the Army shall be by commission in an arm of the service, and not by commission in any particular regiment," and section 2 of the act of April 26, 1808, Thirtieth Statutes, page 364, provided that "hereafter all vacancies occurring in the Cavalry, Artillery, and Infantry above the grade of second lieutenant shall * * * be filled by promotion according to seniority from the next lower grade of each arm." Officers of all grades in each arm of the service are now assigned to regiments and transferred from one regiment to another, as the interests of the service may require, by orders from the War Department. See section 2, act October 1, 1890; Twenty-sixth Statutes, page 562.

The provision referred to also would seem to be inexpedient, for the reason that an officer on detached service may be liable to forfeiture of pay should he not arrive at the station of the regiment to which he is regularly assigned at the expiration of four years from the date of his detail.

The provision is so stringent, using the words "for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind," that it might be construed to include the period of time during which the officer is en route to his regiment, for that is a duty enjoined upon him by the order relieving him from de-

The hardship to the officer will be apparent when it is considered that an officer can not relieve himself from duty, but the order must be issued by superior military authority. The the order must be issued by superior military authority. order might be delayed by oversight or by neglect, or it might not be issued in time, and further, even if the order be issued in ample time the officer might be delayed by unforeseen delays on railroads or steamships, so that, without any laches on his part, he might be subject to forfeiture of pay.

It might be used also as an engine of persecution by which an officer could be deprived of his pay.

It is submitted that any legislation providing that officers of the Army shall not remain on detached service more than four years in six should not place the responsibility for the execution of the law upon officers who must obey the orders of their military superiors and have no authority to relieve themselves from the operation of the orders which placed them on such detached duty. To assume otherwise, as the provision under consideration would seem to indicate, would be subversive of all military discipline.

Further, there might exist a great exigency which would render it highly prejudicial to the public interests to relieve an officer at the expiration of his four years' detail, even temporarily; yet the provision in question makes no exception in any case; it applies to "any duty of any kind," unless "specifically authorized by law."

In view of the above grave objections to the legislation under consideration, it is submitted that the proviso, page 6, lines 22-25, and page 7, lines 1-3, should be stricken out, and the following proposed amendment should be substituted therefor:

Provided. That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached or permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least two years of the preceding period of six years with the regiment or regiments of Cavalry, Light Artillery, or Infantry, or with the organizations of the Coast Artillery Corps, to which he shall have been assigned by the War Department; but this shall not apply to officers detailed to the Philippine Constabulary, the Alaskan Road Commission, the Ordnance Department, and the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as authorized by the acts of Congress approved January 30, 1903; May 14, 1906; June 25, 1906; March 2, 1907.

The proposed amendment not only strikes at the root of the trouble resulting from the absence of officers on detached service, but makes definite the period an officer must serve with the arm of the service to which commissioned and the regiment to which assigned.

I will now call the attention of the Senate to the laws governings details to the Staff Corps and departments. They are as follows:

DETAILS TO STAFF CORPS AND DEPARTMENTS.

All officers so detailed shall serve for a period of four years, at the expiration of which time they shall return to duty with the line, and officers below the rank of lieutenant colonel shall not again be eligible for selection in any staff department until they shall have served two years with the line. (Sec. 26, act Feb. 2, 1901; 31 Stat., 755.)

DETAILS TO GENERAL STAFF CORPS.

All officers detailed in the General Staff Corps shall be detailed for periods of four years unless sooner relieved. * * * * Upon being relieved from duty in the General Staff Corps, officers shall return to the branch of the Army in which they hold permanent commissions, and no officer shall be eligible to a further detail in the General Staff Corps until he shall have served two years with the branch of the Army in which commissioned, except in case of emergency or in time of war. (Sec. 3, act Feb. 14, 1903; 32 Stat., S31.)

It is to be observed that when an officer has been detailed for four years he is required by existing law to return to duty with the line for two years. Now, duty "with the line" or "with the branch of the Army in which they hold permanent convenissions" (the words used in the above-quoted acts) does not necessarily mean duty with the regiment to which an officer is assigned by the War Department, an officer being commissioned in an arm of the service—Cavalry, Artillery, or (See acts of October 1, 1890, and April 26, 1898, Infantry. quoted above.) As matters now stand, when he has completed his four years' detail and is returned to the line, he still may be detached for other duty away from his regiment, provided it is in the line, or, in the case of an officer relieved from the General Staff Corps, in the arm to which he is commissioned.

Further, the requirement of law that an officer shall not serve more than four years in any period of six years in the staff departments only applies to officers below the rank of lieutenant colonel.

The House provision does not do away with that at all; it leaves the door open to abuse, so far as lieutenant colonels and colonels are concerned.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken—
Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the amendment to the amendment is in order first, is it not?
The VICE PRESIDENT. The suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi was to strike out what the committee proposed to put in. It simply reverses it; that is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. SWANSON. I understand the amendment under discussion is the one on page 7.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee to what extent the amendment would interfere with the present detail of Army officers to military colleges and to aid in the instruction and discipline of State volunteer forces?

Mr. DU PONT. It does not interfere at all with the existing regulations and law on the subject. It simply provides that if an officer has been on such a detail for four years he is then to return to his regiment for at least two years. It puts an end to the abuse by which certain officers are always away from their regiments upon agreeable duties, while certain other officers are always with their regiments, often at disagreeable stations and engaged in disagreeable duties. That is the object of the amendment.

I do not think that the United States Gov-Mr. SWANSON. ernment can render better service to its military arm than to furnish sufficient and ample details to military schools and in aid of the State volunteer forces. I should dislike to see any amendment pass that interferes with that.

Mr. WARREN. It does not affect it at all. Mr. DU PONT. It does not affect it. It simply provides that at the end of the four years the officer detailed shall go back to his regiment and another shall take his place.

Mr. SWANSON. Suppose there is a special officer like we have had for some time at the Virginia Military Institute or the Virginia Agricultural College, who proves very efficient and arouses good military enthusiasm, under this amendment is he bound to leave at the end of the four years, even though his services are still desired?

Mr. WARREN. That is the present law.

Mr. DU PONT. That is the present law and has been the law for many years.

Mr. SWANSON. And this changes it but does not interfere

Mr. DU PONT. This is simply intended to prevent the evasion of that law.

Mr. WARREN. The proposition advocated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] would not change the law, but would fine an officer and take away his pay if he should remain over the four years on detailed duty.

Mr. SWANSON. I am not speaking about the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi. I am speaking about the amendment of the committee. To what extent does that restrict the assignment of officers to military schools and in connection with State volunteer forces?

Mr. WARREN. It does not affect it at all. It reaffirms the law as it is. The reason for the amendment being put in here was to change the provision of the House bill, which really provided for fining the wrong man. An officer might be prevented by order of his superior officer from rejoining his regiment within the period required.

Mr. OVERMAN. 4 should like to ask why the exception is made in line 19 in favor of the officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs? It is said we want to get rid of these haugers-on in Washington, who are detailed here and stay here indefinitely, while officers less favored stay with their commands and never get away. I think the object sought to be attained by the provision is a good one, but I can not understand why the exception is made. The provision is made to apply to every other bureau except the Bureau of Insular Affairs. Officers in the other bureaus are required to go back to their commands at a certain time, but the officers of the Bureau of Insular Affairs are excepted.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that there are only two officers detailed in the Bureau of Insular Affairs. There is a special law authorizing their detail, and it has been represented to the Military Committee by the War Department that their experience and familiarity with the duties in that bureau, which are exceptional, are of great importance, and that the law should not be changed as to them. As I have said, there are only two officers detailed there.

Mr. OVERMAN. Only two officers detailed in the whole bureau?

Mr. DU PONT. Only two officers of the Army are detailed in the Bureau of Insular Affairs.

Mr. OVERMAN. Gen. Edwards and Col. McIntyre? Mr. DU PONT. Gen. Edwards and his assistant. Mr. OVERMAN. I know Col. McIntyre, and he is a very valuable man.

Mr. DU PONT. They are appointed for four years under the

Mr. OVERMAN. They have been in this bureau for how long, I will ask?

Mr. WARREN. Col. McIntyre has been there less than four years and Gen. Edwards has been there about five or six years.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know Col. McIntyre has been there only 4 years, but has not Gen. Edwards been there about 10 years?

Mr. WARREN. He is chief of the bureau.
Mr. OVERMAN. I know he is chief of the bureau.
Mr. WARREN. He is serving, I think, his second term, and has been there for perhaps six years. He may have been here in Washington before that on other duty, or on that same duty before his appointment as brigadier general under the law. He has been over to the Philippines and to our other outlying possessions many times on duty pertaining to the important office he has so ably filled.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know he has been serving in Washington for 8 or 10 years, and I do not know why an exception should be made in his case. It is proposed to provide that officers detailed to other bureaus shall go back to their commands at the end of the four-year period, while this officer may be kept here indefinitely. Col. McIntyre, as I have stated, is a very valuable man. I know him to be such. He came here three years ago, and has proven a very efficient and capable officer in the Bureau of Insular Affairs; but we can get other men in the Army to do the work, and Col. McIntyre, when his time is out, can go back to his command the same as other good men. Gen. Edwards has been here six years, according to the Senator from Wyoming, and why not let him go back to his command and another officer can take his place? Why keep him here indefinitely? Why not give some other officer a

Mr. WARREN. It is not a matter of men, but it is a matter of the peculiar work that they have to do in the Bureau of Insular Affairs. They not only have to deal with Army matters, but they have also to deal with civil matters in connection with the civil government of the islands.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think there is more than one man in the Army; I think there are plenty of men who can do the same work

Mr. WARREN. Undoubtedly; but they do not have the same experience.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is only administrative work, and we could get just as good administrative officers as either one of these men.

Mr. DU PONT. That is a different proposition, but special knowledge is required on the part of these officers. As I have said, there are only two officers affected by this provision in the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and there seems to be special reasons why they should be excepted.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think that there is any more reason, on the ground of efficiency, to keep these men in the Insular Bureau than in any other bureau? The general idea is to give some other men a chance and send these men back to be with their companies, in order that they may have a knowledge of the men in the regiments and the companies to which they belong, instead of being in Washington in a bomb-proof position. If that principle is right as adopted, with respect to every other department, why make an exception of the Insular Bureau?

Mr. DU PONT. One of these officers, Col. McIntyre, has not been here four years, but the other officer, Gen. Edwards, is on a second detail, and his case is similar to those of other chiefs of bureaus who are detailed for four years. The Quartermaster General, the Commissary General, and the Chief of Ordnance have all been detailed.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the principle you have adopted is allright, and I think it is, that these officers ought to go back to their regiments and companies, why should it not be followed in

Mr. DU PONT. This amendment does not affect the chiefs of bureaus. It was not intended to affect them. It would not affect the Quartermaster General.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it the idea to have them stay here indefinitely?

Mr. DU PONT. That depends on the President. He has the right under the law to redetail them or to send them back after four years. That is a matter within his discretion.

Mr. OVERMAN. But in this amendment you do not leave the President any discretion, because you make an exception.

Mr. DU PONT. It is in the discretion of the President to detail an officer as brigadier general to be the chief of a bureau, Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that under this amendment, with the exception of these two officers, they all have to go back, because you make only two exceptions.

Mr. DU PONT. This amendment, if the Senator will bear with me a moment, applies to officers of the line.

Mr. OVERMAN (reading):

Hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line-

Mr. DU PONT. Of the line.

Mr. OVERMAN (reading):

Shall be detached.

Mr. DU PONT. It has nothing to do with the staff officers, but with officers of the line.

Mr. OVERMAN. These officers in charge of bureaus are not officers of the line?

Mr. DU PONT. If Gen. Edwards is an officer of the line, he is subject to the general law about details.

Mr. OVERMAN. If he is not an officer of the line, what sort of an officer is he? Is the head of this bureau a staff

Mr. DU PONT. The head of the Bureau of Insular Affairs?

Mr. WARREN. His position makes him such.
Mr. OVERMAN. What would be his position if he went back to the ranks with his men?

Mr. DU PONT. I do not know positively. Probably a colonel of Infantry

Mr. OVERMAN. A colonel of Infantry?

Mr. DU PONT. I am not positive.

Mr. OVERMAN. By reason of his position is he a staff officer?

Mr. DU PONT. By reason of the law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would not that be so as to every other bureau head where the President designates him?

Mr. DU PONT. No; because the staff officers— Mr. OVERMAN. I understood the Senator to state that by reason of the fact that he was made chief of the bureau he became a staff officer and not an officer of the line.

Mr. DU PONT. For the time being. Mr. OVERMAN. That would be so as to every other detailed officer who is the head of a bureau.

Mr. BRIGGS. It would be if he was not on the staff when he was detailed.

Mr. OVERMAN. He is a line officer. If he is a line officer, he stands in the same position with every other officer. Mr. WARREN. He is not a line officer while he is serving under his four years' commission as brigadier general.

Mr. OVERMAN. Neither would any other man be.

Mr. WARREN. The heads of departments or bureaus are of two kinds. In one the position is filled by those who come up by regular promotion in their regular corps or department, like the Surgeon General, like the Judge Advocate General, the Quartermaster General, and the Commissary General. There are certain others filled by detail, and this is one which is provided for by special law. But of the others the Quartermaster General, the Commissary General, the Paymaster General, and others are regular staff officers.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that, but this man has not come up from the staff. He comes by special detail here, and he stands like every other detail. They can never be staff officers, I am told, and I want to know why an exception is made in this case.

Mr. WARREN. Here is a law that provides especially for this bureau. It provides differently from any other. He could not come up in regular promotion from this bureau, because there was no such bureau. It was thought better to have a bureau that would handle these semimilitary matters apart from the staff or corps positions, and the law provides that the head shall be, while so serving, a brigadier general, and under the law he has been appointed. In the case of Gen. Edwards, he has been reappointed. This amendment does not affect him. If we should not adopt this proposition, his position would be just as it now is.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why put it in if it does not affect it? I do not like exceptions. If a rule is to be adopted, I want it to be general; and I ask if it does not affect him why make it a special exception in his case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on the Philippines, a place which I held for many years, I was brought into very close contact with the Bureau of Insular The bureau was created for the purpose of dealing particularly with the affairs of Porto Rico and the Philippines. Gen. Edwards had served with credit and for a long time in the Philippine Islands, and he was selected for that bureau.

I think it is only just to him to say he has done admirable work there and has been of the greatest possible assistance to Congress in all matters connected with those islands. Only two Army officers are detailed there, and it seems to me it would be unfortunate to apply a hard and fast rule to that particular bureau. He comes up for detail just like every other officer and changes can be made, but to have Gen. Edwards and Col. McIntyre both leave the bureau would be a great misfortune to the service. Gen. Edwards was obliged to be before the Committee on Finance the other day in regard to the tariffs as affecting Porto Rico, and he is called upon for all kinds of matters of that sort. I think the bureau is quite an exceptional one, and that the President ought not to be restricted in his right to keep one or two officers there, when it may not be possible for him to find just the man for work of such a very special character.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senate amendment is voted down and the language of the bill as it came from the House is thereby restored, it will not affect the Insular Bureau nor will it affect this other exception made in the Senate amendment, because the House text makes an exception, in which it says:

Unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

That is, by some statute outside of this.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator thinks that that covers those two bureaus under those two special acts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. OVERMAN. And makes a general rule without specifying any exception?

Mr. WILLIAMS. And makes a general rule without specifying.

Mr. LODGE. I think that it the better way to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am of the opinion, and I think Senators will agree with me after thinking about it-

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President-

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. There is a general law also outside of the military appropriation bills relating to agricultural and mechanical colleges and military schools in the States to which officers are detailed, and the language of the House bill, "unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law," would cover that, too. I state that because the Senator from Virginia asked a question upon that point. There is a law that covers the Insular Bureau. There is a special law that covers the Ordnance Department. These two acts are referred to here. There are laws that concern the agricultural and mechanical colleges and the detail of officers there to teach military tactics, and there is a law covering certain other details for school purposes in the States. I do not remember it exactly; perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts does. But besides the regular mechanical and agricultural colleges there are other schools in which tactics is taught by detailed officers.

Mr. LODGE. They are assigned to the States themselves for the instruction of the militia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. None of those is affected, because the language which the House used was intended to prevent that, The House merely intended to prevent this detail by favoritism, this detail by orders of superior officers, and it carefully preserves such cases of detail for longer periods as are authorized by law or by some statute.

One other word. The Senator from Wyoming said something that has merit in it, I think, because he says that the man who ought to be punished for a violation of the law is the man who issues the orders and not the man who obeys them. I think myself if the man who issues them lost his pay they would not be issued. When the superior officer knew that he would not issue the order; he would not undertake to violate the law. But if the Senate amendment shall be adopted, I shall then move to restore the House text with this change of language from the House bill. The House text reads:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty, etc.

I shall move afterwards, if my present effort shall fail, that this language shall take the place of the Senate amendment, with this change:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which any other officer by his order shall have been detached, etc.

That will strike the man who gives the order and will strike him right here in Washington where he has given it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator of course has examined this matter, and I suppose he is sure as to the effect of lines 9 and 10. In what I have said I referred simply to the Bureau of Insular Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What page?

Mr. LODGE. Page 7. The Senator said if those two lines, lines 9 and 10, on page 7—

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not mean lines 9 and 10. I ought to have said 4 and 5.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that. The Senator said that those words, "unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law "-

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has a different bill from the one I have. Those words are on lines 4 and 5 in my copy of

Mr. LODGE. Those words cover the Insular Bureau; they are all sufficient.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It reads, "shall have been specifically authorized by law"; and the Senate amendment shows what specific laws cover those two cases.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly. I think it is very important in regard to the Ordnance Department. The Ordnance Department does require experts, and there are only a few officers, comparatively, who are experts in ordnance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that, too, to a limited extent; but I think in those cases it ought not to be carried too far. I think there ought to be more than a few officers qualified for that work

Mr. LODGE.

I quite agree with that. T. The House text will permit the permanent Mr. DU PONT. detail of officers of the Philippine Constabulary. The Senate amendment cuts that off and requires them to be returned to their regiments. You are aware, of course, the detail is with higher rank and pay. In some respects they are very attractive

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to offer an amendment. The Senate committee amendment has been adopted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out the amendment just adopted and to substitute for it the following language.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done at this stage. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole has just agreed to this proposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. It can be done in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be done in the Senate, but not at this stage.

WILLIAMS. I know, but I am offering a different amendment now. I am offering an amendment to the proposi-tion just accepted by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will have to do that in the Senate. Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate committee amendment has just been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has become a part of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I offer an amendment to the Senate committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi can offer the amendment when the bill gets into the Senate, but at this stage the Senate has just said it will accept that exact

Mr. LODGE. It can not be amended at this stage.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry. It has been the practice hitherto, where I have practiced, that you could move a substitute for something, and then, if the substitute failed, you could still move to amend the original proposition, or if an amendment succeeded you could, after its success, move to amend the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The rules of the Senate-and the Chair regrets that he did not fully understand what the Senator from Mississippi had in his mind, or he would have called them to his attention-provide that where the proposition is to strike out and insert, both propositions are amendable prior to putting the motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, when we get into the Senate I will offer the amendment. I want to give notice of it now. The Clerk can take it down. It will be the language of the House bill, except that the word "he," on line 1 of the bill I have, will be stricken out and there will be substituted for it, "any other officer by his order," so that it will read:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any other officer for any period during which any other officer by his order shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

I now give notice of that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

Mr. SWANSON. Before we pass from this item I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the reason for the increase in pay of officers of the line-about nine hundred thousand above what was contained in the House bill?

Mr. LODGE. It has already been explained.

Mr. SWANSON. I was not then in the Chamber, Mr. DU PONT. I do not know that I quite understand the Senator from Virginia. Does he refer to the pay of the enlisted men of the Army?

Mr. SWANSON. To the pay of officers of the line. Mr. DU PONT. I have already explained it in great detail. Mr. SWANSON. If it has been explained, all right. I was out at the time.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 7, line 25, to strike out "fifteen million eight hundred and thirty-two thousand" and insert "sixteen million two hundred and thirty-two thousand nine hundred and fifty-four," and on page 8, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided, That no part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers and enlisted men shall be paid to any officer or enlisted man in active service for any period of time lost by him on account of diseases which are the result of his own intemperate use of drugs or alcoholic liquors or other misconduct,"

and insert:

Provided, That any officer or enlisted man in active service who shall be absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs, or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall not receive pay for the period of such absence from any part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers or enlisted men, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who, having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, shall reenlist in the line of said Army or in the Signal Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so reenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of his reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $6 per month for the second year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act.

So as to make the clause read:

So as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men of all grades, including recruits, $16,232,954:

Provided, That any officer or enlisted man in active service who shall be absent from duty on account of disease resulting from his own intemperate use of drugs, or alcoholic liquors, or other misconduct, shall not receive pay for the period of such absence from any part of the appropriation in this act for the pay of officers or enlisted men, the time so absent and the cause thereof to be ascertained under such procedure and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That in time of war or when war is imminent, and after the President shall, by proclamation, have called upon honorably discharged soldiers of the Regular Army to present themselves for reenlistment therein within a specified period, subject to such conditions as may be prescribed in said proclamation, any person who shall have been discharged honorably from said Army, with character reported as at least good, and who, having been found physically qualified for the duties of a soldier, shall receilist in the line of said Army or in the Signal Corps thereof within the period that shall be specified in said proclamation, shall receive on so recenlisting a bounty which shall be computed at the rate of $8 for each month for the first year of the period that shall have elapsed since his last discharge from the Regular Army and the date of his reenlistment therein under the terms of said proclamation; at the rate of $8 per month for the second year of such period; at the rate of $2 per month for the third year of such period; and at the rate of $2 per month for any subsequent year of such period, but no bounty in excess of $300 shall be paid to any person under the terms of this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. How much will the bounty amount to?

Mr. DU PONT. If the Senator will permit me, I will make an explanation of the entire provision.

Under the legislation now in force our Regular Army is an expansible Army; that is to say, its strength on a peace footing is much less than it would be in time of war. fantry companies, in time of peace, are limited to 68 men instead of 153 men, which would be their strength on a war footing; and troops of Cavalry, in time of peace, are limited to 65 men instead of 100 men on a war footing. As the Regular Army, in passing from peace to war, must be increased by such a large number of enlisted men, it is of the utmost importance that as many of them as possible should be proficient in the military art. To this end various plans have been suggested by the War Department by which a soldier, after serving a certain number of years under the colors, should pass into the reserve and only be called out once or twice for a very brief period, say, 10 days, for the purpose of instruction, and with the understanding, of course, that in case of actual or threatened hostilities he was to rejoin the colors and serve until the expiration of his time.

All these plans are based on the proposition that if a reserve be created monthly or quarterly payments must be made to the reservists. Even if such payments be small, say, $2.50 a month or $30 a year, with a reserve of 30,000 men, we would be paying out $900,000 annually for pay alone, and the expense of mo-bilization for instruction would make the cost over $1,000,000 per annum. In addition to this great yearly expense, which would be chargeable to Army disbursement, there would seem to be other grave objections to the plan. After paying the reservist for three years—or more, if the reserve period be longer than that—he may die or become physically disqualified for military service. Further, if the reservist, for any reason, be disposed to shirk active service, with our vast expanse of territory, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find him and force him to return to the colors,

Under the committee amendment the money which otherwise would be paid monthly or quarterly is paid in a lump sum, provided the discharged soldier actually joins the colors and is found physically fit for service. In other words, instead of paying in advance by the month for service which may not be performed, the amendment provides for paying a corresponding amount in one sum for service which is actually rendered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 9, line 12, to strike out "five" and insert "six," so as to read:

For additional pay for length of service, $1,635,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 13, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be 10 regiments of Cavalry, and no more, in the United States Army, and that the officers who shall be rendered supernumerary by this reduction in the number of Cavalry regiments shall be retained in service, and shall be assigned to vacancies in their respective grades as such vacancies shall occur in the Cavalry, or, in the discretion of the President, to such vacancies in their respective grades as shall occur in any other arm of the service: Provided further, That all officers of Cavalry made surplus by such reduction shall be transferred proportionately to the Infantry, Field Artillery, Coast Artillery, Cavalry, according to their relative commissioned personnel strength; and that the officers so transferred shall take rank in the branch to which transferred according to length of commissioned service: And provided further, That no officer shall be reduced in grade; and the Secretary of War is directed to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—
Mr. WARREN. I do not want any misunderstanding—

Mr. WILLIAMS. That brings us up to the provision in the House bill reducing the Army by five Cavalry regiments. think that will bring on some discussion, and it has been suggested that this would be a good time to adjourn and take it up

Mr. WARREN. I think with the notice which the Senator from Mississippi gave the committee itself of his intention of bringing up this matter for debate, we ought not to consider it now, and probably the best thing to do would be to adjourn now and take it up to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to oppose the Senate amendment to the House bill and support the House proposition reducing the Army by these five regiments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us adjourn.
Mr. DU PONT. I have no objection to the item being passed over for the present.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent to pass over the amendment to strike out, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 13, page 9, and ending with the word "act," in line 6 on page 10.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that it is now half past 5 o'clock. The Senate ought to have some sort of regular hours. We seem to have none. I think it would be a good idea if we should adjourn every day at 5 o'clock, so that gentlemen may have some regular hour at which to eat their dinner

Mr. GALLINGER. If it is agreeable to the Senator from

Mr. GALDINGER. If it is agreeable to the Schuler From Mississippi, I will move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to give notice that I will call up the bill to-morrow immediately after the morning business. Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 11, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Our Father in heaven, whose goodness stands approved, we thank Thee for the Christ spirit which came into the world nineteen hundred years ago, and which is coming more abundantly into the hearts of Thy children everywhere, in spite of the untoward circumstances of life which make for selfishness, the root of all evil. Free us, we beseech Thee, from its thraldom, that day by day we may rise to the sublime heights of the perfected manhood; in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of all Missourians, and hundreds of thousands of Democrats throughout the country, I desire to publicly express our great appreciation of the magnificent indorsement given yesterday to the distinguished Speaker of this House by the splendid Democracy of Illinois. [Applause.] The overwhelming vote given Speaker CLARK in the primaries of Illinois makes him inevitably the nominee of the Democratic party for President of the United States, and he will be triumphantly elected. INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The call rests on the Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill, H. R. 14667, is on the Union Calendar, and is the unfinished business of the House. The House therefore automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foster] will take the

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill. The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14667) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depreda-tions," approved March 3, 1891.

the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891.

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of paragraph 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"First. All claims for property of citizens or inhabitants of the United States, except the claims of Indians herefore or now in tribal relations, taken or destroyed by Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for, and in all adjudications under said act as now amended the allonage of the claimant shall not be a defense to said claims: Provided, That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian territory: Procided further, That all cases heretofore filed under said act of March 3, 1891, and which have been dismissed by the court for want of proof of the citizenship of the claimant, shall be reinstated and readjudicated in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the presentation of any other claims than those upon which suit has heretofore been brought in the Court of Claims: Provided further, That all acts and parts of acts. In so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been on the Union

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been on the Union Calendar some time, and I think it is fair to say that the Committee on Indian Affairs is under considerable obligation to the chairman for leaving this bill in the background until less important bills could be disposed of. This bill has been before the House on numerous occasions, unanimously reported by the committee. It was at this time again unanimously reported. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] reported this bill during the last Congress, and he made a report which shows an exhaustive study and plenty of ability, both in the report and in the presentation of the matter.

This bill excludes all new cases; only applies to cases now pending.

This bill only applies to cases where the Indians committing the depredations are in amity with the United States.

The best estimate is that it only will incur a possible liability of $500,000. Of course, it may be much less.

This bill would involve a very large sum if the amity clause were out, but the committee omitted it purposely, and will, I think, keep it out purposely.

The first act on the subject was in 1799, and aside from a short period subsequent to 1859.

These people have suffered at the hands of the Federal Government wards, and by a series of precedents covering 113 years the Federal Government should pay the damages and depreda-tions of its wards. I think the bill ought to pass.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, as stated by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris], this is not a subject which is new to the membership of the House. This is one phase of legislation that has been on the statute books in one form or another for more than a century. I have no desire to go into an exhaustive statement of the history of the legislation nor of the various statutes that have been passed, but a word showing the leading characteristics of the legislation may not be out of First, Mr. Chairman, let me state that the present bill is one uncomplicated by what might be termed extraneous features: There have been introduced in the last session of Congress a large number of bills proposing to change the law which now controls in the matter of Indian depredations. Nearly all of these provided for four changes in the law, some of them providing for two, and this one, Mr. Chairman, which has finally been reported, provides for but one. Briefly, what are those four changes? First, there has always been a restriction in the matter of recovery in Indian depredations to cases where the acts were committed by Indians who were at enmity with the United States, and one of the features of the bills that have been introduced is to remove amity requirement. This bill did not incorporate that feature, and I will say, Mr. Chairman, in passing, that that is a feature which, if incorporated, would cost the Government of the United States a large sum of money. Another feature that some of these bills has sought to change is the requirement of a proper joinder of parties plaintiff. Under the rules and regulations adopted by the Court of Claims, before which tribunal these cases are all tried, it has been necessary there shall be a complete joinder of parties plaintiff at the inception of the suit. That is, if the case had developed to a certain degree and it was found certain parties had not been joined who, if joined, would be able to recover in the action, there has been no way by which they could be joined and participate in judgment.

Some of the bills have provided for correcting this and provided for the admission of new parties plaintiff. We have omitted that from the bill as reported. Another feature that has grown up in the handling of these cases before the Court of Claims is a requirement that there should be stated in the action, properly named, the Indian tribes to which belonged the band or individuals who committed the depredation. To illustrate, if the party bringing the action alleged that the Indians who committed the depredation—who broke into the pasture, for instance, and ran off the stock-was a Sioux Indian, when, as a matter of fact, he was an Arapaho or Comanche, as proven subsequently by the evidence, his cause of action failed. Some of the bills propose this to be changed and cor-We have omitted that from the bill as presented.

The other provision in the bills that have been introduced bearing upon this question contemplates a change in the existing law so as to permit an inhabitant to recover as well as a citizen. What do we mean by that? We mean that under the law as it now exists, and has existed since 1801, in order for a claimant to recover he must have been a citizen of the United States at the time of the commission of the depredation. is presented to the House for consideration at this time changes the existing law only in that it extends to inhabitants the right to recover, instead of having it restricted to citizens.

A word, therefore, of the history of this legislation, to show why we deem it advisable to bring in this change at this time. The first law passed by Congress bearing upon Indian depredations was that of 1796. The opening paragraph of that law was as follows:

That if any Indian or Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States shall come over or across the said boundary line into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that the original law passed by Congress with respect to Indian depredations provided that recovery could be had by an inhabitant as well as by a citizen.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman give the date of that act?

Mr. MILLER. The date of that act was 1796. It was reenacted in the same language and the same terms in 1799.

Mr. Chairman, the subject was later up before Congress for further legislation, and the same provision was reenacted in 1802. It was again up for consideration and reenacted once more in 1834. Therefore four specific acts of Congress, over a period of about half a century, placed upon the statute book the right of recovery by an inhabitant as well as a citizen.

Again, the Revised Statutes of 1878 contained this provision, as far as an inhabitant is concerned, identical in effect with the language of the bill now pending. A change was made, however, in 1885. An entire act was not then put upon the statute books, but a resolution providing for an investigation of Indian depredation cases limited the investigation to cases wherein the claimants were citizens.

When the subject was up for complete legislation in 1891, this part of the law contained in the earlier statutes was changed so that recovery could be had only by citizens of the United States.

There has been no legislation upon the subject since that time. It must become apparent to anyone, even from this very hasty summary of the legislation, that the attitude of Congress dur-ing nearly all of the period covered by these laws has been that not alone the citizen should recover, but that the right in that respect should be extended to the inhabitant as well. Now, why? In the first place, nearly all of these depredations have been committed upon the frontier. We do not find Indians on the warpath or breaking away from amicable relations in ones and twos and threes, and committing depredations upon organized society in old settled communities, because the Indians are not there and because those regions are properly policed and protected by the Government, so that they could not do it if they tried. These depredations have been among the pioneers of the West, and particularly the Southwest, where opportunities seem to have been presented for this class of marauding.

Mind you, this law does not provide that there shall be recovery for losses sustained due to acts of Indians on the war-There never has been recovery for that class of depredation, and this law does not contemplate it. It means that where the wards of the Government, who in this case are the Indians, under the care of the Government, and for whose acts the Government is and must be held accountable, where these people in amicable relations with the United States shall break out and commit acts of depredation upon peaceable citizens, steal their horses, steal their cattle, burn their barns, and destroy their property, that then the Government must make restitution for the loss sustained.

The class of people affected, as before stated, have always been pioneers.

Now, why is there a peculiar hardship resulting to this class of people by restricting the right of recovery to citizens? In the first place, the time has never been when many of the pioneers and settlers in the great West were not of foreign birth, and at the time of their first settlement have not been citizens of the United States

Our laws have hitherto, until recently, permitted foreigners to come in, declare their intention to become citizens, and settle on the frontiers and get homesteads. That policy has been beneficial in great, far-reaching results. Now, these individuals who are of that character, who sustained injury, certainly ought to have as great and full a right to recover as citizens of the United States. Many of these cases are such that the depredations were sustained by men who were then not citizens but subsequently became citizens. In many cases, also, the individuals thought they were citizens, but as a matter of fact they were not citizens at the time.

The report shows that one man reached some distinction among his people, and he must have reached considerable dis-tinction, because he was selected and elected a Delegate to this body from the Territory of Arizona, but found himself in a position where he could not prove appropriate citizenship to recover under this act.

The records are somewhat full of cases where individuals thought that a person was a citizen, a person who had always assumed to act as a citizen and performed citizenship duties in the community, had served in the Army or in the Navy with distinction and with heroism, yet when brought to the crucial test of proving citizenship in this court found he was unable to do so.

One thing further. In many of these cases, being cases that arose on the frontier, opportunities for acquiring citizenship were extremely limited. The country was but sparsely settled, courts were in session only at uncertain times and at distant points, and it is not to be wondered at that a large number of frontiersmen let years and years go by before they acquired full rights of citizenship. If they sustained an injury before this right was ultimately secured, they certainly ought to have a right to recover therefor by all the considerations that ought to be extended in cases of honest justice.

One other consideration that has always been somewhat strong in my mind, Mr. Chairman, is that the time was when each nation looked upon all persons coming to it from another nation as foreigners and of a hostile disposition. We are all acquainted with the fact that many generations past when a citizen of one country who went into another country was looked upon and treated as a public enemy; but closer and better relations have come to be the fashion to-day, and we look upon no nation as civilized that does not extend to citizens of other civilized nations practically full rights of property and practically the same protection that is extended to its own citizens.

Now, this is a discrimination in the law that is barbaric in its terms, not to use a stronger expression. It is out of harmony with the spirit of the times. The cases are not very numerous which it would cover, but the mere fact that it is there indicates that we have not legislated in the spirit of modern civilization and progress.

We ought to extend to the citizens of Great Britain, to the citizens of Germany, to the citizens of Norway and Sweden, the same protection that we give to our own in a case of this kind.

Some query may naturally be raised as to the extent of the claims that now exist and will be affected by this change in the act. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that the committee has considered this matter very carefully over several years, had hearings of a public nature, had a full expression from the Department of Justice in respect to the matter, and the gentleman who is in charge of this class of cases in the Attorney General's office informs us that he is now in a position to tell with considerable accuracy, almost to a reasonable certainty, the number of claims and the amount of money that they will carry and that will be affected by this change in the law. He says not to exceed $500,000 will be affected. Mind you, this change does not permit the bringing of any new suits. We make no change in that part of the law; no suit can now be brought that was not started under the terms of the act of 1891, which gave a reasonable period in which to bring suit. We are not opening up the fields for fresh exploitation. We are not enlarging opportunities for bringing cases against the United States. We are simply giving to a class of claimants now in the court in litigation the right to be protected as well as other citizens, who are likewise bringing their cases also for the same class of injuries. So, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the amount affected is not large, the number of cases is not numerous, and that the proposed change is right.

It is in harmony with the treatment accorded citizens of one nation by another nation. It is recognizing that those who have been injured by this particular provision of the law are undoubtedly among the most worthy claimants of them all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How much will be involved if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. MILLER. Not to exceed $500,000.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have been reading the report, and I gathered the impression from the report made by the Attorney General, Mr. Knox, I believe at that time, that it would involve possibly $8,000,000.

Mr. MILLER. That would be true if we changed the law in respect to all of the four ways that I discussed some time ago.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understood from his statement that that would be true, provided Congress eliminated the necessity of showing amity on the part of the tribe to which the Indians committing the depredations belonged. I will ask if this bill under its terms does not eliminate that necessity?

Mr. MILLER. Of amity? Oh, no. The bill distinctly includes the requirement that the Indian committing the depredation shall have been in amity with the United States.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Why are these words added to the bill; "And subject to the jurisdiction of the United States"? That is an entirely new provision, and, if I understand the statement made in the hearings by Mr. Thompson, an Assistant United States Attorney General, those words would have the effect of eliminating the necessity of showing amity.

Mr. MILLER. On the contrary, that is a further restriction. The Indian must not only have been in amity, but he must also have been under the jurisdiction of the United States. For instance, if an Indian who was not under the jurisdiction of the United States was here and committed a depredation the United States would not be liable. This is a further restriction upon that same matter.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me just a moment, I find here—not a statement, but a letter submitted by Mr. Knox, at that time Attorney General, dated March 10, 1902—the following:

The bill under consideration eliminates the defense based upon the want of amily between the United States and the tribe whose members are charged with the depredation by substituting for the words "in amity with the United States" the words "subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that the gentleman makes the inquiry, because it is appropriate. I will say, however, that the letter of the Attorney General is not addressed to this bill, but was addressed to a bill which was before him at that time, which did remove the amity clause.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand that perfectly well, but the letter of the Attorney General refers to the very words that are used in this bill, and states, if I read it correctly, that the use of those words will eliminate the necessity of showing amity on the part of the Indian. That was what I wanted the gentleman to explain.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think those words have ever been in any bill directly before the Attorney General in this connection. They may have been in some other paragraph. But this is certainly a further restriction upon the right of recovery. It is not an enlargement, but a restriction. The Indian must not only be in amity with the United States, but must be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States and ward of the Government.

Respecting the amity feature, it having been suggested, if I may be permitted to say further, one of the most careful estimates, if legislated upon in the way proposed, is that it would probably cost the Government four or five millions of dollars.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, is it not true that this bill proposes to eliminate citizenship as a necessary condition?

Mr. MILLER. That is all it does. It absolutely changes the law in no respect excepting to enlarge the right of recovery to inhabitants as well as citizens. That will affect a few cases now pending in the Court of Claims, which cases the Attorney General's department think ought to be given this relief, and which it seems to me in common sense ought to be given relief.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The existing law bars men who now and for many years have been citizens, but who were not citizens when the depredations were committed and who have been therefore unable to collect.

Mr. MILLER. That is precisely true.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They have been, therefore, discriminated against.

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The proviso in the bill reads:

That the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property at the time of its taking was unlawfully within the Indian Territory.

I believe it has always been provided in any bill that authorized claims that the authorization should not extend to persons who were unlawfully within the Indian country. notice this proviso leaves that out and makes a provision that the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person whose property was unlawfully within the Indian Territory.

Mr. MILLER. I think that the word "territory" should be changed to the word "country."

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think also if the person was unlawfully within the Indian country he should be deprived of any claim?

Mr. MILLER. There could be no injury to his property hardly unless the individual was unlawfully within the country.

Mr. MANN. But the individual might have been unlawfully within the country, the property might have been lawfully within the country or somewhere else. I ask whether this is inserted by design or whether it is possibly careless phraseology

Mr. MILLER. I do not think there is anything particular in that phraseology one way or the other. I do not see there is any hardship to the Government resulting from it, or any reason why the language as used here is not in the interest of economy and justice. The right to recover is for injury to property and not to persons, and by requiring that the property shall not be unlawfully within the Indian country we exclude more cases than if we substitute persons for property. essential thing is that the injury is to the property and not the person; therefore it is proper to say the property should not be unlawfully within the Indian country.

Mr. MANN. Suppose the person is unlawfully within the Indian territory. Does the gentleman think a person ought to have a claim then?

Mr. MILLER. No; I do not, and I am inclined to think, while I have not the facts, that this is a greater restriction than the other language by far, because the injury is not to the person, but to the property.

Mr. MANN. It would not be a greater restriction if you make it read this way, that the privileges of this act shall not extend to any person who, or whose property at the time of its taking, was unlawfully within the Indian territory.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MILLER. I do.
Mr. FERRIS. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that I do not know that his amendment would hurt anybody; but can he cite a case where it will do any good? For example, under what condition would a man be in the Indian territory unlawfully? A man has always had the right to come and go as he desired, to come and go in the Indian territory, and that is not true with reference to his property; for example

Mr. MANN. Nor is it true in reference to the individual, as I can show the gentleman later.

Mr. FERRIS. When was it otherwise?

Mr. MANN. Always. Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make the same suggestion which the gentleman from Illinois made, that all the time it has been a felony for a foreigner to be in the Indian

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; that is a gross misstatement of fact, and I will tell the gentleman why it is.

Mr. JACKSON. I will be glad to know.
Mr. MILLER, Under the original act of 1796 specifying the part of the United States that should thereafter be considered Indian territory, and the part that should thereafter be considered white territory, it was a criminal offense without a passport to go into the Indian country, and that same legislation has occurred in some instances later, but outside of these the gentleman's statement is not correct.

Mr. JACKSON. That same provision was carried in the act

Mr. MILLER. Absolutely; in respect to the Indian territory as a whole, and the gentleman ought to know it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?
Mr. MILLER. Certainly.
Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the meaning, precisely, of those two words "Indian territory"?

Mr. MILLER. Well, I am not in a position where I can speak as to the word "territory"; I think myself that word should be "country," because country has derived a meaning by frequently being used in statutes, and the meaning I think It should have where the statute does not prescribe the area is the country "occupied and inhabited by the Indians."

Mr. SLAYDEN. But does it mean, or has it ever been held to mean, any definite reservation exclusively recognized as being the residence and property of the Indians?

Mr. MILLER. I think it has always been held to mean a country that the Indians had a right to occupy.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now permit one more question, please. Mr. MILLER. I will elucidate that a little further. I have just been furnished by the gentleman from South Dakota

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is one other question I would like to ask the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER (continuing). With a statute, a very old one, which defines somewhat the Indian country. It does not pretend to define Indian country for all purposes in the United States, but defines it for one purpose. It is as follows:

That all that part of the United States west of the Mississippi, and not within the States of Missouri and Louislana, or the Territory of Arkansas, and also that part of the United States east of the Mississippi River, and not within any State to which the Indian title has not been extinguished, for the purpose of this act, be taken and deemed to be in the Indian country.

That relates to the liquor law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, one other question. Depredations have been committed by Indians in amity with the United States on people who were not citizens at the time. They were not living in any Indian country in the sense that they were within the reservation that was held by law or executive order or other order to be the peculiar country of the Indian. They were, for example, living in the State of Texas, in established counties and subdivisions of the State of Texas. The Indians raided that country; they came in from long distances, often from the Indian Territory, and they murdered people and stole cattle and horses, and committed depredations in the meaning of the words used in this and in prior acts. Now, those people would not be held, could not possibly, I fancy, be held to have been in the Indian Territory or the Indian country. There never was any Indian country in the State of Texas where most of these depredations occurred. There never was an Indian reservation in the State of Texas. The raiding Indians came from an Indian country into strictly white country.

Mr. MANN. This would allow those claims.

Mr. MILLER. This refers to that class of cases, and would include all who come within it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Indian Territory, as the gentleman knows, has a peculiar meaning in the Southwest. When we use the phrase "Indian Territory" down there we mean, or did before the creation of the State, that division of the country known as Oklahoma. All doubt as to the meaning of those words should be removed if this bill is to pass.

Mr. MANN. There is not any doubt as to what the words Indian country" mean.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It says "Indian Territory." Mr. MANN. The words "Indian Territory" are inserted here accidentally, so far as the committee is concerned, undoubtedly.

Mr. MILLER. I think seriously, however, that this is in the nature of a restriction rather than an enlargement in view of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. For instance, if a man should be passing through an Indian territory, and by "territory" I do mean an Indian country that is exclusively within the control of the Indians, he would be unlawfully in the Indian country. His property might be 500 miles away in a peaceful white region, and the Indians might raid and destroy his property. If we restrict the right to recover to persons lawfully on the ground at the time when the property was destroyed, he could not recover, although the purpose of the act is to recover for injury to property and not to persons.
Mr. MANN.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gives a case that probably has never happened. I will give the gentleman a case that did happen, of when a white man went into the Indian country for the purpose of revenge, and while he was there his property was destroyed, he having stirred up the trouble. Why should he have a claim against the Government?

Mr. MILLER. I never heard of such a case. Is the gentleman aware of such? I am positive if there was such a case the Attorney General of the United States, who has been working on the matter for years, would have called it to the attention of the committee.

Mr. MANN. I am not aware of the particular case, but I will say that I have been informed by men who are aware that just such cases are pending.

Mr. MILLER. I am frank to say that I have no information to that effect, except, I will say, that in his statement the Attorney General has given us no such case as mentioned. Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.
Mr. SISSON. I have been unable to get a report until a few minutes ago. They seem to have been exhausted. Some question has been raised as to the amount that is carried in the bill. I notice this language on page 13:

Taking this $8,500,000 upon the same basis of 40 per cent, it would leave the amount that would probably go to judgment at $3,400,000. That is the most careful estimate we can make of it, and there is no reason I can see for thinking that the percentage would not keep up.

Now, is that the amount that would be carried in this bill? Mr. MILLER. No, Mr. Chairman; that is the amount that would be carried in a bill that removed the amity clause. The Assistant Attorney General is speaking of a bill that would include the amity clause.

Mr. SISSON. We ought to be able to arrive at an absolute certainty as to what the bill would cost if nothing but cases pending are to be included in this bill.

Mr. MILLER. That is true.

Mr. SISSON. Can the gentleman tell exactly what it would

Mr. MILLER. Approximately $500,000; not to exceed that amount. That is a statement of the Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. SISSON. Is there a list of the claims here? Mr. MILLER. Not a list of the claims. There is the statement by Mr. Thompson, which I inserted at the last Congress, which stated that he was able for the first time to give a reasonable and approximately precise statement of the amount involved by the citizenship clause.

Mr. SISSON. It does not necessarily mean that each claimant be allowed for that amount, because the recovery might be less than the amount claimed. But does he mean to state the amount claimed will not exceed $500,000?

Mr. MILLER. He means that, having gone through the cases from A to Z, as he says, and gotten an accurate estimate of what the conditions are and what the testimony is, the amount will not be more than $500,000, although the aggregate as claimed is considerably in excess of that.

Mr. SISSON. If he is mistaken in his prophecy about what the court might do it might turn out that the court might exceed it very much. There is no absolute certainty upon that statement of what the bill will finally cost when enacted.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman that all who have spoken on both sides of this question seem to be of the opinion that $500,000 is the extreme outside amount, and that we can safely act on that assumption.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Suppose the court has found that $550,000 or $650,000 or $750,000 was honestly due the claimants and was a just debt. Should it not be paid just as well as $300,000?

Mr. SISSON. Of course, all just debts on the part of the Federal Government ought to be paid to a penny. Nobody wants us to repudiate them. But I do not think, when by act of Congress we assume obligations

Mr. SLAYDEN. We are not assuming obligations.

Mr. SISSON. We are; because the court here has specifically decided that the claimants were not entitled to anything. This act is endeavoring to create an obligation which the court said did not rest upon the Government. We are giving a right here, because in the past the acts of the public enemy have never been guarded and protected by the Federal Government. Simply because Indians are at war with citizens in the States, it does not follow, unless the Government is willing to assume such an obligation, that those citizens have a pecuniary or moral right of recovery against the Government. A man assumes some risk when he moves out into the Indian country. A man assumes some risk when he goes into every business. The Government is not an insurance company. Under the old act no obligation was created by that act. Congress is now creating an obligation that the court says did not formerly exist.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Suppose a man did not move into the Indian country, but is in his own country and is entitled to protection by the Government, and the Indians come in there and murder his family and take away his cattle?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think the Government ought to pay for it. Suppose, for instance, this very night down in my home, in my State, my house should be burned down and my wife and babies should be killed—the Government should not be required to pay for it. The Federal Government is not an insurance company. Originally, I might not have been opposed to the legislation when the act was first passed creating the obligation, but now you are enlarging it. This I say, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slay-DEN], and not for the purpose of getting into a colloquy with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. This is in answer to the gentleman from Texas. Can the gentleman state, with any degree of certainty, what obligation the Government is assuming?

Mr. MILLER. I can state that with that degree of certainty. These cases have been pending there for many years, and the Assistant Attorney General has gone through them carefully and knows approximately what the amount will be and practically what the estimate of the damage will be.

Mr. SISSON. This practically means, then, that Congress is appropriating that money which the evidence shows under the old cases is due?

Mr. MILLER. No; I will not say that.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. MANN. Is not this the fact, that Mr. Thompson, the Assistant Attorney General, figured out the proportion of claims which have been allowed as compared with the amounts claimed in the cases that had been disposed of, and then took the same proportion with reference to these others in arriving at the amount of $500,000?

Mr. MILLER. He pursued that method, but not that method alone. He pursued that method and arrived at the result, and found that that was in harmony with the investigation of the cases I have indicated.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that he made no special investigation of the cases.

Mr. MILLER. I have talked with Mr. Thompson a number of times about these cases, and-

Mr. MANN. So have I. Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman said, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that no such cases were included here.

Mr. MILLER. My reply was that no such cases are now pending. This does not extend the right of recovery to cases not now pending.

Mr. JACKSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I have here the general statute carrying the provision of law of which the gentleman spoke, concerning foreigners going in the Indian territory. It seems it was carried on as late as 1834. Now will the gentleman give us again what his interpretation is as to what constituted Indian territory, say in 1859 or 1860?

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman mean Indian territory or Indian country?

Mr. JACKSON. That country to which this statute would apply, which made it a misdemeanor for a foreigner to go in there without a passport. Mr. MILLER. That mi That misdemeanor feature did not enter except in a few particularly expressed cases in the statute. As I stated before, the first expression was in the law of 1796, and as late as 1859. I do not think there was any other such law.

Mr. JACKSON. I call the gentleman's attention to that Every foreigner who shall go into the Indian country without a passport from the Department of the Interior, superintendent, agent, or subagent of Indian affairs, or officer of the United States commanding the nearest military post on the frontiers, or who shall remain intentionally therein after the expiration of such passport, shall be liable to a peralty of $1,000. Every such passport shall express the object of such person, the time he is allowed to remain, and the route he is to travel.

Now, what was the Indian country at the time these Indian claims were sought to be recovered?

Mr. MILLER. There must be something in connection with that act specially naming that which is Indian country, because that did not obtain generally throughout the United States. The act of 1796 did specify what was Indian country and what was not. It described a line which passed about through the middle of the State of Tennessee. The land west of that was Indian country and that east of it was white country. I am sure that in various treaties which we have made with individual tribes in years since then we have guaranteed to the Indians that there will not be trespassing upon their lands by white people excepting when duly authorized by passports. But that did not extend generally through the Indian country.

Mr. JACKSON. There was a general trading act with the Indians, regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors and everything of that kind. The words "Indian country" must mean reservations or other territory set aside by the Government for the exclusive occupation of the Indians.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say a word in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson]. I do not think he was in the Chamber when I first began to talk upon this subject. If he had been, he would have heard me say that this does not propose to give a brand-new right to anybody. It is the restoration of a right which had been given to the same people by four successive acts of Congress, extending over a period of almost three-quarters of a century, and taken from them by a subsequent act of Congress. It is the opinion of the Committee on Indian Affairs that that restriction in the later statute was unwarranted and extremely unjust.

It might be that I would join with the gentleman in opposition to legislation of this kind in its inception; and if we had before us now a proposition as to whether or not we would pay a dollar for depredations committed by Indians, I do not know but I might be opposed to it. But that is not the case we have confronting us. The policy of this Government to pay for Indian depredations has been in existence, with one exception, a period of 11 years in which it did not exist, for more than a century, and during the greater part of that time, and particularly the first half of the time, the right to recover was extended to the inhabitants as well as to the citizens. This right to recover is not given in cases where the public enemy has committed the depredation, as gentlemen seem to assume. not extend to cases of depredations by Indians on the warpath, by Indians in open insurrection against the Government of the United States, by Indians in open rebellion, or by Indians participating in a great conflict such as the War of 1812, the Mexican War, or the War of 1861. It restricts its operations to that class of Indians who are the wards of the Government, who are on friendly terms with the Government, who are the objects of the care and solicitude of the Government; and the Government has the right and the power to protect them, and also to restrain them. The right to recover is analogous to the principle of the old English law which existed for a long period of time, making the father responsible in damages for the torts of his son. It is precisely the same principle of law. I am not saying that it is a good principle of law. I am saying we have had it for more than a century, and I am saying that this restriction eliminates the most worthy class of those who would be benefited by any act of this kind; that it prevents recovery by individuals who, of all those who have ever been affected, ought to have restitution made.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that it has been the policy of the Government for more than a hundred years, with the exception of 11 years, for the Government to be responsible for Indian depredations. That is not my understanding, and I ask the gentleman, if I may, what 11 years he refers to

Mr. MILLER. It was from 1850 to 1870, as I recall it. It may have been a little longer than that.

What act was passed in 1870?

It is possible it was the act of 1885.

Mr. MANN.
Mr. MILLER. It is possine...
MANN. Was it not 1891? Mr. MILLER. Oh, no; there is the act of 1885, because the right of an inhabitant to recover was stricken out in 1885.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that there was no claim recognized by the Government for Indian depredations after the law of 1859, to be paid out of the Federal Treasury, until the act of 1891, which provided that claims might be filed with the Court of Claims?

Mr. MILLER. I am sure that is not the case. I am positive that there was an act of 1885; and, without being able to cite the statute, my recollection is that recovery by inhabitants who are not citizens was only prohibited between 1859 and 1870.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said 11 years, and I thought the gentleman had the statute. I am quite sure the gentleman is mistaken, and that there never has been any provision, except the act of 1891, since the repeal of the act of 1859.

Mr. MILLER. I am positive that it was in the Revised Statutes of 1878 for I read it myself.

Ir. MANN. Very likely; to be paid out of the Indian money and not out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MULLER. I will say that this act originally contemplated that the Federal Treasury would be reimbursed, but, of course, it has not been.

Mr. MANN. Not that it would be, but that it might be. After the act of 1891 the Federal Treasury disclaimed responsibility. Mr. MILLER. The only period was between 1859 and 1870, when the right of recovery did not exist.

Mr. MANN. I am not saying that the gentleman is mistaken, but if he is not it is my fault, for I have investigated all of the statutes commencing with 1802 and before that on this subject.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the statement by Mr. Thompson, attorney for the Government before the Committee on Indian Affairs, as bearing right on the point discussed by the gentleman from Illinois. It is found on page 12 of the report. He says:

It might be interesting to the committee to know—if they do not already know it—that in 1859 the United States passed an act providing that from that time on they should not be liable for Indian depredations, and from 1859 down until the act of March 3, 1891, was passed there was no liability on the part of the Government for any Indian depredations, because it was specifically provided that they should not be liable.

Mr. MILLER. That is undoubtedly in the hearings, but I am positive that the statute of 1878 contains the act, and that in 1885 the word "inhabitants" was included for the first time.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that the act of 1878 applied to Indian funds and provided that the money should be paid out of the Indian funds and not out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MILLER. Perhaps that is true; but still it was a right of recovery from some source, recognizing the right of recovery in actions of this character.

Mr. Chairman, just one word in conclusion. I think the Department of Justice recognizes that with this one amendment, if passed, there will be a speedy closing up of the entire Indian depredation question and that Congress will not hereafter be importuned to change the law in respect to these other They have certainly importuned Congress during recent years to exclude the amity provision and the joinder of plaintiffs and defendants, but we have thrown that all out, and, as a result, concluded that there should be a change in this one respect and only one, and if that is made we can reasonably expect that this matter will soon be closed up.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think the statements made by Assistant Attorney General Thompson are probably correct, and the acts of 1878 and 1885——
Mr. MANN. Which I have here.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota (continuing). Provided that any person who suffered any damage committed by the Indians could file a claim, and that the act of 1891 which reenacted the old law which was repealed in 1859 limited suits to cases where the claim has been filed within the time limited provided in the act of 1885.

Mr. JACKSON. That is correct, substantially. He filed the claim with the Indian agent, and if the tribe did not pay it he could take such other action as he desired.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Suits were brought, and because the claimants were unable to show citizenship, and this bill proposes to reinstate those suits only, and does not give any-body the right to bring a suit who did not file his claim within the provisions of the act of 1885, if that is the act.
Mr. MHLLER. That is absolutely true.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MILLER. I will.

Mr. CANNON. It seems from memoranda that I have here, which, I presume, is correct, that the estimate, if this bill becomes a law as you propose to amend it, subjects the Federal Treasury to the payment of about half a million dollars; that is, it amends the law by inserting the word "inhabitant" instead of the word "citizen." The gentleman, I presume, is aware that the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Fifty-eighth Congress, there being a majority and a minority report, proposed to change the law touching amity, and also in other particulars, and that if the law was changed touching amity it would subject, as near as could be estimated, the Government to the payment in round numbers of $5,000,000. There was also legislation proposed striking out the words "band" and "nation," which would give a lot of cases that had been adjudicated new status in the Court of Claims.

Now, considering the many thousands of claims that are pending in the Court of Claims which have been adjudicated, that have been defeated under the law of 1891, which was a very liberal law, subjecting the Government to obligations that it was not subject to prior to the enactment of that law, and after the long line of litigation that elapsed in the years from 1891 to 1912, does not the gentleman think that this is merely the camel's nose, this $500,000, and that this bill, if it should be passed and one bar let down, would be, as I say, merely the camel's nose? Now, without criticizing the Senate, speaking of that great body, a smaller body than ours, and not referring to anything that has been done so as to bring me outside the rule, I want to say that if matters of legislation of this kind get into that body by our passing this bill, it will come back here with amendments which would take several Philadelphia lawyers some time to discuss and understand.

The Senate has no rules, and it is always submitted to a majority vote as to whether or not a proposition is in order upon an appropriation bill; and in the closing days of the session, perchance, this bill may come back to us fastened upon an Indian appropriation bill, a complete throwing down of all the bars; and under the leadership of a swarm of attorneys, whose habitat is Washington and who presumably have contingent in this large number of claims, are we not liable to take on this burden for the benefit of this swarm of attorneys who represent these ancient claims, which were nothing but claims until 1891, and in the end may not the Treasury be sacrificed for their benefit? I do not know one of them, but I do know that they swarm here in Washington about the department and about Congress as thick as blackberries about an old country schoolhouse, which was pretty thick out on the Wabash years ago. In view of what I have stated, which I believe to be the fact, does not the gentleman think it would be wisdom on the part of the House not to even insert the camel's nose? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more in which to answer the gentleman's query, for I believe he desires it to be answered.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am speaking in the best of good faith.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. I will now yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Why not let him extend his time? I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 10 minutes more.

Mr. CANNON. Why not let the gentleman go on until he concludes, because this is a wonderfully interesting series of questions, and I ask that the gentleman may have such portion of an hour as he may desire to occupy.

The CHAIRMAN. There is already one request for unanimous consent pending. The Chair will put the first request. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] have 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I shall amend that by asking unanimous consent that he have 30 minutes. I do this because of my great respect for the gentleman from Minnesota and his real ability, because if he can enlighten me I want to be en-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAN-NON] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] be given 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to occupy any great portion of 30 minutes unless other questions may be propounded that I may be able to answer. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] has pertinently inquired respecting the possibility of an enlargement of this bill, if we pass it, before it becomes a law. Mr. Chairman, the Indian Committee of this House will probably furnish conferees if amendments are made in another body to this bill, and as one member of that committee who will certainly not be one of the conferees, I still feel myself justified in saying that if this bill should be returned with any amendment enlarging it in any respect it would not receive the support of the House conferees or of any member of the Indian Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly. Mr. MADDEN. Is there anything in the bill or in the report indicating how much money is involved in it?

Mr. MILLER. Five hundred thousand dollars.
Mr. MADDEN. Not to exceed that?
Mr. MILLER. Yes. It has also been suggested by the gentleman in very earnest language, and I know he has thought of this subject for many years, because it has been up for consideration for many years, that if we let down the bars, as it were, create an opening perhaps 6 inches wide, the camel's nose will be poked through, and the first thing we know somebody will give that camel such a shove from the rear that the whole animal will burst clean through the fence. I will say in answer to that that if this legislation is right we ought to enact it, no matter what somebody else, in our judgment, might do in the way of wrongful conduct. The specific act for us to perform here is to pass this bill or not, as it stands, and upon its merits, not that we should be intimidated, not that we should hesitate because some other body may change it in such a way as to us looks dangerous. The amount involved here, as has been so many times stated, is about half a million. The Committee on Indian Affairs proposes to stop there. The Committee on Indian Affairs-and I am quite sure they will be supported by the membership of the House-would resist to the last ditch any attempt by any body or any individual to extend the provisions of this law one inch further, to make the opening in the fence one inch larger. It is true, as the gentleman has stated, that residing within the city of Washington, this beau-tiful Capital of the Nation, there are many lawyers prosecuting claims against the Government. Many of them are occupied in Indian claims against the Government. Some of them are occupied, no doubt, in the prosecution of these depredation claims.

I have no more feeling or regard for them than has the gentleman from Illinois. I have no more desire to assist them in the prosecution of their work than has he or any other Member of the House. I deprecate exceedingly that we have this situation and this condition, and as for myself I have done what I could in the last two years or so to restrict and curb the activities of these individuals in order that rightful cases might receive proper treatment at the hands of Congess unhampered by the fact that some attorneys might be interested in the result. It perhaps is true that these cases are and will be prosecuted in the Court of Claims by attorneys. I do not know any circumstances associated with their employment, but it is not a matter that concerns us, Mr. Chairman. If this is a rightful change in the law designed and calculated to benefit a deserving class of individuals, then it ought to be made. how much do they range in amount?

If it is not a proper relief to give to proper individuals, then it ought not to be made. A client with a good cause ought not to be driven out of court because he has a bad lawyer. That is all I care to say.

Mr. NYE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desires to ask me a question.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman awhile ago stated there were only 11 years when persons did not have the right to claim for Indian depredations. He subsequently brought his statement to 1859 and the Revised Statutes of 1878, which does not cover the case at all, and then to the act of 1885, which is cited in the report, and, I will say to the gentleman, I hold it in my hand. Now, it does not provide for the payment of Indian claims at all in any way, shape, or manner, but provides for an investigation of certain Indian depredation claims of citizens-

With a reference to the date and cause creating an obligation for payment to be made.

And in connection with that report from the Secretary-

What funds now existing or to be derived by reason of treaty or other obligation out of which the same could be paid.

And hence this bill did not recognize any liability of the Federal Treasury for the payment of the claims.

Mr. MILLER. I never so stated. The right to recovery either from the Indian treasury or from the Government Treasury, and it is contemplated that would be reimbursable, as I have stated time and time again.

Mr. MANN. Then, the gentleman's reference to the 11 years was wrong, because the law has been for more than a century that you could recover for Indian depredations, to be paid out of the funds of the Indians where they were at fault. Leaving out the II years and except payable out of the Indians' funds, there was no provision for the payment of any Indian depredations from 1859 until we passed the claims act in 1891, unless I am mistaken, and if I am I would be very glad to have the gentleman correct me the gentleman correct me.

Mr. MILLER. As I stated before, I am not absolutely certain about those dates. There was a period when those claims were not collected from the Government.

Mr. MANN. Fifty-nine to ninety-one.
Mr. MILLER. From 1859 to 1870; it may have been a longer period, but I also say and reiterate that the statute of 1878 contained a proviso along this same line, and the act of 1885 contemplated recovery, and that is what I meant.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; but not out of the Federal Treasury.
Mr. MILLER. That is hardly—
Mr. MANN. There is the period from 1859 to 1891, when the claimants got their claims lobbled through Congress with the aid of claim agents.

Mr. MILLER. They did not get it until up to 1891; there is no question about that. I yield to the gentleman from Minne-

Mr. NYE. I want to ask if this is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. MILLER. It is.
Mr. JACKSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon—
Mr. MILLER. I am speaking of the report; there is no minority report filed.

Mr. NYE. How do you estimate that this will cost a half a million dollars?

Mr. MILLER. That is estimated by the Assistant Attorney General, who has charge of these cases. These cases are all now in the Court of Claims, are ready to be prosecuted through to judgment because, under the act of 1891, all depredation claims had to be filed and suit commenced within a certain length of time after 1891. These cases therefore are cases that have been there since that time. There are lots of other cases that have not been adjudicated. Now, the Assistant Attorney General has taken these cases that have gone there and looked at the evidence and made a calculation of what amount probably can be proven in the way of recovery, if recovery is allowed, and he says that he can give a reasonably accurate estimate, and that estimate is $500,000.

Mr. NYE. A great many people have been foreclosed, have they not, by lapse of time or something of that kind who had equitable claims—as equitable as those that you now recognize?

Mr. MILLER. That is true. There are some people who undoubtedly have equitable claims and who have been fore-closed because of laches. We did not propose to touch those. I will say to the gentleman that there are lots and lots of Indian depredation cases that this will not touch, because we do not propose it should touch them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield before he closes? What is the character of these claims. I mern,

Mr. MILLER. They range in amounts from a few dollars up through the hundreds, and in one or two cases they are quite large amounts.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I notice in the hearings there is one claim of $240,000 for the Wells-Fargo Express Co. Is that included in the $500,000 to which the gentleman referred?

Mr. MILLER. I am sure it is not; that is a different claim.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That would be subject to the defense of amity.

Mr. MILLER. Amity; yes.
I understand the only large claims, up into the thousands of dollars, are sums for cattle that were stolen and destroyed and taken from Texas, and we have never had an Indian reservation in the State of Texas.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, one more question, if the gentleman will yield. The gentleman states it has been estimated by the Assistant Attorney General that if this bill is passed it would involve possibly $500,000. Does the gentleman know how much these claims aggregate? As I understand it, he estimates there will be about 40 per cent of the total amount that will be allowed. I want to know if the gentleman can tell us how much the aggregate amount of these claims would be?

Mr. MILLER. My recollection is that two or three million dollars is the aggregate amount claimed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The Assistant Attorney General estimates that only about half a million of that amount would be allowed?

Mr. MILLER. I think he has it somewhere in his report. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not been able to find it.

Mr. MILLER. I can not turn to it just at this moment; I thought it was in the report. But my recollection is that it is something under $3,000,000 and something over $2,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. I do not intend to detain the House long, but I wish to discuss the question announced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] in reference to these Indian claims.

I do not think there is a government in the world that has ever agreed to pay the torts of its citizens. The citizen may be wronged by another citizen, may be wronged by an individual who may not be a citizen, and he becomes individually liable for his own wrongs. There is this sound principle of law which is universally announced, that where a government through one of its arms shall injure a citizen of the United States it becomes the duty of the United States Government as a government to take the matter up with the foreign nation, because the citizen is unable to deal alone with the government. He must ask the interposition, then, of the Government to adjudi-But in every case where the wrong has been cate those claims. committed by a citizen of another government, the money paid comes out of the treasury of the government whose arm or whose citizen has committed the wrong upon us or upon the citizen of the United States. So in this case the Federal Government, being the guardian of the Indian, I should have no objection to these claims being prosecuted against the Indian for his wrong and the money being paid out of the Indian's own money, because while the Government supervises him, takes care of him, he still has a separate entity; he has a peculiar government within our own Government, and we guard his funds for his own benefit and for his own future development. Now, in the event that he shall commit a wrong or members of his tribe shall commit a wrong, it becomes the duty of the Government, from 1859 to 1891, to pay it out of the funds of the Indians and not out of the funds of the people of the United States. So that prior to 1859 this money was paid out of the Federal Treasury; the principle is wrong. No government ought to pay for the tort of its citizens or of the people who live within its jurisdiction.

In addition to that, these people who have prosecuted these claims and failed, because the law is written as it is in 1891, have had their day in court and have failed to recover. here is what strikes me as being a gross injustice in reference Thousands of people, perhaps, whose rights were just as sound under the amended act-that is, the act as we propose to amend it-just as sound as the rights of the few people who pursued their remedy. If you go to a man and ask him to pay your claim, and he would ask you if you were a citizen of the United States, he would, if he was an honest lawyer, tell you that you need not bring your case. the man who does not prosecute his case in the face of the statute as written in 1891 loses his right under this amendment, but the man who discovers he was not a citizen, and whose case was dismissed on that ground, is the man who has rights under this proposed bill, which is superior to those of the people who had the same rights in 1891 but wisely kept out of

In addition to that, the Government of the United States has been put to the trouble and to the expense of defending these suits and won their cases, putting them out of court. Now, Congress has written a statute permitting their recovery, and you come and put a favored few back into this bill, and if it shall become the law, then it is wrong in morals to treat the citizen differently in this bill than in the manner in which you treated the citizen who did not prosecute in 1891.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas? Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to know if the gentleman is acquainted with the fact that this does not apply to any persons except those who brought suit heretofore under the act of 1891, and that that act ran out of force and effect within three years from that date?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is the gentleman acquainted with the fact that a great many suits were brought under that act while it was pending, and that those suits were suits that were dismissed on technicalities, and that there are very few of them, relatively, amounting, I think, in all to less than $500,000?

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will say to my friend from Texas that that is the very objection that I have to putting these people back into court. These people who were litigious, who had lawyers who were willing to go to court and take a chance—these 50-per-cent lawyers, who take no chances on costs, but who get 50 per cent of what is recovered-were the ones who brought those suits. Another lawyer, we will say, tells his clients who are claimants that they have no right of recovery under the law, and the man who was litigious and who pursued his case is now given a status and a standing by this bill, when hundreds of other people, believing that Congress had not given them the right to recover, are compelled to stand aside. The litigious litigant is the man who had a special privilege under this bill. That is wrong.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi again yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inform the gentleman from Mississippi that this bill only reinstates cases dismissed by the Court of Claims for the reason that the plaintiff in the suit could not prove his citizenship, which was by the act of 1891 made mandatory on him to do before he could recover pay for the property taken or destroyed by Indians. The court held that this proof had to be made affirmatively, the plaintiff having the burden of proof thrown on him. Many suits were dismissed for this reason. We now by this bill desire to reinstate these cases on the docket of that court by adding the words "or inhabitant" after the word citizen in the old law, so as to read "citizen or inhabitant," etc. These cases were dismissed on technicalities.

The provision for judgment in behalf of inhabitants or citizens is in accord with all the various acts, beginning with that of 1796, by which indemnification was promised to habitants as well as to citizens, by various acts, to wit, in 1796, 1799, 1802, 1834, and by section 2166 of the Revised Statutes, this promise was made the inhabitants or citizens. It was not until the passage of the act of March 3, 1885, which authorized the Secretary of the Interior to investigate claims for depredations, that that provision for inhabitants was omitted. Then, when the act of March 3, 1891, conferring jurisdiction of such claims upon the Court of Claims was passed, the right of recovery was limited to citizens. This change of the old law and the refusal to permit inhabitants to recover and requiring strict proof of citizenship has resulted in great injustice to those who suffered losses of property at the lands of the Indians. These injuries have been done to the poor pioneers of the West, who were at the same time suffering all the privations of a new country and who were poorly equipped to meet such losses, and in some instances, in my own State, counties on the frontier lost their organization and the white settlements were driven back for many miles. Two counties I remember in my own district, Young and Clay Counties, were disorganized, the county seats abandoned, many of the inhabitants murdered, and the property all taken and destroyed by the savages. And it is a great hardship on these people to be refused payment because they could not prove that their ancestors had been duly naturalized citizens of the United States. Many of the ancestors of these people were of foreign birth and lived in their early youth in the eastern part of the United States and took out their naturalization papers there, moved to the West, and died there. death their children would often lose their naturalization papers, and when these suits were brought they would be unable to prove their citizenship, and thus would be thrown out of court. Other claimants had been inhabitants of the Republic of Texas and assumed that when Texas was annexed to the United States that they would also become citizens of the United States, but this court in these Indian depredation cases held that they were not citizens of the United States and were not entitled to recover from the Government for the loss of their property. Others living in the original Territory of Nebraska relied on an incorrect but not unreasonable construction of the organic act establishing that State, and have never, according to the definition established by this court, perfected their citizenship. Hence these lost their suits.

Many soldiers of the United States Army, at the close of the war, were ordered to the western frontier and engaged in wars with these Indians and were discharged at the posts nearest to them. Many of these soldiers supposed that the oath taken on enlistment made them citizens of the United States; many of them are drawing pensions from the Government. These men on being released from the Army settled in this western country and have become property owners and voters, but when their property was stolen and they brought suit to recover for it they found they had been mistaken as to their citizenship and could not recover. Many held important State and county offices; had been leaders in public movements in their respective sections. Mr. Campbell was a Delegate from Arizona when it was a Territory and served in Congress. He lost property from these Indian depredations, and after his death his wife could not prove his citizenship in this court, and lost her suit and died in hopeless poverty.

The Territory of Utah was settled between 1848 and 1860, and had a Territorial organization in the early sixties. The probate court was a court without a seal and was not a court of record. These early settlers believed, and the probate judges so held, that they could naturalize these settlers and make them citizens of the United States. Many of them lost property from Indian depredations, brought these suits, and found that they could not recover because these probate courts attempting to naturalize them were not courts of record and had no seal.

Congress has five times, by special bills, waived this requirement of citizenship and permitted inhabitants to recover for the ment of citizenship and permitted inhabitants to recover for the loss of their property by private bills as follows: Toussaint, Private, No. 108 (1899); Fred Weddle, Private, No. 664 (1900); Lynch, Private, No. 1154 (1907); Trabing, Private, No. 385 (1907); and Brown, Private, No. 385 (1907).

Judge Lynch, the one mentioned above, lived in Albany, in my district; had served many years as county judge of his county; had been born in England; his father moved when he was but a child to California, and died there. His father was a voter and citizen of California. Judge Lynch was a voter and officeholder in Texas, but he was unable to prove that his father had ever been naturalized, hence he lost his case in the court, and I introduced this private bill for him and it finally passed and became a law. I believe on every principle of equity and justice and good conscience that this bill should pass.

Mr. SISSON. I have been as indulgent as I could to let the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Strephens] make his speech.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Four besides the Lynch case. Mr. SISSON. I suppose these cases will illustrate. The gentleman may have three or four or five or six others, Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There are many.

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, is it not true that nearly all of these cases were dismissed because they could not comply with the first section of the act of 1891? If they could have complied with the act of 1891, under the decisions of the courts, of course they would not be here.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in further answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], I have no doubt that he may find many specific cases, perhaps, where the litigants were unable to comply with the act of 1891, and in each case the litigant was not a citizen of the United States. He was a mere inhabitant of the United States. Now, not being a citizen, he lost his case. It was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, as the report says. The claimant who lived in Texas was unfortunate in that he did not know the law; the claimant in Utah was unfortunate in that he did not know the law; but ignorance of the law excuses no man. He has no right to take advantage of his ignorance. Under this particular bill you permit a man who had no rights under the act, as the court has decided, to bring were all paid out of Indian funds.

Mr. SISSON. Under these acts or treation, was the amount reimbursable to the Treasury from the Indian funds?

Mr. JACKSON. The Treasury never paid any of them; they were all paid out of Indian funds.

this suit. He did bring the suit, and lost it. Thousands of people might be found who at that time had just claims against the Government, as they thought, but their attorneys advised them, after getting the facts, "You had better not bring the sult. You would lose your suit; you would lose your time; you would have to pay the costs, because you can not recover."

If in 1801 this Congress had passed the act in the form in which it is proposed to pass this act to-day, then all those who had claims would have been put upon an equal footing with the people who have come into court, and you would not have excluded those people who had rights and declined to go into These people who did go into court had no more rights in equity and they have no more rights under this act than the people had who declined to go into court. If you are acting upon the question of justice or injustice, of fairness or unfair-If you are acting ness, then those people who did not press their claims in court had as many rights in equity as these people have who did go into court. I deny that the Federal Government ought to have paid any of these claims out of the Federal Treasury. I think it is wrong to tax the people of the United States to pay the losses of citizens. The gentleman has said that these people went out and builded up the West. True. And so did the peo-ple in all these Eastern States build up these States. Each sec-True. And so did the peotion was doing its part in building up the country. ple happened to go out and assume the risks incident to the acquiring of that mighty domain, where great fortunes have been made, not only in the development of railroads, but where fortunes have been made in working the land. ing to go and drive the Indians farther and farther west; and because they assumed those risks some of them lost their property. But it was wrong in principle for the Government ever to pay any of them. And since it was wrong in principle for the Government ever to have paid any of them, it is not right for the Government now to pay those who brought suit when others did not bring suit because they were advised by their attorneys that they could not comply with the law of 1891

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman if he is familiar with the fact that in 1796, and from then up until 1858, Congress steadily pursued the policy of permitting men to file claims against the United States Government for Indian depredations, and if the Indians had property, to pay those claims out of the money to their credit? Is the gentleman aware of the fact that if the Indians had money in the Treasury they could be forced to pay for their depredations?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes; I learned it, however, this morning. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that that having been the law for many years, that property rights were established, and that we should still follow that out?

Mr. SISSON. That law expired in 1859 and was never reenacted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; it was reenacted in 1891.

Mr. SISSON. That is the very complaint I have, that you are giving a few citizens who took advantage of rights given them under the act of Congress of 1891—that you are giving a few people who had no rights under that act who went into court, solely because they went into court, I say you are giving them rights over men who did not go into court, who were sensible and had good counsel, when they had cases just as good as those who actually went into court. In 1859 the last Democratic Congress before the Civil War passed an act specifically providing that the Government would pay for Indian depredations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. This only applies to cases that were brought under the act of 1891.

Mr. SISSON. That is the very complaint I am making. I do not think if the gentleman understood me there would be any disagreement between us. You are giving these men who went into court under the act of 1891, simply because they did go into court, an advantage over the man who declined to go into court under the act of 1891.

Mr. JACKSON. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that the statement of the chairman, the gentleman from Texas, is hardly accurate when he says that during all the time prior to 1859 they filed claims. They only filed them with the Indian agent of the department for the purpose of the department adjusting the claims against the Indian tribes. They were only paid when there was a specific treaty with the Indians.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to any man paying for his own torts, but Congress and the American people ought not to be made to pay for them. When I do a wrong against a man or the people I ought to be compelled to suffer in damages, but other people ought not to be compelled to suffer in damages for my wrong. If a railroad carelessly runs its train and it becomes wrecked and results in loss of life, is it any reason why the Federal Treasury should respond in damages for the carelessness of the railroad company? Certainly not. The railroad company will respond in damages for its carelessness in managing its trains without due regard for the lives of men and the rights of its passengers.

The Federal Government ought not to be called upon to make restitution to the people who assumed the risk of going West and taking up homes among the Indians. These people must assume the risks of citizenship in whatever place they may live. In some sections of our country, in some sections of the greater cities, you will find men who are just as liable to depredations as those who live among the Indians, but the Federal Government ought not to be called upon to pay money because a man lives in a bad ward in a city or because he is visited by porch climbers or because he may be subjected to robbery. Because a man is robbed on a train is no reason on earth why the Federal Government should be called upon to pay for the tort, no reason why the Federal Government should be called upon to pay the damages.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman familiar with the Comanche and Kiowa war, with the depredations of the Apache Indians, when depredations causing the loss of millions of property and thousands of lives were lost?

Mr. SISSON. I never was there, because I live down among civilized people in Mississippi. I had the right to move into the uncivilized country; but when a man determines to move into an uncivilized country in order to get Indian land, in order to drive the Indian away from his home-and I want to say that I expect I would be worse than a Comanche Indian if I was treated as he was-I say it takes all there is

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, the gentleman believes that the settlers were at a disadvantage and that the country never should have been settled?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, I am glad there were men who were willing to assume the risk and go out there. I am glad that there were men willing to cross the Atlantic and build this mighty Republic on this hemisphere, and I want people always to do honor to those sturdy immigrants that came and built this mighty temple of liberty, in which peace, plenty, liberty, and happiness may prevail. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, I am not carried off my feet with the idea that I am willing to give special privileges to a man because he did his part in going out West and building up the country. If the Indians were so bad as that, then the people ought not to have gone; but they did go, and when they went they assumed their own risk. But if the gentleman's theory is a correct one, then every man out West that ever lost a dollar's worth of property in the wars with the Indians, although he himself was there, perhaps, doing that which he ought not to do, he was there endeavoring to build up the country, we ought to pass a sweeping bill and let everybody recover.

The trouble with the gentleman's bill is that he permits only a few to recover, notwithstanding they had no rights in court, but who got a lawyer who was willing, as I stated, to take 50 per cent of what he recovered, who said to them that he was willing to take the chance if they were willing to take the chance, that he would bring the suit for them, and if he won anything it would be that much for both of them. That sort of man gets into court and the other citizen, who in 1891 had just as good and perhaps a more meritorious case, does not. You permit the litigous man, represented by a lawyer who is willing to take 50 per cent, to come into court. You are going to reinstate him and his rights, when he has had his day in court, and nothing is said about the other claims of citizens who were advised by good, honest lawyers to stay out of court. They get no rights under this bill. That is not right.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What would the gentleman think of a case of this kind, which is an actual case. Mr. Campbell, who was the second delegate from the State of Arizona, about 45 years ago, and who represented the Territory of Arizona in this very body, under the laws of the United States, about that time lost all of his property by depredation by Apache Indians. He died leaving a family helpless. His widow now is poor, and the children are poor. They lost everything they had. In 1891 this suit was brought. I do not know whether the attorneys were to get 10 per cent or 5 per cent or 50 per cent. makes no difference with the justice of the claim. Mr. Campbell served his country in this very body, but they raised the question that he had been born abroad, and he could not prove that his father had been naturalized. Does the gentleman think that is a just case? Yet that is exactly what he is fighting here.

Mr. SISSON. I think in the first place that he ought not to think it was wrong. I think it was wrong. I think it was wrong. I think it was wrong to have paid him one dollar out of the Federal Treasury. If the Indians did him wrong, or if I do you a wrong, if I injure you in your personal property, then you should respond to me, and the Indians should respond to

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How about the ward?

Mr. SISSON. If I injure my ward, I should respond in damages.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But suppose the ward injures somebody else?

Mr. SISSON. If somebody else injures my ward, I do not have to respond in damages.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But suppose the gentleman's ward injures somebody else?

Mr. SISSON. Then, I will let the ward pay for the injury out of his own money. I do not object to your paying this out of the Indian fund.

Mr. KENDALL. And the ward has a big fund.

Yes; the ward has a considerable fund; and Mr. SISSON. my understanding is that as a class some of them are the richest people in the world.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield with reference to my own State for one question? When Texas entered the Union there was a contract in the annexation law to the effect that the Government of the United States should protect the Texas frontier, and since that time they have done so; but a great many claims have been recognized and paid.

Mr. SISSON. All of that I concede, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If they did agree to do that, and a citizen of Texas was injured, would not that citizen have a just claim against the United States?

Mr. SISSON. No. His claim would be against the Mexican Government, or against the offending party. Does the gentle-man tell me that the Federal Treasury ought to respond in damages to the people if the damage is done by a civil war?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No. Mr. SISSON. In the act of war?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But this was by Indians. That is the contention here.

Mr. SISSON. If the Indian is engaged in warfare?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the Indians were the wards of the Government.

If the Indians are engaged in warfare they Mr. SISSON. should respond in damages. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that because we have a foreign invader here, and the highest obligation of the Federal Government is to protect us in time of war, that because of the act of God or of the public enemy the Public Treasury should respond in damages because of injury done by that invader?

I do not believe that the Government will ever commit itself to that proposition. Here is a case where a band of Indians, it may be, came and destroyed a man's property. Is that any reason why the Federal Treasury should respond in damages on that account? There is a reason why the Indian should pay, and this committee will find difficulty in having a bill of this kind passed unless they cite precedents-and how many crimes are committed in thy name, O Precedent! How many evils has the human family suffered in all the generations of the past because bad precedents are followed by legislative bodies!

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman will find precedents for this matter ranging over the last 113 years.

as the first act was passed in 1799.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but you find your monstrosities in government that date back from the earliest dawn of history, and we should not follow those monstrosities, we should eliminate the evil and follow that which is good. There is no reason, because one Congress does a wrong and takes out of the Federal Treasury that which is contributed by all the people and turns it over to a few people, that we should follow in their footsteps. If that were true, it would be a perfect outrage for the Democrats to succeed in the next election, because as a precedent for 16 years you have been passing bills like the Payne-Aldrich, the Dingley, and other bills of that kind. I hope my good friend from Oklahoma will not be hoisted on that petard. Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will. Mr. FERRIS. I did not rise particularly to debate the merits of the matter. I thought the gentleman was bemoaning the fact that we were about to set a precedent.

Mr. SISSON. No; I was bemoaning the fact that you are following a bad precedent.

Mr. FERRIS. Then, I misunderstood the gentleman.
Mr. SISSON. I said I was bemoaning the fact that you take as a precedent the act of 1891, which ought never to have been passed, and that in 1859 they abandoned the policy of taxing the Federal Treasury for these wrongs and up until 1891 paid them out of the Indian funds. They were then acting in accordance with justice and right. The man who commits a wrong is responsible for the wrong. The man who does an outrage ought to pay for that outrage. You ought not to punish the innocent taxpayers of the entire country by taking out of their funds money to pay for wrongs committed by another.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that prior to 1859 when men moved to the West they imagined it was the law that whenever property was injured, destroyed, taken, and so forth, that they had a claim against the Indians, and that if the Indians could not pay it they had a claim against the United States Government?

Mr. SISSON. I have no idea what their views of it were, but because a man moves out there with that impression is no reason why a Government obligation existed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman imagine that men would have gone there if they did not believe the Government would protect them?

Mr. SISSON. Why, many a man went out West hunting a fight, not to avoid one.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman believe they would have carried their wives and children and their property into that country-

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the wife and mother is always willing to go and share the hardships of father and son.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And it is just such men who have adde the West what it is. What I desired to ask the gentlemade the West what it is. man was, if there had not been that encouragement to settle up that country

Mr. SISSON. I am not aware of any encouragement of that

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do you think they would have gone into that wild country, except with that understanding when they went into this country, that after they went there and built up homes and built up the country and made it what it is, that they would be protected, and that if their property was destroyed they would get pay for it, and would it not be unfair to have induced those settlers to go there under false pretenses that they would be thus protected?

Mr. SISSON. No. no—
Mr. JACKSON. I want to inform the distinguished chairman of the committee that in Texas quite the contrary was true. Ever since 1859 the Government has said specifically that it would not be responsible for these depredations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor, but I am willing to yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. To ask a question.

Mr. SISSON. I am willing to yield to the gentleman. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Thank you. I want to make this inquiry: In 1859 these people were already in the West, and the gentleman's State was then settled in 1859, and his State has many of these claims pending, and in my State and nearly all of these Western States there were settlers there at that time, and those claims arose after the Civil War, from 1865

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman knows our State was not settled in 1859; there were a few early settlers there, and it was settled after 1859, and after that time the Kansas troops followed the Comanche and Apache Indians into the gentle-man's own State and destroyed and captured them. We are not here seeking the Government to pay these claims.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are not all of these claims pending coming to old settlers of that country?

Mr. SISSON. I decline to surrender the floor further. I wish to be as liberal as I can, but I can not yield the floor entirely to the gentleman. I want to say to the gentleman if his contention is true, the descendants of those people who landed up in New England, the people who settled Jamestown, the people act of 1891.

who settled around Baltimore, the people who started this Government in the colonies and which you have eliminated by the that it was an error of the descendants of Roger Williams that statute of limitation—all of those people back in those early days—ought to be paid. You have no right to select a few people under this bill or select one fellow because he has brought a lawsuit. You have no right to pick him out and deny the same right to other people. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman stated forcibly the proposition, and we all agree with him on it, that the Government should not be responsible for the act of a public enemy. Does he make no distinction between the act of a public enemy and the act of a ward of the Government?

Mr. SISSON. So far as legal liability is concerned, there can be absolutely no difference. The guardian assumes no responsibility for the act of his ward. The ward might be called upon to respond in damages out of his own money, and unless he has a guardian he is particeps criminis, or aids and abets in the wrong, the suit would be against the ward, the judgment would be against the ward and not against the guardian and paid out of the ward's property.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but the refusal to wipe out the distinction between the Indian at war and at peace with the United States is not based on the argument the gentleman is now making, but on the argument that it is the act of a public enemy,

Mr. SISSON. Do you contend that it is the act of a public enemy'

Mr. MONDELL. What I am not able to understand is how a ward of the Government of the United States, over whom the Government has established guardianship, can be placed in the category of a public enemy.

Mr. SISSON. I have not done so. But I stated at the outset that the obligation would be infinitely greater upon the Federal Government, whose especial duty it is to protect us against the public enemy-that it would be more in the nature of a national obligation, because a citizen can not protect himself against a foreign enemy and the Government can, and there would be more reason for your contention if it was a public enemy than if it was the act of a private citizen or an Indian who was living here as an alien in our midst.

Yes; but the Government can protect its Mr. MONDELL. citizens against the acts of its ward, because the ward is constantly under the control of the Government.

Mr. SISSON. So is everybody under the control of the Government. Murder is committed every day, arson is committed every day, and all sorts of crimes are committed, but the Fed-Treasury does not respond in damages, and yet the Federal Government is the guardian of the liberty and rights of the people.

When the State declines to give them that protection it becomes the duty of the Government to give them the protection of their life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Does it provide for the heirs of Roger Williams for the hardships which they endured back in the early days in Massachusetts?

Mr. SISSON. It is a wonderful oversight, I will say to the gentleman. He did a great deal to build up this country, and upon the theory which our friends are now advancing we ought to go back and recompense the heirs of Roger Williams and his associates for the money and property taken from them by the Indians.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What per cent of the people who were depredated by the Indians are now left and would receive the benefits of the bill if it were carried out?

Mr. SISSON. I have no idea, and the report does not show. do not know whether the claims are for 100 or for 50 years. You can not find out from the report.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. But would it not, most of it, go to the attorneys here who represent these claimants rather than to the claimants? Mr. SISSON. I do not think that where there is any justice in the claim that a man should be deprived of his rights, because his attorney gets a fee frequently, however he is deprived of too much of what he recovers by his attorney.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the statute now provides the attorney can only get a certain per cent? Mr. SISSON. Not when the contracts were made in 1891. Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Is it not a fact that the courts have held that all contracts made are absolutely null and void, and that all that they can recover is specified in the law?

Mr. JACKSON. The provision stated by the gentleman from California is the law. But I want to say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Rucker] that it was a mistake that the heirs of Roger Williams did not present their claims under the very wisely stated that if this bill should pass this House it might open up enormous floodgates, and the limitations that this committee has placed upon this bill might be removed. But if you pass this bill I am willing to assert, without any fear of successful contradiction, that the other claims that have been brought, which are not included in this bill, will be brought forward, and that in a few years after this litigation has ended the Committee on Indian Affairs will be besieged by petitioners urging the justice of these other claims, and they will assert that here is a precedent for it; that you set a precedent for it not only in 1891, but that in 1912 you set another precedent, and this becomes a precedent that opens up the floodgate for the eleven millions. In other words, the suits against the Government that were lost under the act of 1891, according to this report, aggregate $11,000,000.

Now, if those claims aggregate $11,000,000, the unbrought claims might amount to $40,000,000. Nobody knows what they would amount to, and when you begin to approach that sea it is very doubtful where you will end.

I used to think that Congress could control its own expenses. I have changed my mind about that. Congress has very little control over Government expenses. We do not exercise very much control over them, but we take the precedents of past Congresses, and we do not have the courage to set new precedents along the right lines. [Applause.]

The trouble is that here is now an act that was wrong, and we are citing that as a reason why this present bill should be shall not support a bill of this kind. I presume that the bill will pass. But I am opposed to all legislation of Where the Federal Government incurs an obligation whereby the Government takes the property of a citizen and uses it, where my Government issues a note or a bond or an obligation, I want it to be paid to the last penny, and I want it to be paid without litigation. I want the obligations of the Federal Government always to be met sacredly and promptly. But I am unwilling that the Federal Government should be continually loaded down with those claims and assumed burdens that are unjust and with those expenses that are unfair, which may impair the ability of the Government to take care of the honest and legitimate claims which it has itself incurred. I am unwilling with my vote or with my influence to permit this Federal Government to pay anything in the future for the torts committed by citizens or aliens IIving within its boundaries. I want the citizens to have all the civil rights that they should have under the civil law, but I am unwilling, because a crime has been committed, that the Federal Treasury should be called upon to respond in damages.

These are the reasons why I am unwilling to support this bill. I sincerely trust that Congress at this session will set the precedent by which we may cease to do these-as I view them-unlawful and unwarrantable things.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that, taking into consideration the condition of Mexico at the present time, where millions of dollars' worth of property belonging to citizens of the United States has been destroyed down there, and the lives of a great many of our citizens have been destroyed in that country by Yaqui Indians, who have committed many depredations in the various States of the Republic of Mexico—is the gentleman aware that the American citizens who have suffered from Indian depredations down there have claims pending against the Mexican Govern-ment, which the United States Government has demanded shall be paid, and-

Mr. SISSON. Yes: and the United States Government should demand payment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will not the gentleman allow me to finish the question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; but I am unwilling that a gentleman shall ask two questions that are not susceptible to answer except one at a time. The gentleman can keep on questioning, but I wish to answer only one question at a time.

The Federal Government is the only Government that can deal with the Mexican citizen, and the Federal Government can deal with the Mexican citizen only through the agency of the Mexican Government. Since the Mexican Government alone has the right of control and ownership over its own territory, and control over its own citizens in all international affairs, that Government must deal with the United States Government. You can not deal with the Mexican citizen other-

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But does not the United States Government, coming back to the question that I asked, demand that its citizens shall be protected, when the United States citizens have suffered the destruction of property in Mexico?

Mr. SISSON. That is absolutely true, and she ought to do

STEPHENS of Texas. If a Mexican came into our country, and his property was destroyed by a foreigner, is not this Government under the same obligation to do what we demand of Mexico?

Mr. SISSON. Of course.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Just reversing the application of the principle.

Mr. SISSON. It involves an absolutely different principle. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is all we ask you to do in this bill.

Mr. SISSON. It involves a different principle. In that case you have got to go into a foreign forum; you have got to go into a foreign jurisdiction; you have got to go into an unfriendly court, under an unfriendly Government, and it is upon that principle of international law that they recognize the right of a government to intervene, to protect the citizen in another country; but within our own borders, does the gentleman contend that if a wrong is committed upon a citizen by another citizen, or by an alien, it is the business of the Federal Government to go and make restitution for the wrong? Upon the reasoning of the gentleman every time a murder is committed, every time a house is broken into or burned down, every time a piece of property is destroyed, every time a porch climber goes and takes the jewels out of the home of the rich or takes food out of the hovel of the poor, since the Government is under obligation to protect the citizen, then the Federal Government would be under some obligation to respond in damages. I repudiate that doctrine as being unsound in toto.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe we ought to treat Mexico as we demand that Mexico shall treat us?

Mr. SISSON. Of course. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And if we demand that an American citizen in Mexico shall be paid for Indian depredations committed upon him there, why should we not recognize our obligation to pay damages to a Mexican residing in the United States for depredations committed upon him by Indians within the United States?

Mr. SISSON. If the people of the United States or the people of a State, acting as a mob, attack a foreigner because he is a foreigner, although he is behaving himself and not doing anything to bring it about, then it becomes the duty of this Government not only to prosecute our own citizens and punish them for it, but it becomes the duty of this Government to see to it that the foreigner is recompensed for the property destroyed. That is a matter of international law for the promotion of international peace and for the prevention of war and bloodshed. But it is upon an entirely different principle to the contention here, that the Government should pay for the property that a man loses within his own country, where he has the rights of the courts.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But I am speaking of foreigners. They should be protected by us, the same as we demand that Americans shall be protected in a foreign country. We ought to protect a Mexican residing in this country, the same as we demand that Mexico shall protect an American residing in that country, and the same principle is involved here.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi, in reply to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Stephens], that these agents came into this country in the face of an express declaration on the part of the United States Government, by the act of 1859, that it would not pay for any property destroyed by Indians, and their property was not destroyed until probably 15 years after the passage of that act.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is entirely wrong. That was in reference to going into the Indian country. was held to mean Indian reservations, and if they went into Indian reservations in opposition to the law of the United States they were not protected; but these people were not on any Indian reservation. They were on their own homesteads, in the occupation of their own land, and it was while they were so occupying it, in the business of farming and stock raising, that they were injured.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. They were there in that country 15 years after the United States Government had passed a statute expressly stating that it would not pay any damages that might be sustained at the hands of Indians, and it seems to me it is on an entirely different footing from the proposition put by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It is not, for the reason that the men affected by this bill are foreigners; and I say that the foreigners coming into this country must be protected in their lives and property by this Government; and I will cite the case of the Italians who were killed 20 or more years ago in New Orleans by the Mafia. The gentleman remembers that?

Mr. SISSON. Perfectly. They killed Mr. Hennessey, the chief of police of New Orleans.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Was not this Government held responsible for that?

Mr. SISSON. The Government of the United States assumed responsibility, because the treaty that the United States Government has with Italy and with England, and that it had with Russia until it abrogated it, guarantees safe residence and safe passage to the citizens of those countries. It is a specific obligation which this Government has assumed, and the reason it has been assumed by this Government is in order that friendly relations may exist.

It is within the treaty power of the United States Government. Being within the treaty power it became the duty of the Federal Government to carry out the obligations they were under to the Italians residing, living, and working and doing business here. If the Government of the United States should decline, we would be compelled to settle the national differences by force, which is not only more expensive but is the most barbarous method on earth. But that is not true with reference to citizens who are not citizens of foreign countries. Here you have an entirely different principle involved, with no international agreement involved.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the only difference that the property of the Italians was destroyed by a mob in New Orleans? What is the difference between being destroyed by a mob of citizens and it being destroyed by the wards of the Nation?

Mr. SISSON. There is a great deal of difference. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly. Mr. MANN. In the case which the gentleman from Texas is citing, the foreign Government itself made a representation to our Government through the diplomatic channels. That is true in reference to all the cases to which the gentleman has referred. Can the gentleman cite any case where a foreign Government has made any representation to this country in the case of these claims?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas.

Yes; in the matter of the Yakimas a few days ago by the Mexican Government.

Mr. MANN. Has there been any claim made by any foreign Government, or any representative of a foreign Government, on account of any Indian depredation claims which this bill covers?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They have in the Yakima Indians from Mexico.

These claims are not covered by this bill here. Mr. SISSON. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas if this foreign government, this alien government, the Indian government, has made representations through the State Department, and if the State Department had entered into an agreement with them that it would present to Congress the demands and endeavor to get it settled peaceably and quietly?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is a part of the question

Mr. SISSON. I understand that certain attorneys have got up these cases, brought under the act in the Court of Claims, because that is the only court in which a citizen can pursue his remedy against the United States, and that you are asking for the amount of damages these men suffered?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How can suits be brought and prosecuted without attorneys in any court?

Mr. TOWNER. Will the Mr. SISSON. Certainly. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. TOWNER. Is there not a slight inconsistency between the proposition that these claims can be enforced as coming from a foreign government and the proposition that they can be enforced because of the relation that these wards bore to their guardian, the Government of the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point is that this bill provides that a foreigner living in this country who has property that was destroyed by the wards of the Government and who has brought suit within the time required by the act of 1891 shall have his case reinstated for the reason that he understood that his property would be protected, and is demanding that.

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.
Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; for a question.
Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, these Indians were not the wards of the Government at the time of these depredations, were they?

Mr. SISSON. I can not answer that, because I do not know from what source the depredations came.

Mr. MILLER. The bill provides that the Indians who committed the depredations must have been under the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that the Federal Government, however sympathetic may be the claims that may be made, the Government can not equalize conditions. The Federal Government can not pay people for the loss of property. Disastrous fires have occurred, and the Federal Government has never undertaken to pay for the property. Disastrous floods have come and washed away millions of dollars' worth of property, leaving people homeless, and the Federal Government has, from a humanitarian point of view, given them food and shelter until the impending danger was passed, which it is right and proper that it should do, but it has never paid them for the property loss. When these calamities come over communities over which the people have no control then the Federal Government, out of its bounty, has been willing to prevent human suffering and starvation, but it is wrong in principle to endeavor to get the Federal Government to pay these people for the damages which they have suffered, and it is equally wrong to reimburse for losses by virtue of the depredation of Indians, and only selecting these people who brought suit under the act of 1891 and leaving out all the others. If it is right to permit these to recover, it is right to throw wide open the floodgates. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] said, it is not a question of the amount of money, not a question of the amount of damages; it is a question of the obligation that the Government is under.

I do not want to make fish of one and fowl of another. these people had rights prior to 1801 that were just as good as the rights of these people who pursued their remedy under the act of 1891, then we should tear the doors down and let them all into the same temple of justice and fairness; and just as certain as you pass this bill, just so certain are you going to have to answer with your hand on your heart, Are you willing to deny these people the rights and privileges for depredations that we recognized they suffered and yet give them to those people who brought their suits in 1891? Mr. Chairman, I can not support this bill. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Floyd of Arkansas having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title

H. R. 18661. An act to provide for an extension of time of payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, as provided for under the act of Congress approved June 21, 1906.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2) supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill H. R. 16661, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Curtis, Mr. McCumber, and Mr. Stone as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill be closed within an hour.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, no member of the committee has had an opportunity yet to speak against the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Can we get some agreement as to time; can the gentleman suggest some time?

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether somebody desires to speak in favor of the bill and how much time they desire. Several of us desire some time against the

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state that we desire to use as much time as the gentlemen have on that side. My object was to get this bill through to-day, so that other matters might be taken up, as we are pressed for time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas desires an hour, I desire an hour myself against the bill, and there are several other gentlemen who desire some time against the bill, which involves several million dollars and ought not to be hurried for one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill. have been opposed to it ever since I heard it first mentioned in the committee, and I have yet to hear some good reason why I should be for it. The bill proposes to inaugurate a new policy of the Government toward the Indian tribes and the people of the United States who have suffered. It has been argued here that it is an entering wedge for other claims, or, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] facetiously remarked, it is an entrance of the nose of the camel into the tent. Mr. Chairman, it is more than any of these. It is by one direct act of Congress an opening of the doors of the courts and the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of reimbursing the settlers of the Western States for all depredations which they suffered at the hands of the Indians.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me-

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman allow me— Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield at this me. Gentlemen may reason about this matter as they believe and divide between the north and the northwest side of a hair, but after all it comes back to the proposition—that is, the proposition is to go back into history for 100 years—and open up the courts of the country and the Treasury of the United States in order that these people whom the Government had for that length of time constantly, with the exception, I believe, of about 10 or 11 years, refused to pay, may now be permitted to present their claims against the Government. There has been much said about the law in this case, and I am unwilling to have it go forth that the Committee on Indian Affairs as a whole stands for this law or that the Committee on Indian Affairs as a whole stands for this report. I can hardly imagine a report or a statement of a case that would more unfairly state a proposition, so far as the law is concerned, than this report does

Mr. MILLER. Just an inquiry,

Mr. JACKSON. I do not care to yield at this time. I would rather make my statement so that I can get it before the committee.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is making a very pronounced-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield. Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman ought to yield; I Mr. MILLER. I think the gent thought I might induce him to yield.

It is the gentleman's time, and it is The CHAIRMAN. within his control.

Mr. JACKSON. I think I will satisfy the gentleman. Mr. MILLER. You will, if you will give me two minutes to

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman has had an hour and a half

Mr. MILLER. Only I do not talk that way when I have the

Mr. JACKSON. What I want to refer to, Mr. Chairman, is this: Here is the report of the committee, written, I understand, by the gentleman from Minnesota, and here is his statement concerning the law that I say states the matter clearly in an unfair manner. On page 2, it begins as follows:

unfair manner. On page 2, it begins as follows:

That part of existing law requiring the claimant to be a citizen of the United States at the time of the depredation can hardly be justified on any reasonable ground and has resulted in severe hardship and marked injustice. This requirement of citizenship is of recent origin, having first been adopted in 1885, and no particular reason can be found for its having been engrafted upon the law. The original acts did not contemplate any such limitation upon the right to recovery. The first act was passed in 1796. In that year a general law was enacted defining the relations between the whites and Indians. The promise of compensation to the whites for Indian depredations was undoubtedly to prevent reprisals and private warfare.

The language of the original act, approved May 19, 1796 (1 Stat. L., 472), is as follows:

Indoubtedly to prevent reprisals and private warrare.

The language of the original act, approved May 19, 1796 (1 Stat. L., 472), is as follows:

"That if any Indian or Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States shall come over or across the said boundary line into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States

""

This language is also that contained in the act of March 3, 1799 (1 Stat. L., 747); in the act of March 3, 1802 (2 Stat. L., 143); in the act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stat. L., 731); and in the Revised Statutes of 1878, section 2156. The discrimination in favor of citizens of the United States was first made in the act of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. L., 376), and was followed in this act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 851).

Now, this statement of the law could not be taken to have meant anything else than that prior to 1885 all of the claims of people who lost property by Indian depredations, whether citizens of this country or of foreign nations, were to be recompensed by the United States Government. I will admit that the statement does not say that exactly, but I say that it so infers, because anyone who reads that would get that impression, and I have no idea but a majority of the Members of this House who read that statement, as was evidenced from the debate here on the part of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], had the impression that the Government had promised redress to these men who suffered wrong at the hands of the Indians.

But such was not the case, and the fact is that the Government never promised, with the exception of the short period between 1834 and 1859, that it would recompense anybody for any Indian depredation.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.
Mr. RAKER. Is there any provision in this bill different from the act of 1891 save and except that which permits those who were residents of the United States to recover and does not confine it to a citizen?

Mr. JACKSON. I think there are minor provisions.
Mr. RAKER. In what way?
Mr. JACKSON. Of course the limitation is changed. The gentleman will understand that. That is all I recall now.
Mr. RAKER. Then, with the exception of that provision to permit a man who was a resident but not a citizen, the policy of the Government and all the rules governing the former acts and the decisions of the Supreme Court on that subject are not and the decisions of the supreme court on that subject are not at all affected by this act, are they?

Mr. JACKSON. I think not.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield to one other question?

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. It was referred to here by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shackleford] in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] that attorneys would get all the bene-May I call your attention to section 9 of the act of 1891. found in volume 2, Federal Statutes Annotated, page 100, in which it was held that all contracts entered into in regard to these claims are absolutely null and void, and the only fee any man or attorney or attorneys or agent or agents can obtain is 15 per cent of the entire amount, and with exception, which might as to attorneys' fees?

Mr. JACKSON. I think that is true. That is my understanding of the law. I do not know of anything that has repealed it. I investigated that question, at the gentleman's suggestion, a week or so ago, and I think that is true.

Mr. RAKER. One other question: Then the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi, that it would go to attorneys, is one that he did not make the other day when the question of war claims was up and when there was an amendment to the act as to attorneys' fees?

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman will remember I made that argument then.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] did not then state that this money would all go to attorneys, and he voted for the bill.

Mr. JACKSON. Let me reply to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. Let me say to the gentleman right here-

Mr. JACKSON. I think the gentleman can get in later. What the gentleman from California says, I think, is true, and I think the statute referred to by him a very meritorious one in some respects, and I expect to discuss it a little further along. But the argument of the gentleman from Mississippi does not fall entirely, because if you look at the latter section of the lawand I have it here-you will discover this rather curious provision in section 9:

But in no case shall the allowance exceed 15 per cent of the judgment recovered, except in cases of claims of less amount than $500 or where unusual services have been rendered or expenses incurred by the claimant's attorney, in which case not to exceed 20 per cent of such judgment shall be allowed by the court.

Mr. RAKER. Another question. Where there are extraordinary expenses the jurisdiction of the court is confined to a limit of 20 per cent-Second Federal Statutes, page 100?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes, sir; and the expenses.

Mr. RAKER. No. All expenses and attorneys' fees shall not exceed 20 per cent.

Mr. JACKSON. The court is not limited to the expenses. The 20 per cent is as to the attorney fees. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman from California that I stand upon the broad ground on this claim as I understood the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] to stand, and I stand upon it on the war claims also, that no man ought to be allowed to take a claim against the Government and pay expenses of the litigation. But here is a law by which you propose to give these men who took these claims to attorneys when it was against the law, and they presented them against the Government of the United States, and now you propose to give them 20 per cent for unusual services.

Mr. RAKER. The Supreme Court of the United States has never held in this or in any other kind of cases that it was unlawful for a man to take a contingent fee in a suit of this character

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the gentleman from California, with the permission of the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. That I agree entirely with the statement made by the gentleman from Kansas with reference to attorneys' fees. I do not believe that an attorney ought to be permitted to appear before these courts unless he is limited in the fee which he is to receive. And we had a provision in an appropriation bill carrying appropriations to pay certain claims against the Government that the fees should be limited, and I was willing to support an amendment to the bill to make it a crime for an attorney to charge more than the law permitted. I will say right here, further, with your permission, that that does not limit the attorney to 20 per cent as a matter of fact, because after the fee is paid, as the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations showed, the receipts show 15 and 20 per cent were collected on claims; and then there would be a private settlement with the client where 50 per cent would be collected in all.

Mr. RAKER. One other question, and then I am through. I agree fully with the policy of the law and the wisdom of it. I refer to this in answer to the question suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], whether the judgments awarded by the Court of Claims in Indian depredations would not go to attorneys to an extent of more than 15 or 20 per cent.

Let me say to the gentleman that that sug-Mr. SISSON. gestion was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr.

SHACKLEFORD] and not by me.

Mr. RAKER. I accept the gentleman's statement. You can not prevent men from committing crimes, and that would not be any reason why a man, after he had violated the statute, would not commit a crime afterwards.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, I did not agree to have speeches made in my time, but I want to thank the gentleman from California for his suggestion. It was at his suggestion that I first looked up the statute. The very facts that he has just stated show that no matter how careful we may be in these matters, no matter how carefully we restrict the matter of attorneys' fees and fees of agents and lobbyists, yet after all we all understand that in the long run in these old claims that are dug up, 40 or 50 years old, against the Government, the bulk of the money recovered goes to some one who is taking an active part in prosecuting the claims against the Government and not to the real claimant.

Now, I take it that if we do our duty at this session of Congress we will pass a law similar to this one in regard to Indian depredation claims, but one with a more rigid requirement to the effect that no man shall take claims against the Government of any kind and pay the expense of litigation. I do not object to contingent fees to lawyers, but I do object to their fostering litigation against the Government by advancing money to pay the expenses of lawsuits. The courts have always held that, except where it has been authorized by statute such as this one, such claims are champertous and void, and ought to be.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what I meant when I said that this report was unfair in the statement of the law I have already indicated to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], but I desire now to make this other statement: I think it is unfair in the fact that it seems to proceed upon the theory that these men had some rights as against the Government and would have recovered if it had not been for the word "inhabitant," which the gentleman claims was stricken out by the law of 1885. Now, the real truth is that prior to 1872 the claims of the Indians against the Government of the United States were roughly divided into two classes—those where the Government had treaty relations with the Indians and those that concerned Indians who had never treated with the Government at all.

All of the legislation to which the gentleman refers as having taken place prior to 1834 referred to that class of Indians who had treaty obligations with the Government. These were treaties made with the Indians at the close of some Indian war. They were treaties made with the Indians at the time they were placed upon the reservations where they were taken, whereby the Indians agreed that they should recompense the white settlers for any depredations committed by the members of their tribes.

Of course where such treaty relations existed it was perfectly proper for the Government to step in and undertake to determine these differences between the Indian tribes and the white settlers, but never prior to 1834 did the Government assume to pay any of these claims itself. This law was in effect from 1834 until 1859.

Mr. MILLER. Here is the statute of 1834, if the gentleman wants to read it.

Mr. JACKSON. I will read it:

Mr. JACKSON. I will read it.

Provided also, That unless such claims shall be presented within three years after the commission of the injury the same shall be barred, and if the nation or tribe to which such Indians may belong receives an annuity from the United States, such claim at the next payment of the annuity shall be taken therefrom and paid to the party injured; and if no annuity is payable to such nation or tribe, then the amount of the claim shall be paid from the Treasury of the United States.

That was the act of 1834; but in 1859, in the closing words of the Indian appropriation act, this language was used:

That so much of the act entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes and to preserve peace on the frontiers," approved June 30, 1834, as provides that the United States shall make indemnification out of the Treasury for property taken or destroyed in certain cases by Indians trespassing on white men, as described in the said act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

After 1859 no one ever thought and no one ever claimed that the Government of the United States was liable to anyone for depredations by the Indians except where the treaties made with the Indians made the Indians' property liable for those claims, and the Government undertook to administer this property and to determine the claims.

Furthermore, this act of 1834, which, it is claimed, the act of 1891 revived and made efficient again, had a provision in it that all claims should be presented within three years from the time of the injury, and now it is conceded in this report that these claims originated from 1860 to 1870, the major part of them. I read from page 17 of the report, from a statement made by the Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Thompson:

Yes; the great majority—in fact, I would not now know what per cent, but a very large per cent—of these cases are for claims where the depredation occurred between 1860 and 1875. From 1860 to 1870 is the larger part, but I should think 75 or 80 per cent of these claims were for property taken between 1860 and 1875.

And so, if the law is as I understand it to be-and there can not be any question about it—and if it is true, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] says it is, that the statute contained the word "inhabitant" prior to 1885, all of these men had more than their three years in which to present these claims, and absolutely neglected to do it.

So the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Ste-PHENS], that there is any equity involved, falls to the ground, because these men had ample time to present their claims, if they had any, and there is no merit in the claim of any equity being involved.

But the truth is, gentlemen, that all of the equity that there is in these cases lies in the fact that somebody else has been paid, and because somebody else has been paid that these gentlemen think they ought to be paid something.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JACKSON. Yes. Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I should like to know if the gentleman from Kansas, and if the committee, as far as he is advised, approve of the restriction on claims for Indian depredations contained in the words "in amity," in line 11 of the first page?

Mr. JACKSON. I will say to the gentleman that I do not approve of any depredation claims. I am opposed to all of approve of any depredation claims. I am opposed to an or them; but I can readily see that if we pass this law the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Kinkaid], and perhaps some of us from Kansas who have such claims, will be back here at the next session of Congress asking you to strike out the words "in amity," so that our people in Kansas and Nebraska may have the same benefit which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] now asks for his people.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. That is my suggestion and my position.

Mr. JACKSON. I said in the beginning that this was more than the entering wedge. It is the plain declaration of the Congress of the United States that we are now entering upon the policy of adjusting all of the claims for damages between the settlers of the West and the Indian tribes, and that the Government of the United States proposes to guarantee their payment.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JACKSON. I will.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the plain provision of the bill, and one of its main purposes, is to give those who were declared not to be citizens an opportunity to adjust their claims in cases where it has been determined that they were residents, and that they came within the other provisions of the act, and that this act specifically provides that no new case can be filedonly those already on file now in the Court of Claims are the ones to be determined and adjudicated and no others?

Mr. JACKSON. I understand that is one provision, and that is one reason why I am opposed to it.

Then where could there be any other batch of Mr. RAKER.

claims come in?

Mr. JACKSON. If you are going to pay these claims in Texas because these Indians are in amity, do you suppose that the people of Kansas and Nebraska are not coming back to have the word "amity" stricken out next year, when it was in those States that the Indians went on the warpath and destroyed the lives and property of our settlers? Do you suppose the Congress of the United States can preserve the policy of paying a lot of people who neglected to take out naturalization papers and at the same time refuse payment to honest citizens of the country who suffered at the hands of the Indians? I simply say that we are entering upon a policy of paying all Indian claims, and you can reason about it as you please, but you will come back to the proposition that if you pay these claims you ought to pay all Indian claims.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JACKSON. I will. I refused a mo Mr. JACKSON. I will. I refused a moment ago to yield because I wanted the gentleman to understand my position about his report.

Mr. MILLER. I rejoice in the opportunity to assure him that I have no personal pride in this report. I drew the report two years ago. I agreed with it then, as I do now, and I wish to say in reference to the report that after having heard the gentleman from Kansas I am absolutely certain that he does not know what is in the report.

Mr. JACKSON. That may be true, and I think there are others here who do not know and could not learn from reading the report.

Mr. MILLER. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not what I rose to ask the gentleman. I understood the gentleman to say in his opposition to the bill in committee-and he having mentioned the fact, I take it for granted that it is public property, and I am privileged to refer to it-

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly you are; I voted against it in committee.

Mr. MILLER. His position here is based upon the fact that he is opposed to any legislation on this question. Is it not also a reason that the gentleman gave in committee that his opposition to the bill was because it gave a right to recover to an inhabitant who had already filed a case and did not extend that right to those who had not filed their cases? Was not that the only objection the gentleman made?

Mr. JACKSON. No; I think not. I did give that as a basis of my opposition.

Is it not a fact on the floor of the House re-Mr. MILLER. cently he made the same objection in the same terms for the same reason?

Mr. JACKSON. I made it about a month ago, and I still make it now.

Mr. MILLER. There is nothing about it except that the gentleman may have enlarged his reasons since then.

Mr. JACKSON. I have not, although I may not have stated them all. I will say that I refuse to stand for any proposition which has for its evident purpose the satisfaction of a lot of claims that have been hunted up and brought in here by a lot of claim agents against the Government.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman allow me to read an extract from page 2328 of the Record, where the gentleman stated:

My objection was that it seemed to prefer a certain class of claimants who filed their claims at a time when they had no right to file them. I shall oppose the bill for that reason, because it is clearly in the interest of a certain number of the claims that have been filed in the court and adjudicated.

It strikes me forcibly that there is an inconsistency between passing a bill because it does not extend the right to others, does not go far enough, does not let the floodgates down completely enough, and opposing it absolutely because it legislates at all on the subject. I think the gentleman is under some obligation to clear that up.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JACKSON. Let me answer this question first.

Mr. MADDEN. But this refers and relates to the question.

Mr. JACKSON. Very well.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman if he would favor this or a similar bill if claimants in the territory he represents were permitted to present their claims at the same time?

Mr. JACKSON. I would not. I see no inconsistency in the position I assumed the other day; and with due respect to the gentleman from Minnesota, I give him the credit of thinking that he does not, either. I certainly would oppose a bill if I thought it was wrong in principle, and in addition to being wrong on general principles, it sought to prefer a certain class of people, and giving them certain advantages-giving to a lot of attorneys and claim agents a lot of claims where the real owners of which have long since passed out of existence.

Now, the gentleman from Texas seems to think that his State is particularly interested in these claims and that they ought to be paid because of certain inequalities that they have suffered and certain equities that they have for relief. But, Mr. Chairman, I hardly think that that is true.

If these men were inhabitants of the country, lawfully upon the Indian territory or in the vicinity of the Indians, it was their laches that caused them not to be citizens of the United States. The great golden West, of which so much has been said here to-day, was not made by men who went out to trade among the Indians as citizens of foreign countries, or men who went near the Indians in their vicinity for the purpose of taking Indian lands and retaining their citizenship under foreign flags. The great West was built by men who went into the West for the purpose of building themselves homes as American citizens. [Applause.] And this Government never pretended and never extended its protection over foreigners who were dealing with Indian tribes because the Indian tribes were wards of the Government. These tribes who committed the depredations in Texas were not wards of the Government. They were what Texas were not wards of the Government. They were what Chief Justice Marshall declared the Indian tribes to be in the early part of the century, that they were really nations, "domestic dependent nations," with full rights under the Constitution to treat with the Government, and we owed no more duty to protect the foreign citizen against these tribes than we do to protect the foreigner in Mexico at the present time against the depredations of Indians and the rebels under the Mexican Government.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will permit me at this point.

Mr. JACKSON. Yes; I will.
Mr. MILLER. I understood the gentleman to take the position that the report was erroneous in that for the first time-I will modify that and not say the first time, but say it attempts to create the impression that the Government prior to 1885 was liable for this class of depredation claims to inhabitants as well as to citizens, and I understood him to criticize it and claim that never prior to 1834 was the United States liable for Indian depredations. Am I correct in that?

Mr. JACKSON. That is the law as I understand it.

Mr. MILLER. And that is the basis of the gentleman's objection to the report, and upon that he bases the remarks which he made a little while ago.

Mr. JACKSON. Yes.
Mr. MILLER. Then I beg leave to call his attention to the original act of 1796, found in Statutes at Large, volume 1, page 472, section 14, all of which I will not read, but I will read part-

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.
Mr. MILLER. The first part of that I copied in the report, because that is all it seemed to me that was pertinent in this case. It is as follows:

And be it further enacted, That if any Indian or Indians, belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States, shall come over or across the said boundary into any State of Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States—

There is where I stopped in the report and put in the asterisks. I will read this so the committee may decide for themselves-or of either of the Territorial districts of the United States, or shall commit any murder, violence, or outrage upon any such citizen or inhabitant it shall be the duty of such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent to make application to the superintendent or such other person as the President of the United States shall authorize for the purpose, who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction or instruction of the President of the United States, make application to the nation or tribe to which such Indian or Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall neglect or refuse to make satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding 18 months, then it shall be the duty of such superintendent or other person authorized, as aforesaid, to make return of his doings to the President of the United States and forward to him all the documents and proofs in the case that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper to obtain satisfaction for the injury; and in the meantime in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed the United States guarantee to the party injured an eventual indemnification.

Now, if the United States guarantees all of these proceedings to the injured party that he will be indemnified, is not the United States obligated on a bond?

Mr. JACKSON. I think not. Mr. MILLER. And the same language exactly is found in the act of 1799, and also in 1802, which is practically the same as the one that he quoted from, the act of 1834.

Mr. JACKSON. Why, I have it here; it was carried up to

Certainly; and will the gentleman kindly explain how the United States can guarantee that if he has been despoiled of his property he will be paid in full for that, unless the United States can be made to do it in case the Indians

Mr. JACKSON. Why, the answer is quite simple. The language which the gentleman has just read is as plain as can be. t meant that the Government would see that the claimant was indemnified out of the property of the Indian, if he had any, but it did not say, as by the act of 1834 and as the gentleman now seeks to make the act of 1891 read, that if the Indian tribes had no property the Government would pay it out of the United States Treasury. His report-and evidently the gentleman still thinks so-would indicate to this House that the Government had all the time promised that these claims would be paid out of the Treasury of United States if the Indian tribes had not the property with which to pay them.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman guarantees the payment of a note, and the maker of the note does not pay it, does he have

Mr. JACKSON. Oh, well; that is another question. The Government did not agree to pay anybody. That is just the question. The Government only promised to see that these people were indemnified out of the property of the Indians, and the gentleman can not find a single claim ever paid out of the Treasury of the United States, unless it was reimbursable out of the property of the Indians, prior to 1834. And I read, Mr. Chairman, here from the-

Mr. MILLER. It is all reimbursable. It is reimbursable under the act of 1891.

Mr. JACKSON. I mean that it is not actually reimbursable. Mr. MILLER. It is actually reimbursable under the act of 1891. I hold here a report from the Attorney General's office showing, I presume, 150 cases there under the act of 1891 wherein the amounts paid have been reimbursed to the United States, and of which 75, probably, are from the Osage Nation.

Mr. JACKSON. If the treaty so provided, or the statutes passed by Congress subsequent to the time so provided, prior to 1834, the Government paid no claim unless it paid it out of the property of the Indians. I desire now in connection with the report of the gentleman to read from the opinion of Love v. The United States, in the Twenty-ninth Court of Claims, which contains a very comprehensive history of this entire legislation:

contains a very comprehensive history of this entire legislation;

It has been urged in argument that a departmental construction has been given to the law since 1872, of which Congress were aware when the Indian depredation act was passed; that the Secretary of the Interior had again and again examined and approved claims where the depredations were committed in time of war.

If this had been a departmental usage in the true sease of the term, this argument would be one of great weight. If the Interior Department had finally determined and paid such claims during a period of 19 years, and Congress had again and again appropriated money for satisfying such awards, it might well be said that this act of 1891 was but a continuation of an existing policy. But such was not the fact. The Secretary of the Interior determined nothing. During these 10 years he was never invested with discretion to pay one such claim; he simply took the place of a committee and investigated. Moreover, his reports were never approved by Congress; for 19 years they remained unacted upon, which indicates, if it indicates anything, that they were disapproved, and finally the Indian depredation act declared that his investigations "shall cease from the taking effect of this act."

(Sec. 13.) The fact undoubtedly is that Congress were neither satisfied with these investigations nor clear as to the legal rights of the parties, and therefore referred the thousands of cases that had accumulated for the investigation and decisions of the judiciary both as to the law and the facts.

Mr. MANN. I understand the opinion the gentleman is now reading relates to the act of 1885.

Mr. JACKSON. The acts of 1872, of 1885, and 1891.

Mr. MANN. I mean in reference to the investigation under the act of 1885

Mr. JACKSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Which a while ago was cited to us as the case where Congress had provided for the payment of certain claims.

Mr. JACKSON. That is it. Mr. MANN. I did not mention the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], although I had in mind what he said. I understood him to cite the case, and cited the same with the intention of giving the same impression, I think.

Mr. MILLER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The court says, or designs to say, that the purpose is to change in the act of 1885 from inhabitants to citizens.

Mr. MANN. When I read the report in the first instance I received the impression that the act of 1885 provided for the payment to citizens of these Indian depredation claims, but when I examined the act I found it provided for an investigation, and nothing further was ever done under the investigation.

Mr. MILLER. It was contemplating the payment by some future appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman knows how these acts get into legislative bills. We pass an item making an appropriation for some purpose, with no intention whatever of biling Congress or influencing Congress as to the policy it shall pursue thereafter, but for the purpose of obtaining information. Unfortunately, in this case the act of 1885 did lead to the act of 1891, which ought never to have been passed.

Mr. JACKSON. Then, Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman that the court put an interpretation upon the act of 1891 which they never should have put upon it, which formed an obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to pay these claims. Let me read a little further in this report.

I want to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller]. if I may have his attention, that I got the same impression from the report which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] expressed. Let me read further from this report.

Mr. MILLER. Is the gentleman reading from the report on the case?

Mr. JACKSON. I am reading from the opinion of the court, Mr. MILLER. Do not attack my statement or report, but attack the court's opinion.

Mr. JACKSON. I am citing the opinion of the court to show

Mr. JACKSON. I am citing the opinion of the court to show how accurate the report is. The opinion states:

It has also been urged that the policy of the United States for a century and more has been to indemnify those who suffered from Indian depredations without attempting to right their own wrongs and to make the Indians pay, when it can be done, for their misdeeds committed either in peace or war. And it is said that it would be most illogical to so construe the statute that when a few Indians are guilty the innocent majority of a tribe shall be charged with the consequences of their own acts.

The only policy known to the court is that of maintaining peace. The Government has virtually said, both to the Indians and to its own citizens on the frontier. "If you will only refrain from war, we will see that individual sufferers on either side shall be indemnified for the lawless aggressions of individual criminals of the other." It is unhapply too well established that these Indian wars too often have been incited or begun by our own people. In this case now before the court the claimant seeks to recover upon these facts narrated in his own evidence.

I call attention to this because I understood the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] to say that no such case as that cited by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] could occur.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman does not understand my statement any more than he understands the report made on that subject. I never made that statement. I said that so far as I was advised no such case as that was now pending before the Court of Claims, and therefore no such case could be affected by the bill. I did not think there was any such case pending, because I had not heard of anyone who knew of such a case that is pending.

Mr. JACKSON. I read further from the opinion of the court:

A company of volunteers had been quietly organized, and on the 8th day of October, 1855, they struck the first blow on a large band of Indians who professed the utmost friendship to the settlers. Those who survived the slaughter hastened to the reservation, and persuading the few who were remaining there to join them commenced their work of retaliation at that point, and then striking down the river continued it in their flight, and did it fearfully well.

Then the court says:

To indemnify such persons for losses in such a war would be to give a bounty for the encouragement of Indian hostilities.

Gentlemen, that simply illustrates what the true relation between these Indian tribes and the Government of the United States has been from the first, and that has been to treat these Indians as domestic nations and treat with them as nations. The Government never intended that it would pay people who happened to suffer by larceny of otherwise on the part of the Indians, and therefore I say that the only true policy is that if the Government now proposes to pay Indian claims it should begin at the bottom and open up the courts and the Treasury of the United States and let us have an adjustment all along the line

Why talk about the depredations of Indians in Texas from 1860 to 1870? I apprehend that no State in the Union has suf-fered so many Indian depredations as has my own native State of Kansas. In these very wars that are talked of here the fighting on Kansas soil was ten times as severe as it was on Texas soil. Not in the entire history of Indian warfare in this country have such examples of cruelty and savagery on the part of the Indians been afforded as those which occurred in western Kansas from the year 1860 up to the year 1870. And the depredations committed by those Indians can not be recompensed in money. You can not benefit the men who were settlers there by now opening the Treasury of the United States to the attorneys and claim agents.

Upon the little island of Arickaree, in the Republican River, a band of Kansas men held at bay for days and days all of the combined tribes of the Indians who inhabited those western plains. They lived upon mule meat and upon horse meat until two of their number escaped and walked over the plains to a post of the United States Army and brought relief from those savages who had attacked them, and after that these Indians were followed back into the Indian Territory and into Texas and were destroyed or captured. But by the terms of this bill the depredations committed by those Indians could not be paid for, because they were on the warpath.

Now, then, the Indians who went into the settlements and took the school-teachers from their desks and carried them away as captives, the Indians who went in and carried off the children of the early settlers of Kansas were upon the warpath, and under this bill it is not pretended that any money shall be paid for the damages that these Indians committed.

Under what kind of equities can you expect that these men who have built up their country under such circumstances as that shall now be taxed to pay a few foreigners down in Texas, or out upon the western plains, or in some other part of the country, for some property that was stolen by Indians who were not at war?

There is one other fact here that I want to mention concerning this law, and then I am done; and that refers to this provision of the bill which provides practically that the claims as adjudicated by the Secretary of the Interior shall fix the amounts to be paid.

I understand that the most of this amount of half a million dollars consists of claims due the large cattle firms in Texas for property loss; and under this bill it is proposed not only to allow these claimants to reinstate their claims, but it is proposed that the Government shall assume the burden of proof, of showing that the amount of property which was taken away was not correctly found by the Secretary of the Interior in his investigation. You are not only going to allow these attorneys and claim agents to make the claims lawful which were unlawful at the time they filed them, but you are going to preclude the Government from its right to show what the actual damage WAS.

And so I conclude, Mr. Chairman, that instead of this being a bill to do equity, it is a bill to favor a certain lot of claim agents and attorneys who presented these claims a quarter or half a century ago, who were defeated then, and who now propose, by the help of this Congress, to be reimbursed for their trouble then, and to be paid their attorneys' fees for prosecuting these claims.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate, the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. MANN. I should like to inquire how many gentlemen desire to be heard in favor of the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman desires to debate the bill further, I will ask that it be read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. I intend to debate the bill, and as I do not care to talk to empty benches, I make the point that there is no quorum present

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty Members present; not a quorum. The Clerk will call the

The committee rose; and Mr. GARRETT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Foster, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 14667, and finding itself without a quorum, the roll had been called; that 234 Members had answered to their names, and he herewith presented a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having under consideration the bill H. R. 14667, finding itself without a quorum, caused the roll to be called; that 234 Members have answered to their names, and that he presents a list of the absentees. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a request that this bill and amendments

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that can not be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Texas that no motion is in order now.

Mr. MANN. Except a motion to adjourn.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. Foster in the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before I address myself to the subject matter of the bill under consideration, I wish to remind Members that on a prior occasion in the House, and on one or two occasions out of the House, I have had the honor and pleasure of suggesting to the Democratic Party the desirability of nominating as its candidate for President the honorable Speaker of this House. [Applause.] I wish now to call attention to the fact that yesterday my State delivered the goods. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KONIG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MANN. I do not. Mr. Chairman, I desire to engage the attention of both sides of the House to the bill under consideration which in itself is important, but as bearing upon the action which this House shall take upon the bill is more important still as related to other bills, some now on the calendar and others being pressed for consideration by committees and by the House. Every new Member of this body placed upon committees where it is possible becomes subject to the pressure and the influence of claim agents, claim attorneys, and ordinary claimants. Every time the complexion of the House changes politically and new committees come in, additional pressure is brought to bear upon the new committees. That has been the case for many years and it is the case now.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MANN. I will not. When I am through making a statement I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas or any other gentleman. I desire to make a consecutive statement, something which is very often not permitted in the House by reason of inquiries constantly made from the floor, as the gentleman from Texas will appreciate.

Mr. GARNER. I suppose that the gentleman from Illinois is guilty of interruptions as much as any other Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. That is a very easy matter to state, but as a matter of fact "the gentleman from Illinois" rarely interrupts a man on the floor of the House making a consecutive statement, unless he has stopped for an interruption. I frequently quiz gentlemen who are asking unanimous consent, but seldom men who are making speeches unless they have already yielded.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a bill to provide for the payment of Indian depredation claims, as gentlemen state, to the amount of half a million dollars. Nobody knows what the amount will The total amount of the claims which can be adjudicated under the provisions of the bill as it stands is more, as I understand, than $2,000,000. By a process of reasoning they have assumed that only one-quarter of the claims would be successful. Nobody knows.

But whether it is half a million dollars or two or three million dollars, I want to call the attention of the House to the facts in regard to it.

In 1891 Congress passed a law providing for the adjudication of these Indian depredation claims in certain cases, but confined the right of the claimant to those who were citizens of the United States. Previous to that, in 1885, Congress had passed a law authorizing the Secretary to make an investigation of Indian claims, intending them to be paid out of the Indian funds, the moneys belonging to the Indian tribes who had committed the outrages, but made no provision for the payment of the money.

Now, let me take you back in history for a moment. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Miller] to-day gave the impression to me, if not to the House, that during the entire life of the country or practically for more than 100 years, with the exception of a short period of time, the man who went into the Indian country and was there injured or had his property destroyed by the Indians had a claim against the United States. But nothing is further from the fact. In 1802 Congress passed an act in reference to Indian depredation claims. It has been assumed by the gentlemen who made the report and the gentlemen who have argued in favor of the bill that it provided for the payment of claims like this. What were the facts? That act provided that if an Indian or Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States shall come over or cross the said boundary line into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy, and so forth, the Government would pay the claim, if it could obtain the money from the Indian funds, or pay it out of the Trensury, with the provision that no one could go into the Indian country except under a pass, and for trading purposes, under regulations fixed by the United States. No provision was made for the payment of any claim for outrages committed in the Indian Territory itself, or the Indian country, upon citizens who unlawfully went into that country; but if a tribe in amity with the United States broke away from its boundaries and crossed into the United States, then we provided that we would pay the claim out of the property of the Indians.

In 1834 we enlarged that by a provision that we would pay for property taken within the Indian territory, with a provision property taken within the Indian territory, with a provision that no alien could go into the Indian country without a passport from the War Department, which passport must express the object of the person, the time he is allowed to remain, and the route he is to travel, and it contained a further provision that if the injured party, his representative, attorney, or agent, should in any way violate any of the provisions of the act by taking or attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge, then he should forfeit all claim upon the United States for such indemnification.

The act of 1802 expressly provided that if the person whose property was damaged crossed into the Indian country he should forfeit all claim for damages. It fixed the boundary line between the Indian tribes or Indian country and the United States and forbade citizens or residents of the United States, except in certain conditions, going into the Indian country, and regulating trading with the Indians generally. It contained the following section, which was repealed by the act of 1834, to wit:

following section, which was repealed by the act of 1834, to wit:

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted. That if any Indian or Indians, belonging to any tribe in antity with the United States, shall come over or cross the said boundary line into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States or of either of the territorial districts of the United States, or shall commit any murder, violence, or outrage upon any such citizen or inhabitant, it shall be the duty of such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent, to make application to the superintendent or such other person as the President of the United States shall authorize for that purpose; who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction or instruction of the President of the United States, make application to the nation or tribe to which such Indian or Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall neglect or refuse to make satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding 12 months, then it shall be the duty of such superintendent or other person authorized as aforesaid to make return of his doings to the President of the United States and forward to him all the documents and proofs in the case, that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper to obtain satisfaction for the injury; and in the meantime, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guarantee to the party injured an eventual indemnification: Provided always, That if such injured party, his representative, attorney, or agent shall in any way violate any of the provisions of this act by seeking or attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge by crossing over the line on any of the Indian lands he shall forfeit all claim upon the United States for such indemnification: And provided also, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the legal apprehension or arresting, within the limits of any State or district, of any Indian having so offended: And provided further, That it shall be lawful for the President of the United States to deduct such sum or sums as shall be paid for the property taken, stolen, or destroyed by any such Indian out of the annual stipend which the United States are bound to pay to the tribe to which such Indian shall belong.

The act of June 30, 1834, regulating trade and intercourse with the Indian tribes, prohibited any foreigner going into the Indian country without a passport from the War Department or some other official named, which passport must express the object of the person, the time he is allowed to remain, and the route he is to travel. The act of 1834 repealed the act of 1802 and acts amendatory thereof.

The act of 1834 provided that the Government guaranteed the persons injured by Indian depredations in certain cases an eventual indemnification; and if the amount of the claims could not be paid out of annuities from the United States, then such claims should be paid from the Treasury.

Section 17 of that act is as follows:

Section 17 of that act is as follows:

Sec. 17. And be it further enacted, That if any Indian or Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States shall, within the Indian country, take or destroy the property of any person lawfully within such country, or shall pass from the Indian country into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, such citizen or inhabitant, his representative, attorney, or agent may make application to the proper superintendent, agent, or subagent who, upon being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, shall, under the direction of the President, make application to the nation or tribe to which said Indian or Indians shall belong for satisfaction; and if such nation or tribe shall neglect or refuse to make satisfaction in a reasonable time, not exceeding 12 months, it shall be the duty of such superintendent, agent, or subagent to make return of his doings to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that such further steps may be taken as shall be proper; in the opinion of the President, to obtain satisfaction for the injury; and, in the meantime, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed the United States guarantee to the party so injured an eventual indemnification: Provided, That if such injured party, his representative, attorney, or agent shall in any way violate any of the provisions of this act by seeking or attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge, he shall forfeit all claim upon the United States for such indemnification: And provided also, That unless such claims shall be presented within three years after the commission of the injury the same shall be barred. And if the nation or tribe to which such Indian may belong receive an annuity from the United States, such claim shall at the next payment of the annuity be deducted therefrom and paid to the party injured; and if no annu

There came the time when in the progress of the development of this country much land was taken and settled upon west of the Mississippi River. People did go into the Indian country, and although it was, theoretically at least, against the law, Congress knew that people would go into the Indian country, and they permitted them to do it, taking their own chances. The last Democratic Congress before the war, in 1859, repealed the provision carrying any liability against the Federal Treasury for any Indian depredation:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the act entitled "An act to regulate trade and intercourse," etc., as provided that the United States shall make indemnification out of the Treasury for property taken or destroyed in certain cases by Indians trespassing on white men, as described in said act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to impair or destroy the obligation of the Indians to make indemnification out of the annuities as prescribed in said act.

From 1859 to the present time the law has been, and is now, that the Federal Treasury does not attempt or pretend to indemnify the man who voluntarily puts his head into the lion's mouth or walks into the Indian country and takes his chances of making a fortune on the one side or losing his property on the other. That law of 1859 is still the law of the land. But in 1891 we provided that various claims might be submitted to the Court of Claims-claims that were years old, most of them occurring between 1860 and 1875, a majority of them probably occurring during the time of the Civil War. There is no more reason for paying those claims in favor of foreigners who were forbidden to go into the Indian country, who were without legal license, who took their chances and lost, then there would be for paying claims for all the property destroyed in the Civil War. [Applause.]
We have paid the claims of our own citizens who took chances and went into this Indian country, but this bill proposes that having forbidden foreigners the right to go into the Indian country and stir up trouble, having forbidden them the right to do it, we shall now, after they went into the Indian country and stirred up trouble with the Indians and lost by it, recompense them for all their losses. Who can defend such a bill on principle? Their report says that we should treat the foreigners in the same way that we treat our own citizens. We forbade them to go into the country. We did not desire them stirring up trouble with the Indian tribes. We tried to keep them from it. If they went there, they went there on their own responsibility and should have taken their own chances. treat very well everybody who has a real claim against the United States. It is those who have doubtful claims of long standing that we examine with great care. At the time these claims accumulated there was a law expressly providing that the Government would not be responsible for depredations or damages-that we would not assume the liability. It is now said because, under the influence of the claimants, our own people, we have paid them back their money, we should also pay foreigners, when the law provided, first, that we would not be responsible for any damages; and, second, that the foreigners must keep out of the way. Oh, I know it is easy to give some individual case, as has been done, of some man who thought he was a naturalized citizen, who thought that he was a citizen of the United States, and to present a hard case of some man who held office, who was elected supposing that he was a citizen, and tell how it is an injustice to him.

Perhaps it is, so far as comparing him with others. But the great mass of these claims are not in behalf of people who thought they were citizens. They are in behalf of claimants who knew they were foreigners, knew the law forbade them to go into the Indian country at all, but who, lured on with the hope and desire of wealth, which lures men at all times into temptation, went there, taking their chances and knowing that the law expressly provided that if they did the Federal Treasury should not be held responsible. I know what chances some of those pioneers in the West took. No one has greater respect for them than I have. I think the man who settled a new country exhibited more bravery and underwent greater trials with less reason for enthusiasm than he who marches in line of battle and takes his life in his hands there. I was raised, myself, not in the far West but in the new country, when no man thought for a moment of going through a year without the deadly trouble of miasma, ague, and fever, and the thousand and other ills which come with them. Health entire for a year—no one had it. It left its mark, and many have suffered troubles as men always do, but remember that in the end those who succeeded received rewards which are not easy to obtain otherwise and elsewhere. There is, in my judgment, no reason which can be given why we should commence to open the Treasury of the United States for the payment of these old claimsone-half a million, perhaps, here, as stated on one side; two or three million, perhaps, as stated on the other side—when by striking out four words in that bill as an amendment, at the other end of the Capitol, it could increase the claims to $10,-000,000 or $12,000,000. I am in favor now of closing the doors of the Federal Treasury to those agents and attorneys who, through contracts or purchases, own great quantities of claims which they say we ought to pay out of the Treasury for the benefit of the poor and the innocent, but which, if paid, would never be seen by the poor or the innocent. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he has finished his statement.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. I understood the gentleman to offer as a particular objection to the report of the committee that the statutes heretofore passed by Congress did not contemplate that the United States should indemnify the people who had been injured by Indian depredations prior to 1891.

Mr. MANN. I hope I did not so mix it up. I did state under the law prior to 1859 the United States Government did make itself liable under certain conditions.

Mr. MILLER. Then the gentleman desires to have his statement such as to show that from 1796 until 1859 the Government itself did obligate itself to pay these claims, provided the Indians did not?

Mr. MANN. I stated before, and if it is any benefit to the gentleman I will state it again, that up to the act of 1834 the Government made no provision for the payment of any claim which arose in the Indian country; that from 1834 to 1859 it did make provision and from 1859 to the present time it has made no provision except under the claims act of 1891. Now, is that sufficiently explicit?

Mr. MILLER. I think it is. In that connection I would invite the gentleman's attention to part of the statutes which he has cited in 1902, which is found on page 144—
Mr. MANN. It is section 14 of the statute I have here.

Mr. MILLER. This was enacted first in 1796-

Mr. MANN. I have it here.

Mr. MILLER. And reenacted in 1790 and reenacted in 1802. Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And the part to which I invite his attention in this connection is the following:

Provided, alrays, That if such injured party, his representative, attorney, or agent, shall, in any way, violate any of the provisions of this act, by seeking, or attempting to obtain private satisfaction or revenge, by crossing over the line, on any of the Indian lands, he shall forfeit all claim upon the United States for such indemnification.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has read it correctly.

Mr. MILLER. And, also, I find these words:

And in the meantime, in respect to property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guarantees to the party injured an eventual indemnification.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman still reads correctly. The trouble with my friend from Minnesota is—and that is the trouble with his report made on this bill in a former Congress—that he sees something in it somewhere that pleases his fancy, and there

What is this about? The gentleman has not stated, but I will state what it is about. I stated it to the committee before, and if the gentleman had been familiar with it he would have understood. The claims that are there referred to are these:

That if any Indian or Indians-

This is a part of the sectionbelonging to any tribe in amity with the United States shall come over or across the said boundary line into any State or Territory inhabited by citizens of the United States and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States—

And so forth.

What was the line? The boundary line between the Indian country and the States and Territories of the United States; and if an American citizen went to the Indian country under this act and there his property was lost, he had no claim. But if the Indians, belonging to a tribe at amity with the United States, came over on the east side of the Mississippi River out of the Indian Territory, or east of where the Indian Territory was, and took property, the man who lost had a right to indemnifica-tion, providing he himself did not seek any means of revenge. But all of these claims would not have been covered by that act.

Mr. MILLER. I have no controversy with the gentleman on that statement.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose the gentleman could have on a question of fact.
Mr. MILLER. The impression has been attempted to be conveyed to the House by the gentleman from Illinois that under no circumstances did the United States Government guarantee the payment of these claims. The law is plain and clear that there was a right of recovery only when the Indians passed over the line where they ought not to be in all the cases prior to 1834. What I desire to state further in this connection, Mr. Chairman, is that with slight modification that is the We have no Indian area in the country and no law now. white area.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman find any provision to-day for paying any depredation claim? Suppose it occurred yesterday; is there any provision for it? Suppose there had been any depredation since 1890, is there any provision in the law, or does this bill pretend to make any provision for any such claim?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly not.

Mr. MANN. There has been no law providing for it since 1859. Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment,

I do not know who drew this bill. It has been introduced by various gentlemen in the House, but whoever drew it drew it very skillfully. I take it it was a claim agent who drew it in the first place. It omits entirely a provision that was in all the previous laws, that if the claimant himself was unlawfully in the Indian country he could not recover. This bill provides that the provisions in this act shall not extend to any person whose property when taken was unlawfully in the Indian Ter-I called the gentleman's attention to the fact that ritory. I called the gentleman's "Territory" should be "country."

Possibly that was an inadvertence, but it was no inadvertence of the man who drew the bill and put in that if the claimant himself was unlawfully in the Indian country he could not recover. That was designedly fixed that way, although the law had never allowed any claim on these Indian depredations where the claimant himself had unlawfully gone into the Indian country. I now yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris].

Mr. FERRIS. I merely wanted to make an observation.

The gentleman seems to be indulging in a good deal of delight-

Mr. MANN. I do not indulge in that persiflage.

Mr. FERRIS (continuing). When he says there is no law now permitting any citizen to recover from any depredation received at the hands of the Indians. That is so, but there has been no occasion for any such law since 1891. They are practically all allotted. They are becoming civilized. Prior to that the conditions were very much different.

Mr. MANN. We appropriated here the other day $300,000 or $400,000 for Indian relief and for the civilization of the Indians and various things of that kind. When the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] wants help, and very properly, I think, to open the doors of the Treasury for the benefit of his State, he takes that side, and when the interest is on the other side he takes the other side, and I would do the same thing if I were from his State.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman speaks of the act of 1834. I have said, and I still say, that there is no provision that the Government would consider any claim whether it originated east or west of the territory. I would ask him now if he ever knew of a claim that was made prior to 1834 that was not paid out of the funds of the Indian tribes?

Mr. MILLER. Of course I can not. I am not familiar with all of it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas is correct. Under these prior acts it was obligatory upon the Government officials if the claim was allowed to pay it out of annuity to the Indian, if there was such an annuity.

Mr. MILLER. Practically the law of 1891.
Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He is not familiar with the law.

Mr. MILLIER. I might do better for him and state that to-day I hold in my hand 200 of these cases that the Government has paid since 1891.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman has read the act of 1891, which provides that, but he has not read the subsequent act of Congress, which provides that those claims shall not be paid out of the Indian funds unless the Secretary of the Interior believes it can be done without injuring the support and civilization of the Indians. He is not paying it because of that provision, which the gentleman had not succeeded in putting into Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House longer. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 17 minutes remaining. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield hive inhities to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner].
Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma has yielded me five minutes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is usually very courteous when it comes to interruptions. But a moment ago he would not yield to me when I sought to interrupt him, when he was trying to make the impression on the House that the reason for the report on this bill by the committee, as made up at the present time, was the fact that it was composed of new Members, and that claim agents and claim lawyers and Members of Congress who were interested in claims had brought pressure to bear upon new Members, and therefore this bill had been reported when it should have remained in the committee.

Now, what is the history of this legislation? The gentleman's side of the House has been in control here for the last 16 years. There has been a report upon this bill, favoring this identical legislation, from his side of the House, when the majority of the committee was composed of trained men, such as the present Vice President of the United States [Mr. Sherman], when he was chairman of that committee, when the House was in the control of the Republican Party; there was a unanimous report from that committee twice within the last seven years. That bill has been considered in this House, and even under suspension of the rules, when it took a two-thirds vote, even with the chairman of the committee, Mr. Shemman, against the bill, it lacked only 8 votes of passing the House, Democrats as well as Republicans voting for it.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. GARNER. I do.
Mr. JACKSON. I presume the gentleman is aware of the fact that the present Vice President of the United States, when chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, signed a minority report against this bill?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; I just stated that when the gentleman interrupted me; that even with the opposition of the chairman of the committee himself, he having, as we must concede, greater influence with his own committee than anyone else, the committee nevertheless reported this bill after due consideration from his committee, over his protest, and that this House, a Republican House, under suspension of the rules, voted on it. and in that vote it lacked only eight votes under a suspension of the rules, where it took a two-thirds' vote to put it through.

Mr. JACKSON. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee had unanimously reported it.

Mr. GARNER. If I made that statement, I made it errone-

Now, again, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke] has been chairman of that committee. His committee, under a Republican administration, with the Democrats joining with him, at the last session of the last Congress reported this bill. and it was on the calendar for passage when that Congress

I may say further that the present committee contains members who have been on that committee for years, such as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. The Republicans and Democrats have joined in a report on this bill; and so the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is undertaking to mislead the House when he undertakes to convey the idea that the new members of that committee have forced this bill out without due consideration.

Now, what is this bill? If the act of 1891 was advisedly passed, then there is no reason on the face of the earth why this bill ought not also to pass. What did the act of 1891 provide? It provided that citizens of the United States might recover. Every other act that had been passed by the United States Congress provided that "citizens" and "inhabitants" might recover. The Court of Claims decided that the word "citizen" should not include "inhabitants," and I will give you, gentleman, an illustration from my own county, where

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GARNER. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. A man living in my own county, who has been county judge of the county, who has been foreman of the grand jury, who served in the Army for four years, brought a suit under the act of 1891. The proof was complete, but the Court of Claims held that because he landed here when he was 2 years old he could not recover under that act.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.
Mr. FERRIS. Is it or is it not a fact that when the Republic of Texas relinquished its government and became a part of our own Government it was the general belief that that agreement or act which admitted Texas to the Union conferred citizenship on their residents at that time?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, that has been the general understanding, and the courts of our State have held it to

Mr. FERRIS. I will ask the gentleman what the Court of Claims has held in that regard?

Mr. GARNER. The Court of Claims held that a citizen of Texas, a State which came into this Union not as the other States have come, but by a convention or agreement of two Republics, was not a citizen if, when he originally came to Texas. he was not, under the general laws of the United States, a citizen of the United States. In other words, if a man landed on Texas soil from a foreign country before it became a part of the United States, although he was a citizen under the law of Texas, although he was a citizen of the Republic of Texas, the Court of Claims held that he could not recover under this act and was not a citizen of the United States.

Now, I submit to any fair-minded gentleman if it is just that the act of 1891 should be complied with and the Government should be held responsible to the citizens of this country; is it just that you should not extend that same right to a man who landed here when he was a baby, and should he not recover for his property upon the same ground?

As to whether the act of 1891 is wise or unwise I will not undertake to discuss, because I think the gentleman from Minnesota has covered the case clearly. If I understand the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if he had been a Member of Congress in 1891 he would have opposed the original act that authorized citizens to recover. Am I correct in that assumption?

Mr. MANN. Some people are supposed to be prophets of the future. I am not even a prophet of the past. I will say to the gentleman frankly that I am opposed to this bill.

Mr. GARNER. Ah, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman avoids the

Mr. MANN. I do not avoid the question. The gentleman might as well ask me some crazy, fool question about something that I do not know. The gentleman is able to tell what he personally would have done under certain circumstances 20 years ago. I prefer to live in the present. I know what I do ncw, not what I would have done under supposititious circumstances 20 years ago. Come down to date. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois does not always know what he ought to do at the present time.

Mr. MANN. That may be true.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois is unwilling to say whether he would support the act to authorize a citizen to Has the gentleman any reason to offer why an inhabitant of this country should not have the same protection of our laws against our wards that a citizen has? Can the gentleman offer any reason why an inhabitant who has lived here all his life should not have the same consideration and protection at the hands of this Government that a man has who was born in this country? The gentleman asks me what I would have done. I do not know what I might have done in 1891, when this bill was under consideration, but I do say that there is no justice or right in the proposition that you will pay one man when the Indians take his property, and that a neighbor who lives beside him, who happens not to have been a citizen of this country, must go out of court upon the ground that he was not a citizen and not entitled to the same consideration as a person who happened to be born here. That is the position I take with reference to this bill.

Whether the act of 1891, as originally passed, was a correct policy for this Government or not I am not prepared to say; but I do say that no man can stand on the floor of this House and approve of the act of 1891 and justly oppose this bill.

[Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Sisson having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4239. An act to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The committee resumed its session. Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything at all on this bill. I intend to consume only a few minutes now.

The question at issue really is, Shall we now treat citizens who have been knocked out on a technicality precisely as the act of 1891 treats all other citizens?

The act of 1891 must have been based on the fundamental proposition that so long as Indians are wards of the Government, so long as they are under the supervision of the Government, ment, and so long as they commit raids and depredations, and felonies and larcenies upon their white neighbors, that long it shall be the duty of the Federal Government to indemnify the sufferers at their hands.

What is the situation? Claims have been brought under the act of 1891 on the theory, and I believe it is the correct theory, that the Federal Government should be as much responsible for what its Indian wards do as that a father should be responsible what its Indian wards do as that a lattice accorded theory or an for what his son does. Whether that be a correct theory or an forwhat his son does. Whether that he accorded theory or an accordance of 1801 made that provision. What incorrect theory, the act of 1891 made that provision. does this act do? It simply reenacts that law and inse does this act do? It simply reenacts that law and inserts the word "inhabitant" along with the word "citizen."

What was the situation? Men living in Texas who came into the Republic by a treaty or agreement or convention between the Republic of the United States and the Republic of Texas came in with the full belief and expectation that they were to be full citizens of the United States. Most of them were full citizens of the United States, but while the Republic of Texas was in existence, practically all the time they were engaged in some character of warfare. Some of the people of that State have neglected the full legal requirements with reference to citizenship.

What happened? The Indians that lived in the very county in which I now live went into Texas, scalped the people, stole horses, stole cattle, burned their houses, burned their crops, stole little children, stole little girls and held them for ransom. Then what happened? These people proceeded to Washington, to the Court of Claims, and tried to recover an indemnity against the Federal Government under the act of 1891. The Court of Claims held that there was some technicality which prevented their establishing their citizenship. who had held office, who had sat on the jury, who had exercised the right of citizenship for 40 years, who had had property destroyed by the Government wards, and they were knocked out on a bare naked technicality.

This act simply reenacts the act of 1891, broadening the scope to this extent, so that an inhabitant, as well as a full citizen, can go in and recover from property actually lost.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. In what year were those depredations committed?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Texas and those who were then on earth will know better than I. I think it was from 1850 up to 1865 and 1870, and perhaps as late as 1880.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They occurred in the sixties, about the close of the war.

Mr. COOPER. These depredations were committed, then, before the act of 1891 was passed?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. We have had legislation ever since 1799; in some periods it applied, and in some it did not.

Mr. COOPER. Some of these claims are 40 years old, or were 40 years old at the time the law was enacted.

Mr. FERRIS. Some of them; no, not 40 years old; they arose in 1880, and the act was passed in 1891. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] this afternoon at great length-I do not know with what consistency-debated that it was neither now nor in the future or in the past the duty of the Federal Government to pay for what the Indian ward does. My reply to that is that the act of 1891, and different acts ranging all the way from 1799 to the present, a period of 113 years, has recognized it. I have no disposition to evade the real issue. I think they ought to recognize them. I think the Federal Government, so long as it maintains and holds supervision over the Indians, ought to pay for these depredations. Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

In 1859, the last Democratic Congress before Mr. SISSON. the war, dld not they explicitly repudiate the doctrine and provide that no more money should be paid out of the Federal Treasury for Indian depredation claims?

Mr. FERRIS. There was some legislation on that point. Mr. SISSON. Is not that the fact?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the act before me.

Mr. SISSON. But is it not the fact?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the act before me, and I do not adopt the gentleman's statement.

Mr. SISSON. The statement the gentleman made was that from 1799 down to the present time they had recognized it, which is not the fact.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not say that; I said that off and on for the last 113 years they had recognized it.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman that I do not believe there ever was a time or can be a time when the Federal Government should be made liable for torts committed by Indians or anybody else.

Mr. FERRIS. I heard the gentleman say that in his speech and elucidate it. I differ with the gentleman, with his logic, with the principle, and with the law. The Congress of the United States differed with him in 1891 when they passed an act providing exactly for the things that the gentleman says he is opposed to. Now, I want to make it as clear to the House as I can that this is nothing but the reenactment of the statute of 1891, except that it allows the man in Texas who was knocked out on a bare technicality to be treated as other citi-

Mr. JACKSON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FERRIS. Yes.
Mr. JACKSON. Of course, the gentleman recognizes the fact that the act of 1891 did not by its terms create any liability against the Government; it was only by the construction of the court that it was held that it went back and created a liability that was created by the act of 1834-a thing that Congress never thought of.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not remember as to that; perhaps the gentleman is correct. This reenacts the law of 1891, but makes it apply to noncitizens the same as citizens.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.
Mr. CALLAWAY. There is a question that occurs to me that you are leaving out in this bill the character of citizenship that should be allowed to come in with the same claim of justice as these people now have. I refer to those that did not file their suits under the act of 1891. They were on the same footing as the people you let in, except that they knew they were noncitizens and knew that the law at that time did not allow them to come in. When you enact this law you allow any man to come in who violated the statute. Now, will not these people who did not come in come here next year and say that they have the same right to have their claims adjusted, and will you not have a bill come in for these people next year as you have for these people this year?

Mr. FERRIS. I understand the gentleman. Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, and now the gentleman is arguing that we ought to allow these in, because they are on the same footing, so far as justice is concerned, with the men we did let in, and next year will not the gentleman have just as good an argument for those we are now excluding as he has now for those that we then excluded?

Mr. FERRIS. These people are on the same footing with those the gentleman has in mind save in this respect, that these people have filed their suits and have done some overt act toward the establishment of their claims, have manifested diligence, whereas those who have not manifested diligence are guilty of laches and delay in seeking to recover, and I think those laches might well foreclose against them.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Was it a lack of diligence on the part of those people when, under the law, they knew they could not come in, to have failed to have come in and bring suit ?

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is talking about something that neither he nor I know anything about. No one knows what was in the minds of those people who did or did not bring suit. The fact remains that some of them elected to take action and some did not. It may be assumed those that did not act have no claim.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it not a fact that in practically all these cases that went out of court on the ground of citizenship the claimant supposed when the suit was brought that he was in fact a citizen of the United States?

Mr. FERRIS. I think that is quite true. He went into court and in good faith prosecuted his suit clear from the first to the last, and, finally, however meritorious his facts might be, however great the loss may have been that he suffered, however atrocious and vicious the assault or villany or crime or theft atrocious and vicious the assault or villany or crime or theft that was committed, he could not recover because he was not, under strict construction, a citizen of the United States. This act merely enlarges the act of 1891 in the interest of justice.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hope I may proceed for a few moments. The gentleman consumed a whole hour and I do not care to yield to the gentleman at present. I will yield to him a little later. I am not misquoting the gentleman. If to him a little later. I am not misquoting the gentleman. If I were misquoting him or quoting him at all I would not refuse to yield under any circumstances. I do not intend to proceed longer than for a few minutes.

It has been asserted here, I think too often, that this bill in all probability would appropriate or snake out of the Federal Treasury all the way from half a million to eight microst of dollars. That is not so. It does not snake anything out of the Treasury. It merely gives the right of recovery to these men who, diligently and earnestly trying to recover their property, have actually prosecuted their claims clear to the highest court provided therefor and at the end of that litigation find themselves in the deplorable attitude of being knocked out on a bare technicality.

The best estimate that the committee could give, and the estimate I think is a correct one, is that of the $2,000,000 of claims that are now on file we thought we were very generous in assuming that only one-quarter of them would ever proceed to judgment and recovery. Therefore, a very generous and liberal estimate would be that the sum that could be recovered would be $500,000. This House knows, and every practicing lawyer knows, that a claim 30 or 40 years old is almost impossible to establish. Nearly every such claim falls for want of evidence.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I hope I may go on for a moment.
Mr. MADDEN. I just heard the gentleman say that they estimated that not more than $500,000 of the $2,000,000 of claims could be brought to judgment. How did the gentleman reach that conclusion?

Mr. FERRIS. We went upon the assumption that indulging in the wildest hopes there could not be more than one-quarter of the pending claims collected, and no other claims than those pending can come in. I really think a much smaller sum than that will actually be collected.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, in the report of this committee the statement to the effect that this involves only possibly judgment to the extent of $500,000 is simply the wild hope indulged in by the committee which made the report.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is very far from the facts. That is the Assistant Attorney General's opinion, and he has great knowledge and information upon the subject, and if the gentleman had read the report he would know that fact

This provision does not apply to any new suits. This does not encourage new litigation. It merely seeks to do common justice to the suits now pending. They must prove amity before they can recover. That serves as sufficient protection, and it ought to remove the objection of this House to this bill, and I believe it would if the House could understand that this limitation is not going to be struck out in the Senate and the amendment then agreed to by the conferees and the House committee when the bill comes back. I think on a former occasion when the bill was up for consideration under unanimous consent the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] made some suggestion along that line; that if he had some intimation from the committee that we would not permit the Senate to so amend it as to knock out these restrictions, as I now recall and if I am mistaken he can correct me—it was his belief that the bill would not be unjust or seriously objectionable.

Mr. MANN. I think I did not make any such statement. called attention to the fact then, if the gentleman desires me to state

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to have the gentleman state, for I want to get his present view, whether I am correctly interpreting him or not.

Mr. MANN. That by an amendment striking out four words of the bill you could increase the liabilities under it about $10,000,000; and if that amendment were made in the Senate it would then be a privileged matter in the House to move to concur in the Senate amendment some day in the closing hours of the session, when the friends of the bill were on hand and its opponents were probably out in their districts.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, I think the gentleman can now be assured, and I think most of the committee are now in my hearing and they can assure the gentleman and the committee that no such change in the bill will be permitted, and if they did it is within the power of the gentleman to make the point of order and send it to the committee, which I know he would, with the usual vigilance he employs here.

Mr. MANN. He would certainly if it was within his power, but the difficulty is that the bill is in that shape where it does not require unanimous consent to move to concur in the Senate amendment, if the amendment be offered striking out a portion of the bill. If the Senate had inserted a new provision in the bill and it came here, it would have to go automatically to the committee from the Speaker's table, except by unanimous consent, but the claims agent who drew this bill drew it in such shape as to avoid thus coming in conflict with the rules of the House.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the gentleman with great length and energy proceeded time and again to state that the bill was drawn by some claims attorney.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman would not think that I say that with any feeling of criticism at all. Most of these bills are drawn by people interested in them, some bright person, and if I had a claim against the Government of this particular sort I might employ a good claims attorney to prepare the bill. I do not think it is any criticism, and far be it from me to criticize the committee in reference to the preparation of the bill or the report on the bill. I have been working on the drafting of bills too long not to know what valuable assistance you get from other people.

Mr. FERRIS. And if I had it left to me on the question, I would appeal from the gentleman's decision to have it drawn elsewhere and have him draw the bill himself. However, the criticism he makes in reference to this bill has no application to me, because I did not draw the bill, I did not introduce it, and no living soul has ever even asked me to be for it or support it.

I do not think it will help a single citizen in my State; if it will, I do not know it. No one has solicited me on the subject. Of course, it would be all right if they did, but they did not, either in my district or the district of any of my four col-leagues. I have the utmost and most explicit confidence in the gentleman from Texas who introduced this bill, the chairman of the committee

Mr. MANN. We all have.
Mr. FERRIS (continuing). And I feel sure that this committee ought to be satisfied in reference to the bill. I do not know, but I suppose the city is infested—

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FERRIS. I do.
Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that no claim attorney appeared before the committee favoring this bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And I want to say since the bill has been reported—that is, a similar bill in the last Congress covering amity-that the claim attorneys have ceased absolutely to have any interest in the proposition.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it is undoubtedly true the claims attorneys would like to have us bring in all the old, dead, stale ciaims in the United States, and snake out of the Treasury $6,000,000 or $5,000,000; but this bill does not do that. It merely lets the adjudicated cases that have gone out have a new trial, and they ought to have a new trial, and I do not care what anybody says about it. This thing of every time a piece of legislation comes in here and somebody gets up and assaults it, charging some outside, extraneous influence is being wielded over the Congress-I do not take much stock in that. I believe that to-day is a little better than yesterday, and that to-morrow will be a little better than to-day; and I do not take any stock in the proposition that this Congress is filled up with dishonest men. I do not believe that, and I believe there are but few, if any, dishonest men here. I believe when a man advocates a bill in this House he believes it is right, and I think there are few exceptions to that rule.

I think we have had in the last few months occasions where men ran in at the last moment when some bill was under consideration and shouted out "monopoly," or shouted out "graft," or shouted out some other scurrilous criticism. This House ought not to be stampeded by any wild and fantastical statement. This House ought to take up every bill on its own merits and deal with it, and any extravagant or unusual statement made at the last moment by some man who knows nothing about the measure, by some man not even on the committee, by some man who has not heard the debate, is not fair to the House, is not fair to the committee, is not fair to the authorunfair to the advocates of the bill and cheap advertisement for the Member crying out.

They can roll it under their tongue until they are tired, but it is not right.

Now, my district has less interest, I expect, in this bill than that of any man in this House; at least no district has less interest. However, I believe the passage of this bill, if it does anything, will bring some temporary, if not lasting, criticism or at least some unkindly reference to some of the Indian people who live in the western part of my district. So, if I pursued my own inclination for a moment, I would oppose the bill rather than favor it. But rather than pursue my own inclination, rather than to shield the people of my own district against injustice of old, I think this bill ought to pass. People who have been knocked out of court on a bald technicality after they thought they were citizens ought to have them adjudicated when their they were citizens ought to have their claims adjudicated when their nearest neighbors have had their claims adjudicated and paid.

All along the border, and my district adjoins Texas for 150 miles, are people who have lost their children through Indian depredations. Quanah Parker, who died last year, lived in my county. He was chief of the Comanches. His own mother was stolen from a Texas family and brought up into the Indian country and lived there until she died.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. JACKSON. These matters you have been speaking of, including the capture of those noted Indians, occurred in time of war, did they not?

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. They occurred at a time when certain of these Indians were charged with crossing over the Red. River and burning down houses and stealing horses and cattle and bringing them back into Oklahoma.

Mr. JACKSON. That seems to me to be pretty good evidence that they were on the warpath.

Mr. FERRIS. There is no question of that. Mr. JACKSON. This bill does not propose to do anything

Mr. FERRIS. A little band of Indians would run across the Red River and steal a man's entire drove of horses in a night and run them back into the Indian country. You can pass the matter by on a technicality if you will, but you will probably do a good deal of injustice if you do not pass this bill.

Mr. JACKSON. Do you not think it would be an injustice to the people who did suffer such injuries during the time the Indians were on the warpath to refuse to pay them and pay these people who suffered damages from thieves when the Indians were at peace?

Mr. FERRIS. These Indians were at peace.

Mr. JACKSON. Judging from what the gentleman says, I would not think they were at peace.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman say that the people over in Virginia were at war because the Allens over there elected to murder the judge and kill all the officers of the court?

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman's argument was, as I understood, that, paying the Indian depredations committed, as proposed in this bill, it is pretty poor policy not to continue it to the people of Texas, say, who lost their lives and property, when the Indians were at war.

Mr. FERRIS. This does not apply to Texas any more than it applies to Kansas. And it does not apply to Kansas any more than it applies to Nebraska. It is a general bill.

Mr. JACKSON. The gentleman knows that they apply to only those applicants who at the expense of time, and the attorneys who were prosecuting these claims, filed their claims before the Government after they were refused in the courts.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman misstates the situation. I can not yield to the gentleman for that.

Mr. JACKSON. Does the gentleman pretend to say it applies to any other class of claimants?

This is a reenactment of the statute of 1891, Mr. FERRIS. broadened, as I have told you. I can say for one of the Indian Committee, and I think others are here who will join with me in the same thought, that the Senate will not be permitted to load this bill by including all of those cases outside of the amity cases. And I hope the House will pass the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, one moment. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Ferris] declined to yield to me a moment I have always been willing to yield to him, but he declined to yield to me.

I want to state to the committee that my friend's argument on laches is one that has no place in this debate, because negligence to pursue a right follows the creation of the right under the statute, and if this bill becomes a law it will come in poor grace for anybody who votes for this bill, because a few men sought to pursue a right which the statute did not give, to deny a right to all the hundreds of people and thousands of people to whom this act of 1891 did not apply. And when you do, you are going to set the precedent, and there will be no laches argued against them, because Congress gave them no right; and when you do you will have the floodgates open, and those Members who vote for this legislation will be compelled, in order that they may be consistent, to vote to give these men opportunity to recover damages. My opinion is that the amount of those damages will run from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000 on these old claims, and then where will it end?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take only five minutes of the committee's time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] a question first, if he will permit me.

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would be glad to have the source of the gentleman's information, as to where this $60,000,000 of claims will come from? Who presents them?
Mr. SISSON. The report states that there is between $10,000,000 and $11,000,000 of these suits that were brought in some other form against the Government and dismissed on technical grounds.

Now, the man who is not a citizen, the man who had nothing to do with the litigation-because the act did not apply to himwill carry you back to all these scalps that have been talked about here, to all the depredations of Indians committed upon people who were not citizens; and there is no telling where the matter will end. Forty or fifty or sixty million dollars are the amounts of the various estimates made by some gentlemen who are on the committee. I have discussed the matter with them, but I personally know nothing on earth about it myself.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state that no claims have been suggested of any character whatever that would indicate any amount like that.

Mr. SISSON. The claim now before us aggregates $11,-000,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, there is a vast unrecess
$11,000,000 and $60,000,000.

Mr. SISSON. That is true. I am glad the gentleman from [Laughter.] It shows he is Mr. SISSON. That is true. I am glad the gentleman from Kansas has made that discovery. [Laughter.] It shows he is making wonderful progress when he knows that there is a difference between $11,000,000 and $60,000,000. Now, if you have $11,000,000-

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, of course I yielded to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] only for a question, and I do not want my time to be taken up in this way.

Mr. SISSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not know I thought I was talking in my own time. My statement was that $11,000,000 was the amount of claims that had been filed and dismissed. I get that from this report. Those were claims of people who had no standing under the act and who did not pursue their rights. If you open the floodgates and they do attempt to pursue all their rights that were occasioned by virtue of Indian depredations, it might go into the hundreds of millions. I do not know where it will end. It is purely a matter of speculation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] does not know, and no member of this committee knows, where it would end.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Mississippi does not contend that this act opens the door wide beyond the act of 1891, does he?

Mr. SISSON. There is some difference of opinion as to the number of claims involved. The committee, I understand, insists that but half a million dollars will be recovered. matter of fact, the entire claims aggregate $1,500,000, but about one-third of this, or about 40 per cent, is what it is believed will be actually recovered if the suits are prosecuted.

But as to the precedent set, however, and as to the reason why you should let down the bars to let in the claims, it will let in the $11,000,000 of claims, and if you allow a portion of them, you certainly ought not to deal unfairly and refuse to allow the others to come in.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is just one matter that I wish to add to the argument that has been presented.

The gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. Sisson] has discussed the amount of these claims. It ought to be conceded and settled without any dispute that the only matters involved are the claims of those whom the Court of Claims adjudicated not to be citizens. Their claims must have been on file with the Court of Claims. Otherwise they can not be considered.

The Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, and the Indian Office estimate that these claims amount to about $500,000, now pending, undetermined, and unsettled, and that are to be adjusted by this bill, and no one to-day is able to say that the amount recoverable under this bill will be $100,000 or $500,000 until the Court of Claims determines the exact amount.

The largest possible amount is $500,000.

Now, on the question as to residents not being entitled to recover, the original act said that the claimants must be citizens of the United States. It excluded those who had made application to become citizens. If at the time of the depredation a man had declared his intention to become a citizen, he lost his claim. If upon the day that the depredation was committed he was not a citizen, but in the following week he took the oath and became a citizen of the United States, his claim was defeated under the act of March 3, 1891.

To confirm that fact I call the attention of the committee to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upon that question. It shows how unjust it is that a man who with his family went into that frontier country and helped to settle it up shall have his claim rejected because on the day the depredation was committed he had not received his final papers. His neighbor, side by side with him, and whose property he went out to protect, has been granted compensation by this Government; but the man who had not received his final papers upon the day when the depredation was committed is deprived of his right, no matter what occurred afterwards. Is that fair? Is that just?

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Johnson v. The United States, decided on January 13, 1896, and reported in One hundred and sixtieth United States, page 546, decided this question. The court used the following language:

Congress did not by the act of 1891 assume in behalf of the United States responsibility for all acts of depredation by Indians, nor grant to the Court of Claims authority "to inquire into and finally adjudicate" all claims therefor. It carefully specified those which might be cate" all claims therefor. It carefully specified those which might be considered by that court.

By the first clause jurisdiction is given of "claims for property of clitzens of the United States taken or destroyed." But claimant had no such claim. It is for property of an alien taken and costroyed.

True, he is now a clitzen and was at the time of the passage of the act. But the language is not "claims of citizens for property," which might include his case. The definition is of the character of the claim and not of the status of the claimant; if the property was not when taken or destroyed the property of a citizen, a claim therefor was at that time clearly outside the statute, and, while the status of the claimant may have changed, the nature of the claim has not.

At the time this act was passed, in 1891, he was a citizen. A short time after the depredation was committed he was a But the Supreme Court holds that at the time of the depredation he must have been a citizen. I know of the case of one claimant, Robert Johnson, who lived at Susanville, Lassen County. He has lived there for over 25 years. I have seen him serve on grand juries and petit juries, and he held lution.

county offices for over 10 years. He presented his claim for depredations. When he presented his claim he supposed he was entitled to his, the same as the rest.

At the time he lost his property he was rearing and protecting his family. When the agent came to take the testimony he was asked who his father was. He came to this country as a boy and was unable to prove that his father had been naturalized, was unable to find the papers, although he was able to prove that his father voted, and that in one of the Eastern States his father had served upon a jury. He had a just and honest claim for property absolutely destroyed, amounting to over $10,000 at a low estimate. His widow, who now lives in that country, ought to have some consideration. Although he took his case before the Court of Claims, they held that he was unable to determine his citizenship at the time of the depredation, notwithstanding the fact that he was a citizen for years and participated in the Government. He could not find his father's naturalization papers, and therefore his right was lost.

This proposed legislation changes no right; it gives the naturalized citizen or the man who is not a naturalized citizen only the right, only the same protection, that his neighbor, a citizen, who was living by his side had. It gives him the same right as the American citizen who, living as his neighbor, had already obtained by virtue of the act of 1891 and the decision of the Court of Claims. This is an honest, just bill to the man who went to the western country and helped build it up, allowed better the time a networked altieur but who went to though not at the time a naturalized citizen, but who ought to be given the same right as those who were citizens and be entitled to the reasonable compensation for the property lost. Of course, the whole matter is to be determined by the judgment of the court from the evidence presented.

Mr. MADDEN was recognized.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor, but I am willing to yield to the gentleman for the purpose of making the motion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am willing that the gentleman shall take the floor on the next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Why not dispose of the bill to-night?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden] will probably take an hour, and it is now nearly half

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois will not talk an hour.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I will talk an hour or an hour and a half, if permitted; but I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Texas to move that the committee rise.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then, Mr. Chairman, I renew my motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Burke of South Dakota) there were 49 ayes and 17 noes.

So the committee determined to rise.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. Hughes of Georgia baving taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Foster, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 14667) to amend an act providing for the adjudication of claims arising from Indian depredations and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee has had under consideration the bill H. R. 14667, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 18661. An act to provide for an extension of time of payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, as provided for under an act of Congress approved June 21, 1906.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate Committee, as indicated below: S. 4239. An act to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Gov-ernment publications; to the Committee on Printing.

METROPOLITAN COACH CO.

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the reso-

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 489.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to furnish the House of Representatives with a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2904) entitled "An act to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 11, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting estimate of appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Interior to assist members of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa Indians in North Dakota to settle up and improve homesteads taken upon the public domain (H. ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT TAFT (S. DOC. NO. 552)

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask to have printed as a Senate document an address by President Taft delivered in Concord, N. H., on the 19th of March last.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor is entered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, on behalf of Mr. BAILEY, asked that he be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and Mr. BAILEY was excused.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, on behalf of Mr. BRYAN, asked that he be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Public Lands, and Mr. Bryan was excused.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, on behalf of Mr. Warson, asked that he be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, and Mr. Warson was excused.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, on behalf of Mr. Lea, asked that he be excused from further service upon the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on the District of Columbia, and Mr. LEA was excused.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the following assignments to service on the standing committees of the Senate be, and the same are hereby, made as follows:

Mr. Lea, of Tennessee, to Committees on Military Affairs and Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. Watson, of West Virginia, to Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. Watson, of Myest Virginia, to Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, Pensions, Indian Affairs, Industrial Expositions, Conservation of National Resources, and Forest Reservations and Protection of Game.

Mr. Smith of Arizona, to Committees on Public Lands, District of Columbia, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Geological Survey, and Railroads.

and Railroads.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that I may be excused from further duty upon the Committee on Education and Labor and the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. It is owing to great committee duties on committees other than these two that I make the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Delaware is complied with, and he is excused from further service upon the committees named.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that upon Monday next, immediately after the routine business, with the consent of the Senate, I shall wish to address the Senate upon the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroads engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia.

QUORUM OF COMMITTEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolution No. 280, submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke], coming over from the last legislative day with a motion pending that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask that the further consideration of the resolution may be postponed until to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order is made.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 18956, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes

Mr. WARREN. Before proceeding further with the bill, I ask the Senate to turn back to correct a date on page 7. In the amendment of the committee, in line 22, after the word March," I move to strike out "second" and insert "twenty-hird," and, in the same line, to strike out "seven" and insert third. ten," so as to read: "March 23, 1910." The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the committee as amended is agreed to. The pending amendment is the amendment of the committee, to strike out the proviso, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 13, page 9.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this bill as it came from the House contained a proviso that upon and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be 10 regiments of Cavalry and no In other words, the House of Representatives thought that the present military force of the United States ought to be reduced by five regiments of Cavalry.

There is a great deal of difference of opinion, difference of statement at any rate, as to what five regiments of Cavalry cost the United States per annum. I think that the cost of a cavalryman may be safely placed at about $1,200 a year in continental America and some 20 per cent more in the Philippines. But however that may be, and whatever may be the amount of money that would be saved per annum by the bill, it will be a very considerable amount, very much needed now, and still more to be needed after a little while, after certain recent legislation of the two Houses goes into effect.

I am a firm believer, Mr. President, in the idea that the House of Representatives of this Government, the only branch of the Government which is directly elected by the people, ought to hold the purse strings of the Nation. I believe that the Government of the United States would be very much better if the House of Representatives were to assert itself and insist upon its constitutional right to hold the purse strings. In Great Britain every muniment of English liberty owes its existence to the insistence of the House of Commons, the only existence to the insistence of the House of Commons, the only body there directly elected by the people, upon this principle. Tawney, at that time chairman of the Appropriations Com-

There is not one single solitary institution of political or civil liberty dear to the liberty-loving English-speaking race that is not due to the fact that the House of Commons always insisted upon this principle.

Under the Constitution itself the House of Representatives is in control of money bills. It is empowered to originate bills which, "raise revenue." This is a historic phrase and means the same as "supply bills" or "money bills," "raising revenue" wherewith the Executive can "carry on the Government" and pay its various agents. Under the Constitution the Senate of the United States is given power to amend such bills. This power to amend has been abused to the point that it frequently amounts virtually to origination. It has happened more than once that the Senate has struck out all except an enacting clause and substituted an entirely new bill.

In opposing the Senate committee amendment, which is to strike out the House provision for the reduction of the Army by these five Cavalry regiments, I am advocating not only the principle involved, but I am also advocating the particular legislation upon its own merits. I merely mentioned what I did because one of the objections that has been made to it was that the House of Representatives was legislating upon an appropriation bill. The House of Representatives ought to legislate upon appropriation bills, wherever it has no other way of insuring and enforcing its will and the will of the people whom it directly represents except by control of appropriations, and it is following the long-beaten path of the progress of the English-speaking race when it does that. But, in addition to that, there is no reason why, even if the principle be not well stated by analogy, the United States should have any greater Army now than it had prior to the Spanish-American War, except that it ought to have about 10,000 additional men in the heavy Coast Artillery. I want to see the Army of the United States reduced to what it was then plus about 10,000 men in the heavy Coast Artillery. I believe, situated as we are and enjoying a continental insularity, that it is wiser to spend such money as we propose to spend for defense-and we ought to make that ample-in the way of fleets to seek our enemies at sea and there sink or cripple them than it is to permit them to land with the hope of whipping them after they have landed, though I have no doubt of the fact that in the long run we could whip them after they landed. army once landing here could never get away unless in ships, and then only if the enemy held command of the sea. be perfectly willing to see the money that we save by this House proviso go into a battleship, an additional one for defense; I would be still more willing to see it go into a great many other things of more importance to the American people than either.

Mr. President, while I am on this subject I propose to direct my remarks a little bit outside of the immediate question. lay down the proposition that this is the most extravagant Government that the white race is carrying on anywhere on the surface of the earth to-day and with least excuse for large expenditures per capita, extravagant in the expenditure of money, with an extravagance that is growing day by day, with additional employees, additional salaries, increased salaries, increased provisions for all departments of the Government of the United States. I hold in my hand a little book, which is very interesting, which I recommend to Senators to read, containing some lectures delivered at the Columbia University of New York by Henry James Ford, sometime professor of politics in Princeton It is entitled "The Cost of Our National Govern-University. It is entitled "The Cost of Our National Government." I think some of you will be a little bit astonished—none of the older Members of the Senate will be—to learn how much money this Government does spend, what it amounts to per capita, and how it has grown not only absolutely, but per capita.

The net disbursements of this Government in 1878 were $236, 964,327; in 1888 they had grown to $259,653,959; in 1898 they had grown to $443,368,582; and in 1908 to $659,196,319.

To put the comparison in another way-

I am quoting now from a statement of George B. Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury under President Roosevelt, which follows this statement and is quoted in this book-

To put the comparison in another way, which even more graphically illustrates the expansion, the growth in ordinary expenses—

Ordinary expenses-for carrying on the Government, excluding interest on the public debt, but including payments for pensions and for many public works, was from $135,000,000 in 1878 to $638,000,000 in 1908, an increase of nearly 400 per cent in a generation.

Meanwhile, Mr. President, the increase of population during this period, during which expenditures increased 400 per cent, mittee of the House of Representatives, made March 4, 1909.

In no period, except in time of war, have the expenditures of our National Government increased so rapidly, both in the aggregate and per capita, as these expenditures have increased during the past eight years.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator? Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, has the Senator from Mississippi overlooked the fact that in those years there has been this great growth in the country of river and harbor improvements, of the Panama Canal, and other works of that kind that are unusual and exceedingly valuable?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not overlooked it. On the contrary, I have just stated that, while the country was increasing in population 84 per cent, so out of all comparison was the increase of expenditures, that they were increasing 400 per cent-four times as much and more.

Former Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, in a speech delivered upon this floor on April 10, 1909, said:

The rapidity with which our national expenditures have increased within the last three years is a source of anxiety if not of alarm. Simultaneously with the reduction in receipts of $60,000,000 from 1907 to 1909, we have had an increase in expenditures of $120,000,000.

Growing out of that speech there was inaugurated a sort of "joint high committee" for the purpose of investigating expenditures and reducing them. The Senate repented of its reformation soon afterwards, and this great high commission, composed of the chairmen of several committees and all that, was allowed to go into "innocuous desuetude" at the beginning of this Congress—the Congress in which we are now serving.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.
Mr. WARREN. May I say, there, that the committee which the Senator terms "a joint high commission" met during the last Congress and acted as the Senator says. It provided for a joint legislative commission to work up economies, budgets, and so forth, but its work was never acted upon at the other end of the Capitol, nor was there any corresponding committee to which measures might be referred for conference in the usual So when the Senate met in the present Congress it seemed to be satisfactory—we have heard no word to the contrary on either side of the Chamber—that that committee should be dropped until we could get cooperation on the House side through the appointment of a similar committee-a budget committee, if you please.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming evidently has not accurately taken the spirit in which I am making these remarks. I am not attacking the Senator nor the Republican Party nor anybody else. I am arraigning the method of administration of this Government, and I am as well aware as is the Senator from Wyoming of the fact that most of these expenditures grow out of the disposition of the individual Members of Congress in both Houses to get everything out of the National Treasury they can for their States or "districts," for the purpose of making themselves strong at home. I am well aware of the fact that part of it grows out of this, too, that the Federal Government has no budget of any description; it does not attempt to adapt its expenditures to its revenue in any way; it divides responsibility in each House amongst members of committees, who are instructed by the rules of the Houses themselves to keep their proceedings secret; so much so, that it is against the rule of both Houses to mention anything upon the floor that happens in a committee. raigning the system whereby this sort of thing grows up; and in order to reach the arraignment I am furnishing you with a picture of the thing. I stated, in connection with that committee, that it had been allowed to go into innocuous desuetude; and with that statement surely the Senator from Wyoming will express no difference

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator— Mr. WILLIAMS. Whosoever's fault it was, this seeming effort to do something died out, died aborning almost. Now, I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. If I have misunderstood or misrepresented the Senator, I beg his pardon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I did not say "misrepresented";
I said "misunderstood."

Mr. WARREN. The only reason why I sought to interrupt the Senator was that there has been some criticism directed, I think unduly, to the older Members of the Senate because of the dropping of that committee, and I wished to have it understood how and why it was dropped. That was all. So far as the statement made by the Senator as to extravagance, and so forth, is concerned, I take no issue with him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I want to carry on the painting of the picture, and I leave that question for future discussion, merely with this remark, that, so far as I am concerned, I do not thin that committee ought to have been dropped.

The per capita expenditure has increased from $1.34-

Per head now, this is-in the period from 1791 to 1796 to $8.91 in 1907.

And it is more to-day.

If you count a family as consisting of five persons, that means that the Federal Government is taking from each family in the United States more than $44.55 per annum, and yet we boast that we are comparatively not tax ridden. I state that there is not a civilized Government on the surface of the earth any more heavily tax ridden, especially when you add to the $44.55 per annum which the Federal Government expends the municipal, the State, and the county taxes in this country.

A great many people, I will say, lay a great deal of this blame upon pensions. We have got to be fair as we go along. Of course I think that recent pension legislation—and I voted against it—was uncalled for; but the ratio of expenditures on account of pensions has declined since 1869 from $4.32 per capita to $1.92, so that this great increase in expenditures is not even to be excused upon the ground of gratitude to the old soldier. It is nearly altogether due to legislative, executive, and Army and Navy expenses; and the excuse made for so much of them as grow out of the Army and Navy is that we "went a world powering" here a few years ago; that we are very proud of having gone a world powering, and that now, the first time in our existence, we are a world power." We no more of a world power now than we were before the Spanish-American War began. We may have a little bit higher reputation as a world power amongst some ignorant people somewhere, but not amongst intelligent people. We went out into a war with poor, old, decrepit Spain, ready to totter and fall at any moment if pushed. All that was necessary was to meet her, either on land or on sea, and she would shrivel, because there was no power, no strength behind her nor in her. Nobody who has any sense has ever considered the Federal Government of the United States or the people of the United States any stronger in a military or naval sense because they whipped Spain. The State of New York could have done it by itself and unassisted, so far as that is concerned; and I think if Texas had been allowed a free sweep at it she would have made a very good fight.

This thing of world powering I have a contempt for. I have a contempt for anybody, individual or nation, who does not go along and attend to his own business and let other people alone. I have just as great a contempt for the white man's undertaking to rule the brown man in the brown man's country as I have for any sort of legislation looking toward making the brown or the black man rule the white man in the white man's country.

What have you done as a result of this world powering? Have you increased your military strength? No; you have decreased it. What sort of a game of chess were you playing? Before that you had all your men in line and you could make whatever gambit move you pleased. Now, you have subordinated your entire game to a pawn called the Philippine Archipelago and another pawn away out in front of your men and beyond support by them called the Hawaiian Islands. You have not added to your strength a particle. You have added to your weakness. No possession that you took has added to your strength except Porto Rico. That does, to a certain extent, do away with the necessity of quite so large a fleet in defense of the American Mediterranean, and what hold you have on naval stations in Cuba, to a large extent, strengthens you there. It has not been any time since an officer of this Government said-and I believe he is right-that if we engage in a war with any great power anywhere near our match in military and naval strength, the first thing we would have to do would be to let the Philippines go and to look for their recovery after beating the enemy elsewhere when we came to make a treaty of peace at the end of the war.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Delaware?
Mr. DU PONT. I should like to say to the Senator from Mississippi that, if he will look at the Hawaiian Island from a military standpoint and investigate that subject, he will see that they are really the key to the security of the whole of our Pacific coast, and that the naval station there is not out of line in the defense of the country, but, on the contrary, it is a most important point to the whole of our western seacoast.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Hawaiian Islands are 1,200 miles, at their closest point of contact, from the Pacific coast; they are nearly half as far away from us as is the coast of Ireland; and if we got into a war at all and undertook to defend the Hawaiian Islands, we would have to divide the fleet for the defense of continental United States and thus weaken We would have to weaken our fleet for continental defense in order to defend the Hawaiian Islands at all, except in so far as they were defended by fortifications and by land troops. They have increased the necessity for soldiers, and they have increased the necessity for a fleet. Before that we were not in the position of Great Britain, of whom Rudyard Kipling says that she must defend "a far-flung battle line." We had a continent which was substantially an island of defense. We were defended by 3,000 miles of water on one side and by from 5,000 to 6,000 miles upon the other; and we could say to Europe, "Let America alone; do not interfere with it; that is the part of the world where our hegemony we propose to assert, and then-

Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield in a moment. And then, as a corollary of it, we were able to say, "We do not interfere with your affairs there"—in Europe or Asia. That was Jefferson's notion, John Quincy Adams's, and President Monroe's. I yield

Mr. BRIGGS. I should like to ask the Senator if he considers, from a military point of view, that it is no advantage to us to have the Hawaiian Islands in our possession rather than in the possession of another country?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No military advantage. The Hawaiian Islands can not defend the United States. The United States will have to defend them, if we ever get into any war, by subtracting from both the Army and the fleet to do it.

Mr. BRIGGS. If the Senator from Mississippi will excuse me, I take issue with him there. I think the Hawaiian Islands would constitute a menace in the hands of any nation other than the United States. As he very well says, they are thou-sands of miles away. There is one point between our country and Asia that affords a station for coaling, and that is the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let Asia alone, and we would not need any station. It is a station to go from.

Mr. BRIGGS. It is a station to come back to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; it is a station to come back to if you are there, but do not go there.

It is a station to come back to. Mr. BRIGGS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Long ago, in 1897, when we were centemplating taking the Hawaiian Islands, I said upon the floor of the House of Representatives that it was the first step in girdling the globe with stepping-stones on which to plant the American flag. I said the next step would be the Philippine Islands. and I remember that a distinguished Republican rose upon the floor of the House and asked by what warrant or right did the gentleman from Mississippi charge a Republican administration in power with the idiocy of contemplating such a step. I said by the right and warrant that a student of history has, who has studied the history of other nations pursuing a course of that sort from step to step. I then said, "After the Philippine Islands the next stepping-stone will be a point upon the mainland of China," and you Senators will yet see it unless we stop this I am a little outside of what I was talking about. foolishiness.

Mr. BACON. In connection with what the learned Senator from Mississippi has said about the debates of that day, I recall his memory to what I know is equally familiar to him as it is to me-that the statement recently made by a military officer, to which he has alluded, is nothing new; that both on the floor of the House and on the floor of the Senate, when the question of the acquisition of the Philippine Islands was acute, the statement was made time and again that the acquisition of the Philippine Islands would be the greatest step in the way of weakening our military power that could possibly be undertaken by the United States Government; and it is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, to sum up that phase of the argument, we are less of a war power to-day for any purpose of national defense or national aggression than we were prior to the Spanish-American War, because we have got pawns out in the middle of the chessboard that would have to be protected or surrendered and to the defense of which our whole game must be subordinated.

I want in connection with this immediate question, from which I have strayed, to quote the language of a distinguished Senator. I am sorry not to see him in his seat. He was then a Member of the House of Representatives. I refer to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burton]. He was speaking of the habit of the Senate to increase appropriation bills as they came from the House. Now, understand me, I am not charging the Senate with anything. I know how it happens for the most part. Members of the House themselves come over and beg Senators to increase the very things they failed to have increased in the House and they let this body of the Congress, which has the longer tenure of office, face the issue. I am merely stating the facts, and I am stating the importance of the House maintaining the control of the money bills and taking the responsibility and abiding by the responsibility and fighting it out to the end.

I hope that in connection with this particular matter the House of Representatives will sit until the end of its term and will let the military appropriations bill go without enactment rather than to permit the Senate to put the five regiments of Cavalry back after it has taken them off of the list of expenditures. My injunction to my friends in the House is to control the purse strings of this Nation.

It is not to be wondered at-

Said the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron], then a Member of the House of Representatives

It is not to be wondered at in this year 1908, with all these defects in our system, with the growing wealth of the country, with the demands everywhere for these extravagant expenditures, that the appropriations for the coming year should mount up to more than a billion dollars; and it is an impressive lesson to this House—

The House of Representatives, in which he was speaking-that we should call a halt. The first place for action, as I maintained, is not to yield the prerogative of the House to the Senate.

Let the relations between the upper House and the lower House, as they are sometimes called, be fixed, as they should be. Let this House, which is responsible to the country for the initiative of measures for revenue, be also responsible for the aggregate amount of appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Mississippi inform me of what particular use the Senate is in connection with appropriation bills if it is to accept them from the House and pass them as they come?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate has many uses outside of that. Mr. WARREN. Why send the appropriation bills here at all if the Senate is not to participate in their framing?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate was not intended to be of any Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate was not intended to be of any use in connection with bills raising revenue, except for the purpose of amending them by way of limitation and not for the purpose of originating new sources of expenditure. It is hard to draw the line, but there is a vast sight of difference between the power of amendment so exercised as to remain a power of amendment and a power of amendment so constantly and chronically exercised as to become and to constitute a power of origination.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. This matter now before us is not such a case as the Senator inferentially quotes. Here is a case where the Senate proposes to fulfill the law as it stands and appropriate the money for the Army as the Congress of the United States has constituted it. On the other hand, the House undertakes in an appropriation bill to put in general legislation which, by its own general rules and by our Senate rules, should be excluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the House has not violated a single rule of the House in putting this in. The House has a set of rules and it has a committee instituted for the purpose of bringing in special rules in cases of emergency to vary the standing rules. This particular provision was in order under the House rules as a "limitation on expenditures." The regular course was pursued in the House in connection with this

Now, the Senator very ingeniously places this amendment upon the ground of support by the Senate of the law. That is not the question. The question is: When the immediate representatives of the people desire to decrease expenditures and thereby, perhaps, decrease taxation, we stand in their pathway. As to the principle of putting general legislation upon an appropriation bill, there has not been a time in the history of any English-speaking race that sought and attained freedom when the House which directly represented the people did not resort to that method when they thought the question was important enough. As I stated in the beginning, there is not a munimunt of English or American liberty that is not due to that very precedent at some time and somewhere exercised.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. This subject is comparatively new to me, and I am listening to the observations of the Senator from Mississippi with very great interest. I desire to ask him a question. Is the rule which he invokes in behalf of the House of Representatives to be applied conversely; that is to say, if the House authorizes the expenditure of $75,000,000, has the Senate any right to reduce it to $25,000,000?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I think so. I can not undertake—
Mr. CUMMINS. If the judgment of the House with regard to the expenditures of the Government is to control, why should the Senate

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate would have a right to increase or decrease. The Senator is using the word "right" in the sense of power—constitutional power?
Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To either increase or decrease. There is no dispute about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not using it in the sense of power. I am using it in the sense of propriety.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It depends upon the extent to which they undertake to amend. It is very hard to draw the line on one side of which it shall assume the power; on the other side of which it is contrary to the spirit of our institutions, when done by the Senate. But whatever that line may be, on one side of it it is a legitimate thing and on the other side of it it is a perversion of the spirit not only of our institutions but of the institutions of the English-speaking race everywhere, because this clause was put into the Constitution merely in imitation of the well-known and long-guarded powers of the House of Commons over "money bills."

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think the Senator from Mississippi quite understands my question, or at least my purpose. I think we both recognize the rule of the Constitution and we both recognize the relation of the House of Representatives to the people of the United States. The Senator from Mississippi says practically that when the House has decided that the military establishment of the United States shall be reduced with the hope of reducing expenditures, although we have the legal power to restore the expenditure or to attempt to do it. we ought not to do it in view of the relations of the House of Representatives to the people.

Now, recently the House of Representatives passed a bill en-Now, recently the House of Representatives passed a bill enlarging pensions, which involved an expenditure, as we are told, of something like $75,000,000 per year in addition to the expenditures already authorized. We took the liberty of reducing that increased allowance to something like twenty or twenty-five million dollars per year. My query is whether the same rule applies to the pension bill as is sought to be applied to the military establishment. military establishment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a question of power, yes. As a question of propriety and right, no; and the reason of it is this: The House of Representatives, directly elected by the people, is put there to hold the purse strings of the Government in the interest of the people, for the purpose of keeping down public expenditures as low as it can; and the Senate ought to remember that. But I will go further. I say if you study the institutions of the English-speaking people which gave rise to this Constitution and which gave rise to this provision, you will find that the thing of all things that the House of Commons was most jealous about was the size of the Army, and there never was a time when the House of Lords dared, even in the time when the House of Lords directly amended bills, to trench upon the question of how large a standing army they should have in Great Britain. That was a question for the representatives of the people to decide and not for the representatives of the orders, and we here, although we are not representatives of the orders, are representatives of the States, of territorialities, of sectional divisions.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me? Mr. WILIAMS. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. The Senator alludes to the constitutional rights of the House with respect to appropriation bills. freely admit I am a bit rusty concerning the Constitution. I wish the Senator would insert in the Record the part of the Constitution to which he refers. He may be right, and I should like to read it, or have him read it to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall be glad to do it. I did not know that I needed to do it for a single Senator. I think I can repeat it substantially from memory:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Mr. WARREN. That does not say "appropriation bills."
Mr. WILLIAMS. I had no idea it would be necessary to read the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator treated the subject as if it applied to appropriation bills as well as revenue bills. Does the Senator think that appropriation bills must, under the Constitution, originate in the House?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Bills making appropriations are bills which come under the term "raising revenue" as much as bills providing revenue. They raise revenue for the Government by appropriating supplies out of money in the Treasury. If no money is already there, then supplies must be raised by tax When an appropriation bill comes to the Senate it comes as it passed the House, and when the Senate makes any change in it it is entered as an amendment upon the House bill. has never been any dispute about the fact-the Senate never has disputed it—that the House alone has the right to originate bills making appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The Senate has originated appropriation bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not general appropriation bills. Mr. WARREN. It is a matter of habit, of general practice, as I agree, that they originate in the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not time to go into that now.
Mr. WARREN. But there is nothing in the Constitution which provides that appropriation bills shall originate in the

Mr. WILLIAMS. A revenue bill as defined in Great Britain, from which we got the idea, was not only a bill levying a tax, but a bill making general appropriations raising or supplying revenues to the Executive, and the Senate of the United States, from its very first session down until now, has recognized that principle, and this is the first time I have ever heard disputed the proposition that a general appropriation bill has to originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WARREN. I am not disputing-

Mr. WILLIAMS. And in the Senator's entire service here there has not been a general appropriation bill considered by this body that did not originate there, because this languagebills raising revenue-covers both descriptions of money bills.

I am willing for the Senator to quote from Mr. WARREN. practice; I am willing that he should quote the British Government; but I do not believe that in the Constitution an appropriation bill is confined for its origination to the House; hence I ask the Senator to confirm his assertion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the practice is not owing to the Senate's construction of the Constitution, the practice never would have existed, because there was no other basis upon which the Senate would have founded the practice; and I leave the general practice of the Nation in construction to answer the Senator. By the way, if the Senator will turn to Woodrow Wilson's book upon our constitutional Government he will there find, though I am not certain-it has been some time since I read it-quite a history of this matter.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. I should like to ask the Senator if the book was written before or after 1910?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am sometimes funny myself, but right now is not the time.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, I wish to say something in response to the question propounded by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. The Senator from Iowa asked the Senator from Mississippi if by the reasoning which he was then pursuing it would not be equally true that the Senate could not with propriety reduce an appropriation made by the House.

I simply wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this fact: All students of English constitutional history will recall that originally the taxes were levied by the Crown. As the interests of the English people developed, there arose a contention on the part of the House of Commons, which was recognized, that no tax should be levied without the consent of the representatives of the people as found in the House of Commons, and incidentally that no appropriation should be made.

Now, the point is this: That contention was not because of the right claimed to fix the amount which should be appropriated, but to limit the amount. In other words, the entire priated, but to limit the amount. In other words, the entire interest was that it should not exceed that which the House was willing to appropriate. Therefore, if the Crown, to whom these supplies were granted, should have said, "I will not use that much of it," it would have been in no manner in contravention of the contention of the House, which claimed itself the right to fix the amount of the appropriation. It is only when it exceeded it that the principle would have been destroyed, not when it was made loss when it was made less.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I am going on to draw the picture of national extravagance as well as I can. Mr. Ford says, and says with absolute truth:

It appears from statements compiled under the direction of the appropriation committees, in the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, that the number of new offices created in excess of those abolished aggregated 10,682, with salaries aggregating $9,087,987.50.

The Official Register for 1909 (commonly known as the Blue Book) contains a list of Federal officeholders aggregating 370,065.

Over a third of a million.

In 1816 the number was 6,327; in 1863, 49,212. From 1871 to 1881 the number increased from 53,917 to 107,095.

Double.

In 1899 the number was 208,215.

Nearly double again from 1881 to 1889.

So in the decade to 1909 the number was increased by-

Not to but-by 161,850, or over 16,000 a year. Increased by over 16,000 new office-holders a year for that period.

Mr. President, the money that gets into the Treasury and is paid out of the Treasury does not fall like the manna of God from heaven did upon the children of Israel in the wilderness. Every single dollar of it must come out of the pocket of some citizen of the United States somewhere. Whether it be levied directly or indirectly not a dollar can get into the Treasury till that is not taken first out of the pocket of the citizen. There may be citizens so foolish that they do not know they are paying the taxes because they are levied indirectly, but that does not change the fact that they are paying them, and it does not change the fact that they are just that much poorer at the end of the year than they would have been if they had not paid

Now, I want to call your attention especially to the expenditures on legislative account. Members of the House and the Senate are sometimes very critical when it comes to the expenditures of the Executive department and the judicial department, but I am sorry to say that we are not very critical about our own expenditures, and I say advisedly "we" and "our," because what is the sin of one of us has been largely the sin of all of us.

As a result of such tendencies the expenditure on legislative account is enormously greater than in other countries.

What follows will astonish, I think, some of the older Members of the Senate, as it astonished me when I first read it, because it was a fact I had never looked into.

The British Estimates for 1907 provide a gross allowance of £42.543—

Which is $212,000for the House of Lords-

This much-berated House of Lords. Very frequently when we are making stump speeches we thank God that the American people are not taxed to support a perfectly useless House of Lords, and we glow eloquently about great expenditures hung upon the backs and the bellies of the people by the House of Lords-and £60,250 (about $300,000) for the House of Commons. These amounts cover the cost of the official staff of the Houses of Parliament. For maintenance of buildings, furniture, fuel, stationery, printing, and general supplies, there are additional estimates aggregating £196,170—

Which is $980,000-

a total of $1,492,000-

Not quite a million and a half-against which there is a set-off amounting to £32,450 (about $162,000) for fees, as under the rules certain charges are made for committee hearings on private bills.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President— Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me finish this, because I want the attention of the Senate to it.

Thus, the net charge upon the public treasury for the Parliament of the United Kingdom—

Now stop and think a minute before I finish reading this. The United Kingdom takes the place of a Federal legislature and of State legislatures. It does what both do in this country, and that is not all. It takes the part of an imperial legislature, and it governs from British East India to far-away Australia. Yet the net charge upon the public treasury for the Parliament of the United Kingdom was $1,330,000 as against $13,788,886 here, a million and a third in Great Britain for both houses, and thirteen million and three-quarters for these two Houses.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me? Mr. WILLIAMS. You must remember that Mr. WILLIAMS. You must remember that the House of Lords has 615 members, the Senate at this time only 96. The House of Commons is composed of 670 members, and the House of Representatives of about 400; I have forgotten just how many-390 and something.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me?
Mr. WHLIAMS. I yield.
Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator tell me the salaries of the Mr. WARREN. Will the Sena members of the House of Lords?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The members of the House of Commons receive no salary, neither do the members of the House of Lords.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. Mr. WILLIAMS. But, as I understand this statement, salaries are not counted in.

Mr. WARREN. No; but let me ask another question. Mr. WILLIAMS. This is a little over ten times as much for our Senate or House of Representatives as for the British House of Lords and the House of Commons.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator let me finish my question?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.
Mr. WHILIAMS. Yes.
Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator then have Members of Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator then have Members of the Legislature of the United States, our Congress, the Senate and the House, without salaries, so that only rich men could occupy those places?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. WARREN. That is the key of the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is not.

Mr. WARREN. The British Government spends so little

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator can go off and multiply $7,500 by 96, and then he can multiply $7,500 by 400, and he can add the two together and he will find out that he is vastly mistaken in thinking salaries here have much to do with it.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. That would not give the result. There are several things to add to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Besides that, if I understand this statement, the salaries are not counted in the other expenditures.

Mr. WARREN. I take no issue with the Senator about the growth of expenditures in House and Senate, and indeed of extravagance, and I certainly will not take issue with him that both sides are equally guilty, if either one is, but the figures which the Senator quotes from a foreign country are in no way applicable here, unless, indeed, we propose to adopt their customs and have only those born to the manner and who are able to furnish themselves and their employees free of cost to their Government and serve here in the American Congress, instead of the men who can be and are supported upon their official salaries, thereby making the positions open to rich and poor

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in a certain sense what the Senator from Wyoming has just said is true. I ask the Senators' attention. In order to make the comparison accurate, in order to make the two statements strictly analogous, you would have to add to the expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Federal Government the expenses of the two houses of 48 States.

Mr. WARREN. Then, would the Senator abrogate the States and have the United States Government handle the affairs of all the political divisions of the Union?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Senator ask me whether I would have the United States Government attend to the affairs of all the States, or did I misunderstand him?

Mr. WARREN. Would the Senator believe in the policy of abrogating the State governments and have the United States handle the civic powers of the States?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, no; I may not be a reactionary, but that is one question upon which I am not, at any rate. I would go back more and more by day and night, by week and month.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will excuse me-Mr. WILLIAMS. I am now drawing a picture of the expenditures; I am not engaged in a disquisition upon government. Mr. WARREN. I, perhaps, ought not to ask a question of that kind, but in these days of rapid change and great uplift I am never certain what may be in a speaker's mind in the way of progression.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, Mr. President, if there is anything I am solicitous about it is the happiness of the Senator from Wyoming in so far as his happiness may depend upon a placid state of mind concerning myself. I can, therefore, assure him that he need give himself no anxiety upon the subject. Whatever revolutions may take place elsewhere, and whatever revolutions may take place in my own mind I will more and more, the older I grow, be a devotee of the idea of local self-government, and instead of wanting a new nationalism I want a new stateism. I want the States to begin asserting themselves. But that has nothing to do with this question, and I shall go on now continuing to draw the picture.

There is one other thing to which I called attention the other day while the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMoot] was speaking.

The public printing of the United States is a bottomless pit of The entire amount appropriated in 1908 by the British Parliament was $3,740,000, which is three and three quarter millions in round numbers. To defray the expense of providing stationery, printing, paper, binding, printed books for the public service, to pay salaries and expenses of the sta-tionery office, and for sundry miscellaneous services, including reports of parliamentary debates, three and three-quarter millions. It is simply impossible to get at the corresponding congressional expenditures here in their utmost detail.

Remember, these figures I gave you for Great Britain were the entire printing bill of the Government, but the congressional expenditures alone here in 1908 included $6,394,810 for the Public Printer—that is, things printed for and to be distributed by Congress, executive documents coming to Congress, documents of the Senate, documents of the House, bills, speeches. These are congressional expenditures, and they are nearly twice as much as all British Government printing bills.

Now, there is a very easy way to reduce your printing expendi-I have no idea that it will be done, but it is to stop the distribution of most public documents by Senators and Congressmen and to let them be distributed by the several departments to the people, for whose use they are printed. There is no reason why Congressmen and Senators should distribute geological surveys; there is no reason why they should distribute coast and geodetic surveys; there is no reason why they should distribute Smithsonian reports; there is no reason why they should distribute farmers' bulletins; there is no reason why they should distribute agricultural yearbooks. If these various documents were distributed by the several departments to the people upon request and to the institutions of the country engaged in scientific pursuits upon their request, my word for it the publicprinting bill would fall 40 per cent the very first year.

So many of them are useless. I do not know how many tons of them are lying around the Capitol undistributed; nobody wants them; they ought never to have been published at all. If it had been left to the departments and bureaus to publish as many of them as they found from experience were requested year by year, they would not have been printed at all and would not be lying idle now.

Now, I want, before I close, to call attention to two very meritorious pieces of legislation that have been calculated to prevent the growth of expenditures; and both of them, strange to say, seem to have emanated from the same brain, the brain of a recent Member of the House of Representatives, Mr. Tawney, of Minnesota. It seems to me if they were obeyed all the time we would save a good deal. One of these provides

That hereafter no part of the public moneys, or of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made by Congress, shall be used for the payment of compensation or expenses of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, or any members thereof, or for expenses in connection with any work or the results of any work or action of any commission, council, board, or other similar body, unless the creation of the same shall be or shall have been authorized by law, nor shall here be employed, by detail hereafter or heretofore made, or otherwise, personal services from any executive department or other Government establishment in connection with any such commission, council, board, or other similar body—detailing for prsonal services from any executive department or other Government establishment in connection with any such commission, council, board, or other similar body.

Now, mark this-

In that connection let me make a statement. The Senate will, I know, excuse me for not giving the name of the complainant, because he would be discharged from the civil service at once if it were known.

I received, not over two or three weeks ago, a complaint from a civil-service employee of the Government who was in one of the departments here asking me to see if I could not see somebody and try to get him a transfer because his foreman, the chief of his bureau, every day after office hours insisted upon his driving his buggy or his carriage-some sort of conveyance, at any rate. I told the boy I was afraid to put a request of transfer upon that ground because I was afraid it would end in his dismissal from the service. That detail business ought to stop. But the most important thing I think that Mr. Tawney did in this connection was the provision which he caused to be adopted in the Congress after I left.

Now, remember, most of this trouble comes out of the fact that the United States Government has no budget. There is no correlation between the expenditures of the Government and the receipts of the Government. Mr. Tawney tried by section 7 of the sundry civil appropriation act which was passed on March 4, 1909, to provide a sort of budget. He provided:

SEC. 7. Immediately upon the receipt of the regular annual estimates of appropriations needed for the various branches of the Government it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to estimate as nearly as may be the revenues of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year, and if the estimates for appropriations, including the estimated amount necessary to meet all continuing and permanent appropriations, shall exceed the estimated revenues the Secretary of the Treasury shall transmit the estimates to Congress as heretofore required by law and at once transmit a detailed statement of all of said estimates to the President, to the end that he may, in giving Congress information of the state of the Union and in recommending to their consideration such measures as he may judge necessary, advise the Congress how in his judgment the estimated appropriations could with least injury to the public service be reduced so as to bring the appropriations within the estimated revenues, or, if such reduction be not in his judgment practicable without undue injury to the public service, that he may recommend to Congress such loans or new taxes as may be necessary to cover the deficiency.

I believe that may possibly be the turning point to some extent; I think it is almost invaluable legislation; I regard it as almost a revolutionary new departure upon the right side; and I congratulate the country upon the wisdom of the House Committee on Appropriations, which passed that resolution. For fear some of you may think I am partisan, I will say that it was a Republican House, with a Republican chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that passed that provision.

Mr. President, I have drawn the picture. What is the lesson from it? That we ought to strain our nerves to try to circumscribe and limit the expenditures of this Government. There is no sense in having expenditures increase 400 per cent while population increases only 84 per cent.

Where are you going to begin? I say there is no better place in the entire Government to begin than upon the standing Army. There are a great many other things, too, that we can get at later and follow this up. As for myself, I differ with some of my party colleagues in that respect. I do not believe some of my party coneagues in that respect. I do not be seen in a large navy, but I do believe in a due annual increase in the Navy, enough, at any rate, to keep it up. I do believe that an insular people, whether their island be an entire continent or a small island, should defend themselves mainly by an assertion of their sea power. I do not believe that an army is necessary to the defense of the United States Government, except to the extent that we had it prior to the Spanish-American War, plus about 10,000 men for trained Coast Artillery. In that branch, of course, you must have men who are trained for the service. I think we ought to cut as much as possible the military expenses of the Government. The so-called military expenses of the United States Government, if you count pensions as a part of them, with its little bit of an army, amount to about as much as those of the German Empire.

That is not all. After we have spent all this money during all this time, if the newspapers do not misreport things, the General of the Army reports that our Army at present is substantially worthless—that is to say, that it does not respond to what it purports to be. I do not know whether he said that; but if he did not, if anybody knows to the contrary, of course I want to be corrected. At any rate, that was in the public prints, I think, yesterday or the day before, as an utterance of the General of the Army somewhere. I hope that on this side of the Chamber and on the other side of the Chamber those of us who want the people burdened as little as possible will begin with this reduction now. If you do not begin here, where and on what will you begin?

It has been said that it would have been wiser on the part of the other House to have reduced by making some of the reduction from the Infantry instead of making all of it from the Cavalry. Perhaps that may be true; but, whether true or not, we can reduce this much of the Cavalry now and we can follow it up after awhile with a reduction of four or five regiments from the Infantry as well. We have to begin somewhere, and I do not see any better place to begin than with the Cavalry. I myself have an idea that, constituted as the United States Army is, perhaps an Infantry that rides on horseback in order to get where it is needed and is drilled in both Cavalry and Infantry tactics, is our ideal Army, considering our necessities and our lack of necessities both put together; but, however that may be, I do not think the service of the United States with regard to its military arm is going to be hurt in the slightest degree by lopping off these five regiments of Cavalry. I hope, therefore, that the Senate amendment which restores them will be voted down.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, before the Senator from Mississippl takes his seat I want to make a suggestion. I entirely agree with him in his general presentation of the fact of undue extravagance in the appropriations for the Government and in its administration, but there is one thing that must not be overlooked when the per capita expenditure of 20 years is compared with the per capita expenditure of the present day; and that is, that by a process which he and I both very greatly regret and deplore, the functions of the Federal Government have not only been increased but have been multiplied in the last 20 years, and necessarily the expenditures have more than kept pace with the per capita increase of population. The Federal Government formerly confined itself to functions which I think were within the contemplation of the founders of the Government, but in twenty years, more than in the hundred years that preceded it, I think the Federal Government has overstepped the limits originally contemplated for it, and has ranged out into a vast field of functions and activities which necessarily involve an immense increase in the expenditures, even though there were no extravagance. I think we are suffering from both. We are suffering from this vast and unfortunate increase in the functions of the Federal Government and from the very great extravagance in supplying the funds which may be thought needed for the performance of those functions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is undoubtedly a great deal of truth in that, but that does not account for the fact of the expenditures. That would account for the fact that the expenditures ought to have increased, but it would not account for the fact that they ought to have increased beyond the increase of population in a great, new country, with a high birth rate and an immense immigration rate. Then the Senator from Georgia leaves out, while he is making his statement, the fact that when the figures which I have quoted were given at the beginning of one of these periods the per capita expenditure for the payment of interest upon the public debt and for the sinking fund to extinguish the public debt, as well as the per capita for pensions, was greater than it now is.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a moment. I do not like to allow the matter to stand exactly as it now does in regard to the powers and right of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, as viewed or expressed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams]. It seems to me that, representing the Appropriations Committee for the moment, I ought to say that the House and the Senate have considered the matter before, and it is not claimed that the right of the House of Representatives to originate appropriation bills is either a constitutional right or that it has become a vested right by long practice. I ask to have a couple of paragraphs read from the compilation Precedents and Decisions of Points of Order in the Senate relating to this matter. I have marked the paragraphs I desire read. will say before the matter is read, however, that the reading will show that the Committee on the Judiciary in the House reported a resolution claiming that the House did not have the right exclusively to originate appropriation bills, but that the Senate had a right equally with the House. I now ask that the Secretary read.

The Secretary read from Gilfry's Precedents and Decisions on Points of Order in the United States Senate, page 53, as follows

The House of Representatives has assumed to itself the exclusive power to originate appropriation bills, but a plain and literal interpretation of the first clause of the seventh section of the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution, which says, "All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills," gives the power to originate to the Senate, as well as to the House. This interpretation was clearly upheld in the Senate by reports from a conference committee of March 2, 1871, and from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, April 24, 1872, by Mr. Carpenter, who said: "The fact that the Constitution so carefully provides that 'bills for raising revenue' shall originate in the House of Representatives, and made no such provision in regard to bills appropriating money, is conclusive that it was intended to restrict the Senate in the one case and not in the other." Mr. Knott, on February 2, 1881, from the Committee on the Judiclary of the House of Representatives, claborately discussed the power of the two Houses to originate appropriation bills; and the committee recommended the adoption of the following resolution relating to an appropriation bill passed by the Senate and referred to them "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building for the Bureau of Engraving and Printing":

Resolved. That the Senate had the constitutional power to originate the bill referred, and that the power to originate bills appropriating money from the Treasury of the United States is not exclusive in the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now. Mr. President, one word, and I am

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, one word, and I am through. The statement made was with regard to general appropriation bills. General appropriation bills, both in Great Britain and here, have always been upon a different basis than appropriation bills for specific purposes. I am aware of the fact that there has been some difference of opinion. There have been differences of opinion further than those indicated in the matter which has been read. The insistence upon the literal meaning of this clause has gone so far that at one time the Senate insisted that, while they did not have the right to raise revenues, they had a right to reduce them, totally forgetting the historic meaning of the phrase "bills to raise revenue," which means bills to originate revenue. I think—and with the permission of the Senate, I will try to execute the threat—that I can travel through the precedents and show that this is a very exceptional case. So far as that is concerned—

Mr. WARREN. The resolution is general, and not only applies to the specific bill but says "bills appropriating money" without exception.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says "to originate appropriations." I will go back and look through the RECORD and I will get as near as I can the body of the discussions that have taken place upon that subject, and, with the permission of the Senate, I will insert them in the Record either with my present remarks or at some later date, if the Senate will give me that permission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Mississippi leaves the floor, I should like to ask him if, in his opinion, should the House provision become incorporated into this bill and become a law, would it result in a reduction of the Army by five regiments; in other words, would the enlisted men of the five regiments be dismissed or discharged from the United States Army?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means at once, before their several periods of enlistment have expired?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Answering at first blush, I should think not; but that would be the effect of the legislation, at any rate, whether it took place immediately or whether it took place later.

Mr. FOSTER. It is provided, however, that the provision eliminating five regiments of Cavalry shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1912. Now, does the Senator think that this Government has the moral right—it may have the power; but the moral right-to dismiss those men from the service who have enlisted for three years?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly. At the end of the Civil War we dismissed hundreds of thousands of men who had enlisted for a year or two beyond what was the actual expiration of the war.

Mr. FOSTER. We have the power-

Mr. FOSTER. We have the power—
Mr. WILLIAMS. Any Government anywhere has the right to reduce its army whenever it pleases.
Mr. FOSTER. I do not doubt the power; I did not ask the Senator about the power, but I referred to the moral right.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Government has the moral right, because an enlistment constitutes no contract.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a contract for enlistment for three

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that; but it is not a contract in the usual sense of that word. It is an agreement to do service so long as the Government needs the service, not to be longer than for a certain period. It is just like abolishing an office. You may reduce the number of clerks here in a department. It is true you have employed them, but that does not interfere with the power of dismissing them.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, when I entered the Chamber this afternoon I had no idea of saying a word on the pending question, expecting to record my convictions on it only through my vote; but, with the sentiments that I have on the subject, I feel it to be my solemn duty most emphatically to record my dissent to the views advanced by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] in so far as those views tend to favor the plan of reducing the present strength of the Army of the United States.

I believe as much as he does in economy as a general principle, and I wish to see an economical administration of this Government just so long as it does not interfere with the efficiency of the administration, for I hold that efficiency is more important than economy. I wish to say that if the action of the House of Representatives—and I say it with all respect to the House—was dictated by the feeling of economy, then I think that it was economizing in the wrong direction, just as I think that if the same rule of conduct governed them in refusing appropriations for battleships they were also economizing in the wrong direction.

Now, it is certain that the very fact of itself, of the insular possessions of this Government, requires that we should have a larger standing Army than would be required if we did not have those insular possessions.

I wish to say in this connection that the Senator from Mississippi can not possibly have any greater objection to the retention of those insular possessions than I have. I was honestly opposed to their acquisition at the time and I have been honestly opposed to their retention ever since. But we have those possessions, and we are in honor bound to act so as to maintain our possessions as long as we wish to do so. I wish to see us lose them, but not to lose them under compulsion from any foreign power. Rather would I have that we held on to them forever in spite of any ills that I think may come to us from their retention.

Now, if the fact that the House grounded its action, in addition to the economy question, upon the fact that the service was not in equilibrium, as it were, that there were too many Cavalry in proportion to the Infantry, then I think that instead of cutting down the Cavalry it would be far better to increase the Infantry until the equilibrium be restored.

It is idle to say we never will have wars. No man can tell that. The presumption is that what has been will be, and it is highly likely that in the future we will have wars. going on at this time in other parts of the world in which we are not yet involved, but we do not know when we will become involved in a war. I hope it may not be at all. But it may be next year and it may be before this year comes to a close.

The Senator from Mississippi says that in that event our greatest dependence would be upon our Navy to prevent a foreign foe from landing on our soil, but how can we depend upon that if the House of Representatives is going to prevent us from having the requisite Navy as it is doing by its present

Therefore, if we have an insufficient Navy, when that Navy is destroyed by a foreign enemy, nothing can prevent the landing of a foreign army on our shores, either on the west or the east or the Gulf portion of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THORNTON. I do. Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator from Louisiana admit that if any foreign enemy should destroy our fleet and any foreign enemy, a modern European power, with their millions of men under arms, should effect a landing upon our shores, 58,000 men could not oppose them much more than 38,000, and we would have to rely upon our manhood and the volunteer forces, anyhow? This is but a nucleus. It is insufficient. Of course, if you are going to have an Army big enough to whip England or Germany or France, if they should land on our shores, we should need an Army of half a million men.

Mr. THORNTON. I will answer the Senator from Mississippi by saying that the greater the number of our Regular Army the greater the resistance we can offer until the volunteers can be organized; and the less the number of the Regular Army the less resistance we can offer until the militia force is properly organized, which is another reason why I am opposed to the reduction of our Army from its present very small number in comparison with the extent of our territorial area.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Louisiana allow me?

Mr. THORNTON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the Senator to make a note of the fact that if we are to go into war with volunteers or the militia there is no arm so useful as that of the Cavalry, where they have trained men to fight on foot or horseback, either as Infantry or Cavalry, and a sufficient number of horses prepared

Mr. THORNTON. Having been a member of the Cavalry arm of the service in the late Civil War, I am prepared to say that the statement of the Senator from Wyoming is entirely

Now, let us assume that a foreign force, on account of our insufficient Navy, has been able to effect a landing on our shores. The Senator from Mississippi says that in that event it would only be a question of time when we would be able to expel them from our country. Now, with that I agree. I do not believe that any foreign enemy could permanently maintain a foothold on any side of the United States. But why should we take the risk of the humiliation of having them land, of the great amount of blood and of treasure that would be expended in the time that it would take to repulse them from our shores? I suppose every Member of the Senate who has been a soldier himself knows of the great superiority at the outset of trained soldiers ever raw militia.

I do not hesitate to say, based upon my actual knowledge of such things, that I would rather have one regiment of regulars than four of untrained levies. Even admitting that they are of the same nationality, that they have the same natural physical courage, it takes time to train them and make them effective, and so I make the statement I do. If 4,000 raw leviesand the militia of this country are all raw levies, every one of them, without any exception-were to attack a regiment of which I was a member consisting of 1,000, those being regular troops, I would not hesitate to say that 250 on each side, if we were surrounded, could repel a thousand of the others.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the time will never come when this country will be submitted to the humiliation of seeing a foreign enemy land on her borders. But I wish to say that if that time does come—and I hope it will be after my time has gone—I do not propose to take the responsibility, which try fo every one takes who tries to cut down the Army and Navy of fense.

the United States, of having assisted to bring this shame and humiliation on my country; and feeling as I do on this question, every dictate of national pride and national patriotism impels me to oppose the views just advanced by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate further than to state three thoughts, and then I shall sit down. In the first place, the Senator from Louisiana must not think that those who want to maintain or to increase the standing Army of the United States possess, in comparison or contrast with other Senators, a monopoly either of national pride or patriotism. In the second place, it would be well for the Senator to remember, following up his line of argument, if he wishes to have a sufficient fleet, that this amount of money saved here might build at least one additional battleship. place, it would be well for the Senator from Louisiana to remember what has been attributed to Von Moltke in connection with the proposition of invading England, a much easier job than invading the United States. Somebody asked him whether he had ever worked out a plan for landing troops in Great Britain, and he said, "yes," but that he had never succeeded in working out a single plan for getting them back after he had landed them. Nobody but an idiot in command of an army wants to land an army unless he thinks he can get it Our chief defense lies in that fact.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what now is the proportion of Cavalry to Infantry and Artillery in the United States Army?

Mr. DU PONT. I was just about to present the reasons which impelled the Military Affairs Committee, by a practically unanimous vote, or, at least, by a very large majority vote, to strike this provision from the bill, and in so doing I will cover the very point which the Senator from Texas has in mind.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like the Senator, as a military man, to point out also what in his judgment ought to be the proportion between these arms of the military service.

Mr. DU PONT. I will make the statement, and then if the Senator finds that any point has not been covered, I will be glad to present it later.

The proviso on page 9, beginning at line 13, which reduced the number of Cavalry regiments from 15 to 10, has been omitted for several reasons.

First. It was inserted without consultation with the military authorities and is strongly opposed by them as greatly weakening the Regular Army, or first line of defense, which should be strong in Cavalry for the reason that if Volunteers be called out regiments of Cavalry can not be organized, instructed, and made efficient nearly as quickly as can regiments of Infantry.

Second. The number of Cavalry regiments is not more than is needed under present conditions.

While, as compared with the number of existing Infantry regiments, the number of Cavalry regiments is rather more than is considered theoretically necessary for a well-balanced force, the conditions in our Army differ from Continental Europe, whence we get our ideas of a well-balanced force. of Cavalry regiments for the Regular Army was fixed by law in 1901, after careful and mature deliberation. It is to be remembered that the Regular Army is our first line of defense, and that after it comes the militia, which has not a sufficient force of Cavalry to balance the militia regiments of Infantry. There are very few militia organizations of Cavalry, and the few that exist usually hire horses when needed.

The service that our Cavalry is actually performing on our southwestern boundary can not be performed efficiently by foot troops, and in this connection it may be stated that even with our present 15 regiments of Cavalry it has been found necessary to augment our mounted troops in that region by a force of Texas rangers.

It is to be observed further that the approaching completion of the Panama Canal and the decision to fortify it involves the station of an additional force of 5,000 men in the Canal Zone, and that the establishment of our great naval base (requiring the expenditure of many millions) at Pearl Harbor, Oahu, Hawali, for the defense of our whole Pacific coast, demands the assignment of a large military force for its defense from land attack, and that this condition makes another and a new call upon the Regular Army.

It is submitted that when, in addition to the previous duties of the Regular Army, at least 15,000 men are required for the defense of the Canal Zone and at Pearl Harbor, Oahu, it is neither the proper nor the appropriate moment for the reduction of the military establishment.

Third. The resulting economies will not compensate the country for the diminution in the efficiency of our first line of de-

A statement is submitted herewith showing the relative cost of a regiment of Infantry and a regiment of Cavalry. statement purports to show the overhead charges which enter into the calculation, and among the overhead charges the appropriations made in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for salaries for the several bureaus and offices of the War Department are included. As much of the work in some of the bureaus is purely civil, and in others relates to the militia as well as to the existing Army, it is evident that the entire charge for such services should not be included in this calculation. However, as worked out, the overhead charges for an Infantry regiment and for a Cavalry regiment are nearly the same, so that they can be omitted from consideration without changing the result.

Eliminating overhead charges, we find that the annual cost of an Infantry regiment is $488,369 and of a Cavalry regiment is $629,788; that is, the Cavalry regiment costs only 28.9 per cent more than the Infantry regiment.

The ratio of cost of an Infantry regiment for one year in time of peace to the cost of a Cavalry regiment for the same period is as 1 is to 1.129, or approximately as 1 is to 1‡. This plainly shows that the wisest place to exercise economy is in reduction of the overhead charges and not in a reduction of the number of the overhead charges and not in a reduction of the manuscrof enlisted men in the Army.

In conclusion, the hardships caused by the proposed reductions will fall upon the noncommissioned officers, from sergeants major down to corporals, who constitute, as has been well stated, the backbone of the Army. The noncommissioned officers can not be absorbed as such, for there are no places for them, and unless they are provided for by law as extra noncommissional officers they must be reduced to privates. sioned officers they must be reduced to privates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware will suspend for a moment. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts is complied with. The Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. DU PONT. I will resume the reading of my statement. It is true the horses belonging to the five Cavalry regiments can be sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury, but one of the greatest difficulties experienced in organizing a Cavalry regiment in time of war is to procure suitable horses, for the supply in our country is growing less each year, and the breeding of such horses can be promoted only by having a demand for them in time of peace.

Such a demand can be stimulated by keeping a strong mounted force in our Army in time of peace, and, as shown above, the difference in cost between keeping mounted and dismounted troops is very small indeed.

I now submit the table, which I ask may be incorporated in my remarks. It is a table showing the relative cost of Infantry and Cavalry regiments in detail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection permission is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

RELATIVE COST OF A REGIMENT OF INFANTRY AND A REGIMENT OF CAVALRY.

In compiling these figures we have endeavored to cut out anything that could be considered as foreign to the uses of these two branches of the line.

The figures are taken almost entirely from the digest of appropriations, 1912.

It will be seen that the overhead charges are enormous and that the difference between the cost of a regiment of Infantry and a regiment of Cavalry as compared with these overhead charges is small.

Mr. DU PONT. I will ask the Senator from Texas if he has any further inquiry to make on this subject?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the remarks of the Senator from Delaware answer my inquiry, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware a question. The fact may have been stated previously during the debate, but I have not heard it.

Mr. DU PONT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I wish to know what is the maximum number now authorized by law of the Army in the several branches of it, and what is the present number?

Mr. DU PONT. The maximum number in time of peace by law is 100,000.

Mr. BACON. I understand that to be the number in the ag-

Mr. BACON. I understand that to be the number in the aggregate, but as between the different branches.

Mr. DU PONT. That depends on the discretion of the President. He can vary the number of Cavalry, Infantry, and Arthur the can vary the number of Cavalry. tillery as the exigencies of the service may require, provided it does not exceed 100,000 in time of peace.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator I was very familiar at one time with the matter, because we had a very extensive discussion on it in the Senate some 12 years ago. I understand the Senator to say that the relative proportion is within the discretion of the President. Am I correct?

Mr. DU PONT. The Senator is not altogether correct. Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say that. Mr. DU PONT. The Army is composed of 15 regiments of Cavalry, 30 regiments of Infantry, and 6 regiments of Field Artillery, as well as the Coast Artillery Corps and the ancillary arms, such as the Signal Service, the Corps of Engineers, and so on. It is the province of the President to say that the troops of a regiment of Cavalry shall be only 50 strong and that the companies of Infantry shall be much greater in numbers. In that way, within the limits of regimental organizations, he can vary the proportions of the strength of the different arms.

Mr. BACON. I can not understand what the Senator intended by his first reply. Can the Senator give the number who are in actual service in these various branches of the arms of the service?

Mr. DU PONT. The actual number of Infantry is 65 men to a company.

Mr. BACON. But I am speaking about the actual number now in service.

Mr. DU PONT. In the Regular Army?

Mr. BACON. How many of Infantry, how many of Cavalry, how many of Coast Artillery, how many of Field Artillery?

Mr. DU PONT. I could not answer offhand with any degree of precision. Otherwise, I would be glad to give the Senator

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I will limit my inquiry to the Cavalry. What is the maximum number under the law which could be enlisted in the Cavalry arm of the service, and what is the present number?

Mr. WARREN. The present number is about 60 enlisted men to a troop, but it may be strengthened in time of war to a

Mr. DU PONT. That would be about 800 to a regiment, and 15 regiments of 800 would be 12,000. I suppose there are ten or eleven thousand of Cavalry.

Mr. BACON. Am I to understand, then, from the reply of both the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Dela- | me the book.

ware that in actual service the number of enlisted men is about 50 per cent of the possible number?

Mr. WARREN. About 60 per cent of enlisted men.
Mr. BACON. That is what I wanted to get.
Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask if the President has power to increase the Army from time to time? We make a certain appropriation here for the Army. Has the President any right to pay for extra men other than the amount appropriated by

Mr. DU PONT. No; I do not know that he has; but, as you know, if there were a great public exigency—

Mr. OVERMAN. Without regard to any public exigency, is there in the law a provision allowing the President to pay outside of the appropriation for men enlisted?

Mr. DU PONT. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to answer that question. He can do it better than I can.

Mr. WARREN. The salaries of officers and the pay of men are provided for by law. I think it has been held that when they are enlisted and in the service they must be paid whether there is a direct specific appropriation or not, and the amount reported comes in as a deficiency. It has happened once that the appropriation bill for the Army failed and ran over for a number of months. Of course the men had to be paid.

But the President is confined to the limit of one hundred thousand for the Army, and he is also, of course, confined to the number of officers that we have provided by law. But their pay is automatic in a sense. If we appropriate an insufficient amount for the pay of the Army, such appropriations as are available, like incidentals, may be used. They are confined absolutely to the appropriation, but the law creating the Army and providing for the pay is older and stronger, if I may use that term, than an appropriation bill made for the time being.

Mr. OVERMAN. What authority has the Treasurer of the United States to pay a warrant for the payment of some officer whose office might be created by law when no appropriation was made to pay him?

Mr. WARREN. Well, as far as that matter is concerned, I think that has been in the courts of the country and has been

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to know the decision. It seems to me that that is in contravention of the Constitution.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will have to accept my word for it now, as I have not the decision or decisions at hand. I may say to him that I have already cited a precedent where it has been done in the case of the Army, and it was declared to be legal.

Mr. OVERMAN. Decided by what courts?
Mr. WARREN. Perhaps it had been decided before that time by the courts.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then if he can do it in one instance he can do it in a thousand instances, and therefore he can pay money out of the Treasury without its being appropriated by Congress in contravention of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. That is not a fair construction of it at all. A military officer or enlisted man whose place is provided for by law is quite a different thing.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose we created an office to pay an officer $1,800 a year and appropriated no money for his payment-does the Senator think that the Treasurer would be warranted in paying out money when no appropriation was made to pay him?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from North Carolina will permit me, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to another very important provision of the Constitution, which I understand is correctly explained by the Senator from North Carolina and is practically nullified by that practice. It is the provision of the Constitution which says that appropriations for the Army shall not be made for a term exceeding two years. That evidently is intended to more strictly limit the possibility of the payment of the Army without an appropriation than any other expenditure is intended to be limited. So far as I know there is no other provision of the Constitution to that effect or parallel to it, and we can all understand that it was made for a very wise reason.

Mr. WARREN. I of course defer to the superior knowledge of the Senator from Georgia as to the Constitution, but does not the Constitution provide that they shall not make contracts for the Army beyond two years?

Mr. BACON. No; there is a distinct provision in the Constitution that appropriations for the support of the Army shall not be made for a period exceeding two years.

Mr. WARREN. By way of contract.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from North Carolina kindly hands

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, calculations of that kind do not come into what I understood to be the question of the Senator from North Carolina, because passing over one Congress of course the matter is taken care of in the next.

Mr. BACON. But I am asking whether the practice which I understand the Senator from Wyoming to say is one which exists, of paying soldiers the regular amount intended for their pay without an appropriation, is not a violation of the clause of the Constitution which I now read. In the enumeration of the powers of Congress we have:

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

And, then, the next enumerated power is this:

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

There could not be a more drastic limitation than that; and, as I said, it is one peculiar to itself. There is no other provision in the Constitution which is at all comparable to it.

Let me say that there is by implication a general law that there can be no payment of money, except money which is appropriated. When it came to the question of the payment of soldiers and the support of the Army, a power which if left in the hands of the Executive might be abused, the Constitution Is not satisfied with the implied negation, but it makes an express prohibition that no money shall be appropriated for the support of the Army for a term exceeding two years.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—
Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me just a moment, the conclusion is this: When Congress makes an appropriation for a term of two years, complying literally with the Constitution—it is true that it is generally made for one year, but if the rule is good as to one it is just as good as to two—the intention is that under no circumstances can the Executive have the power to pay soldiers which are not authorized to be paid by the law; and, as I said, it is a most peculiar and unique provision and one without any other companion in the Constitution. It lays it as a direct and an express prohibition.

I confess I never knew the fact that there was any such practice in the Government.

Mr. WARREN. There is no such practice. The Senator is laboring under a wrong construction of my remarks.

I misunderstood the Senator. Mr. WARREN. It is not a common practice.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking about a common practice. It is not necessary that it should be a common practice, but if it is ever done at all-

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has been given a precedent.

But I did not mean to quarrel with him about that.

Mr. BACON. I think it is a violation of the law whenever it is done.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it not frequently done? Mr. WARREN. Oh, if the Senator from Georgia will yield to me.

Mr. BACON. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. I do not know of its having been done on any occasion since I have been in the Senate and since I have been on either one of the two committees, the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations; but it must be possible, and it seems to have been done in the past in the one instance I have mentioned. We provide in this appropriation bill, as we have heretofore provided, that all funds handled by the Paymaster General for pay of the Army-except mileage-shall constitute one fund from which he shall pay the Army, and while one specific account may be short another will be large. Since I have been connected with these affairs there has never been a time, with perhaps the one exception noted, when by actual paying out of money they have exhausted the entire appropriation before Congress could meet and act. The men are paid, but oftentimes the department comes in for a deficiency in December and asks for an additional fund to carry them around until the next July, the beginning of the new fiscal year. I only gave the one case to show that it had been done, and that it had been ruled upon as being proper, but that I leave to the Senator.

Mr. BACON. Ruled upon by whom?
Mr. WARREN. I leave that to the Senator.
Mr. BACON. No; I do not want it left in that way. Ruled upon by whom? Mr. WARREN. Mr. WARREN. Ruled upon by the people who paid the money, by those who accepted it, by the administration which directed it, by the Congress, and, I understand, by the courts that permitted it.

Mr. BACON. I would be glad to have a citation of the case in the court.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator understands, of course, that I am not a lawyer nor a judge, and I do not have at my hands the precedents. I find them when I need them. The idea of undertaking to embarrass me in that way does not embarrass me at all.

Mr. BACON. Mr. BACON. Nothing was further from my purpose. Mr. WARREN. I am simply taking the practical side of it

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of the fact that it has happened, but I am speaking about the question whether it was authorized when it did happen.

Mr. WARREN. I will state to the Senator that in 1877 there was a disagreement between the two Houses by reason of the provision contained in the House bill known as the posse comitatus clause, and the bill failed to become a law, and thereupon the War Department issued orders for the supply of the Army. General Order No. 49, of 1877, announced that there were no funds for the supplies after July 1, 1877, and it went on to say that, under section 3732 of the Revised Statutes, purchases could be made of clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, and transportation.

Then General Order No. 51, of 1877, announced that there was no pay for the Army after June 30, and it published a form of certificate for pay vouchers and gave the names of pay-masters to certify the same.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt of the precedent; the Senator's statement of fact that it had occurred was sufficient, but the question is whether there is any law that authorizes it. It is not a matter that presents an impossible situation where it can not be dealt with. Of course it is always known in advance when the Army appropriation is going to expire, and there is ample time within which Congress can be convened and can be informed of the fact that an appropriation is required, and an appropriation can be made, but what I take issue with is the possibility that the head of a department, or the President of the United States, if you please, can by any order issued by either one or the other take the place of an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] desired to interrupt me?

Mr. LODGE. No; I will wait until the Senator is through. Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. There is only one other word to The Senator from Wyoming spoke of not being a lawyer and of my desire to embarrass him. Of course there was nothing further from my mind. But when I asked by what authority that action had been reviewed and approved, I understood the Senator to say that it had been approved by those who paid out the money and by those who received the money and by the courts. Now, of course, if the courts have ruled otherwise, and if certainly the Supreme Court has ruled otherwise, I have nothing further to say; but without any desire to embarrass the Senator whatever I inquired what court had ever made such a decision.

If the court has made it, I should like to have it made known, because I confess it has entirely escaped my attention, and I very greatly doubt whether the Senator upon investigation will find that any court, high or low, has ever determined that by an order of the Executive department, or any one of the departments, money can be paid out which has not been appropriated by Congress unless there is a general statute which authorizes it. In that case, of course, it would be done by the authority of Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I confess that the coming of this proposition to the Senate is a source of genuine surprise to me, for were we not told a few weeks ago that we were living in a new era, that a new dawn, the dawn of peace had come? Did we not pass a few weeks ago the arbitration treaties, and were we not told then in eloquent words by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Burron], and the Senator from New York [Mr. Roor] that the passage of those treaties would lead to the disarmament of the great powers of the world; that rifles and sabers would be turned into plowshares and pruning hooks?

Mr. President, my heart swelled within me at the thought. To turn a vernal and barren furrow in springtime, even with a plowshare made of cast steel, with emphasis on the steel, is to me a great source of delight. But, O Mr. President, such delight would be tame in comparison with the pleasure of turning the vernal furrow in springtime with a plowshare made from steel of guns and rifles that shoot and from swords and sabers that slaughter. What a happy thought it was. But I find now that all this was an iridescent dream.

Mr. President, I did not believe it then, nor do I believe it now. I have sometimes said that notwithstanding the pleadings with eloquent voice one would hardly believe that Senators believed it themselves

Senators proclaimed then, "Hail the day of peace." Yes; we join you in that, but first let us hail the day of justice. Let us hail the day of right, that day when mankind shall treat mankind as brothers. Then and then only will come the day of

Mr. President, notwithstanding the fact that we have passed the arbitration treaties, I do not believe that the millennium has come, nor do I believe that universal peace is yet in sight. We have not yet reached that condition when smitten on one cheek we are ready to turn the other also. Particularly I feel that this is true when I read from the document I have in my hand, which I procured from the Navy Department, that in Great Britain they have now on the ways, ready to slide into the quiet waters of the Mersey and Clyde, battleships, now building, of the Drcadnought type, 10; armored cruisers, of the Invincible type, 4; armored cruisers, 6,000 to 3,000 tons, 10; torpedo-boat destroyers, 31; submarine vessels and craft of the various kinds, 17; making a total of 72.

Mr. President, I find that Great Britain has on the ways 72 engines of war, of devastation, hell, and destruction that are ready to glide into the waters; and, in view of this fact, I must say that I protest against the thoughts and ideas that were so eloquently expressed, that we had reached the day of the millennium of peace when we would have no army and that arbitration would take its place.

In view of these facts, and of the report of the committee, I shall oppose any part that shall reduce the Infantry Arm of this country

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Jersey takes his seat I should like to call his attention to the fact that we did not pass those arbitration treaties to bring about general peace, but that, on the contrary, we knocked them into a "cocked hat," using the expression of Gov. Wilson when referring to another matter.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. As far as we could, we ratified them. I insist that only three Members of this body who would stand up here and support a Navy would be the three Members of the body who voted against them, and I happen to be one of them. The Senators went at least as far as they could in the proposition; but that has nothing to do with my position in this case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 5, on page 11.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I was temporarily out of the Chamber. I am informed that the amendment was voted on

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment was voted on and carried.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the roll was to be called. I do not know whether it is in order, but I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to granting the request of the Senator from Mississippi that the year and nays be ordered upon the amendment which was carried, being the amendment to strike out on pages 9 and 10.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that the question ought to be put whether the Senator can now demand the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is perfectly clear upon that point. It can only be done by unanimous consent. Mr. CULBERSON. It requires one-fifth of the Senators present to order the yeas and nays, affirmatively stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And by unanimous consent of course the yeas and nays can be ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. But the point is that it is too late. The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; except by unanimous consent it is too late. Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator from Mississippi would request the yeas and nays, I would not make the point. I have no objection to the Senator making the request for the year and nays at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all that the request for unanimous consent involves. If the request for unanimous consent is That is all that the request for unanimous granted, the yeas and nays can only be ordered by a one-fifth

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to that. Mr. WILLIAMS. What I ask is unanimous consent to demand the yeas and nays; and then, if the demand is not seconded by a fifth of the Senators present, of course that is a different thing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Of course the request technically must be to return to that portion of the bill, but the Chair called). My colleague [Mr. Townsend] is necessarily absent thought probably it might be done under one unanimous consent

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to return to that portion of the bill for the purpose of then getting the yeas and navs, if that consent be given,

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi to return to the amendment to strike out, on pages 9 and 10? The Chair hears none. Is there now objection to the request of the Senator to demand the yeas and mays? The Chair hears no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I ask for the yeas and nays.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the yeas and nays seconded? [Putting the question.] Nine Senators have seconded the demand-not a sufficient number.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is not that one-fifth of the Members present, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not one-fifth of a quorum, and it is always assumed that a quorum is present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.
Mr. WARREN. Will you withhold the suggestion just a second, Mr. President? The Senator from Mississippi certainly knows that every opportunity has been accorded him on this matter.

matter. Does he think it is necessary to pursue it any further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is absolutely necessary to have a fair expression of the Senate as to whether one-fifth of its membership or one-fifth of a quorum can demand the yeas and membership of other than the state of the present.

Mr. LODGE. Let the request be again put, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the request. Those seconding the request for the year and nays will indicate it by raised hands.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I understand the question to be on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. And those who are in favor of the reduction of the present number of the Cavalry regiments will vote "nay" on the amendment and those who oppose it will vote "nay" on the amendment and those who oppose it will vote "yea." Am I correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Those who favor the amendment will vote "yea" and those who oppose it will vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment keeps the Army at its present force, and if the amendment is voted down, it reduces the Army five regiments.

Mr. WARREN. I think there is a misunderstanding about it, and in order that we may be sure—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is to strike out, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 13, on page 9, and ending with the word "act," in line 6, on page 10.

Mr. WARREN. A vote "yea" is to sustain the committee in striking it out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A vote "yea" is to strike it out, which is the committee amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON]. I have a general do not know how he would vote if present, and I therefore withhold my vote,

Mr. CUMMINS (when Mr. Kenyon's name was called). My colleague [Mr. Kenyon] is absent from the city. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Root].

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when the name of Mr. Smith of South Carolina was called). I was asked to state for the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Smith] that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. SHIVELY (when Mr. STONE'S name was called). The senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is necessarily absent from the city. He is paired with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. Townsend's name was

Mr. CULLOM. As I have stated, I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Chilton], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DII.-LINGHAM] is absent from the city. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Bradley] is out of the city, and I desire that this announcement shall stand for the day.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. CLARK] is out of the city for the day. He is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen]. I also wish to state that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The result was announced-yeas 47, nays 6, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before the reading of the bill is resumedof course, this is hardly the proper place-I wish to say that I have been reading the report of the committee, which is very brief. I notice the increase over the House bill is $7,537,453.80. I also notice that the bill, as reported from the Senate committee, carries a larger appropriation by $2,726,925.01 than the last bill. I should like to know why there has been this exceedingly large increase over the last appropriation of nearly $3,000,000 without any reason being given to show why it is

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the increases are mainly due to the fact that the committee has fixed the amount in accordance with the estimates, otherwise the only result would be a large deficiency, as the items of pay to officers and enlisted men are simply a mathematical computation.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will speak louder. We want to get the information, but we have not heard a word he has

Mr. DU PONT. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that I am not surprised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will please be in order. Mr. DU PONT. I will repeat, for the benefit of the Senator caused by fixing the amount slightly below the estimates, particularly in the case of the pay of officers and enlisted men. These estimates are based upon mathematical computations, taking into consideration the number of men and what they are allowed by law. Nothing was to be gained, in the opinion of the committee, by keeping them down below those figures, because it would simply lead to a deficiency bill. Then there are additions to the reserve ammunition, as the Senator will observe as we go on, mainly for the artillery and for the militia.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Army been increased since the last appropriation bill?

Mr. DU PONT. No; but the militia has been given increased amounts of material necessary for its instruction and equipment

Mr. OVERMAN. How much additional has been given to the national guard?

Mr. DU PONT. No addition to the number, but there have been additions to their equipment.

Mr. OVERMAN. So that practically the Army is in the same condition that it was two years ago, and yet we increase the appropriation $2,726,925 over the amount carried by the last appropriation bill.

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that when the bill is completed and he has had an opportunity of examining each item he will see for himself the reasons for the increases, and I think they will be satisfactory to him.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether I will or not, because the Senator has made no report here, except to state the fact of the increase. I thought he could give a general résume. so that we would be informed as we come to each item. I should like to have the Senator tell me the reason for this increase. He has admitted that the Army stands about where it did when we made the enormous appropriation of last year; but this bill carries $2,700,000 more than the appropriation of last year, although, as I have said, the Army is the same as it was then, and there has been no increase in the number of the National Guard. I should like to know, therefore, why these increases are necessary.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say, in answer to the Senator's statement, that the last Army bill was not an enormous bill; that it was several million dollars, about $8,000,000 less

Mr. OVERMAN. I was a member of the committee, and the reduction was recommended by the President of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. I am not finding any fault with that reduction or with the Senator in connection with it, but the fact is that the amount appropriated by that bill was about $8,000,000 less than the amount appropriated the year before. In order to enable us to make that reduction we omitted the provisions for maintaining the surplus of military supplies, such as clothing, and so forth; we provided nothing of consequence in the way of new artillery, which was very much needed for the militia, and so forth. The consequence is that on account of the lower appropriations of last year and the consumption of surplus stock that had been accumulated, it is necessary this year to make provision for reserve supplies. For instance, in the matter of clothing there were considerations involved, such as the proposition to have a different style of uniform; and, as the Senator well knows, there was much talk about cheaper clothing which might follow a change of the tariff, although the change, as Senators know, did not materialize, and the consequence is that we have greatly reduced, in fact, almost exhausted our surplus supply.

Now, taking the list of items in which increases have been recommended by the committee, here is the matter of clothing. For extra clothing-that is, for surplus clothing and camp and garrison equipage—there is an increase of $618,429; for surplus ammunition for the Organized Militia, $500,000; for field artillery for Organized Militia, $480,000; and for automatic machine rifles, $100,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, I want to ask the Senator—
Mr. WARREN. One moment please—so that more than a million and a half of the increase goes to make provision for properly equipping the State militia and for surplus clothingmatters which were more or less neglected last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does not this mean the storage of great war supplies in warehouses in the country which we could get along without?

Mr. WARREN. Not as to supplies for the militia. It is simply to make provision so that in the event they should be called into the field they may be properly armed and equipped.

Mr. OVERMAN. The statement in regard to accumulating supplies in warehouses may not apply to the militia, but as to from Georgia, that a large portion of the increase has been the other items is it not the purpose to fill up the storage warehouses with supplies that will carry us over perhaps two or

Mr. WARREN. Not so much as that, but it is to put us in a position so that if we should have trouble upon our borders tomorrow, or a month or two months from now, we would be able to uniform, arm, and equip the troops.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then the appropriations are in anticipation of war, are they not?

Mr. WARREN. No; but to provide for items which have been habitually carried in the Army appropriation bill, but which were omitted last year, because, first, there was a great spasm of economy, in which we all joined; second, as I have already said, because of the prospect of the price for clothing being no higher and possibly lower; and, third, because there was quite a little talk about changes in uniform.

Mr. OVERMAN. The appropriations were reduced last year, then, on account of a spasm of economy in the country. Now that spasm has gone, and you want to enter upon another era of extravagance.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to one item alone. Last year the appropriation for the encampment and maneuvers of the Organized Militia, which occur periodically, as he is well aware, having been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, was $350,000. This year the estimates were $1,350,000, and that amount is carried in the bill. That accounts for $1,000,000 of increase.

Mr. WARREN. That is the same as the item in the bill two

Mr. DU PONT. It is the same as the item in the bill two years ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curtis in the chair).

The Secretary will resume reading the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. Before that is done, Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming what is meant by the word "surplus." Does that apply to a particular fund which is Does that apply to a particular fund which is appropriated in this bill?

Mr. WARREN. No; it simply relates to clothing and equip-ent. We use the word "surplus" to explain that we are undertaking to have a sufficient supply to last a few months or until more could be secured in replacement, if we should be called upon to use the armed forces of the United States

Mr. SHIVELY. Is it in the nature of an emergency fund to meet an anticipated exigency?

Mr. WARREN. No; provision has always been made for surplus supplies, except once in a great while, like last year, when, for certain reasons, the surplus was allowed to run down. It is always considered proper and, in fact, necessary, to carry a sufficient surplus, so that supplies may be shipped from headquarters to various places where they are needed-to the Philippines, for instance, and other places-in order that we may at any time equip a few regiments should they be called in a hurry into active service.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let me ask the Senator— Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me a little further, in order to buy clothing cheaply for the Army it is necessary to ask for the submission of bids. Those who bid on the contracts are furnished samples of the different kinds of cloth, and on those samples they base their bids, but they always ask, in order to make their bids as low as possible, that they may have a certain number of months in which to buy their supplies and manufacture the cloth. Now, the law is such that the Quartermaster's Department can not enter into any contract for clothing or any other supply until the money is actually appropriated by Congress. Therefore when this money is appropriated by this bill and becomes available on the 1st day of next July, it takes, in order to buy economically, many months before this clothing is delivered to the department, because of the time consumed in buying the cloth, letting the contracts, making up the goods, and so forth.

Mr. SHIVELY. One further question. What relation did the appropriation of last year bear to the estimates of that year; that is to say, was the appropriation cut several million dollars, as the Senator has stated, without reference to the estimates?

Mr. WARREN. I suppose we are permitted in the Senate to speak of what does not appear in print, but I think it was well understood-

Mr. SHIVELY. If it appeared in print, we probably would not have occasion to ask about it.

Mr. WARREN. It was well understood that after the estimates were made by the heads of the departments they were required to reduce them a certain number of million dollars. The estimates were returned to them and they eliminated that amount. Then there was a second request to reduce wherever it could be done without substantially injuring the Army.

The chairman of the committee has very properly stated the difference between the appropriation for maneuvers of the militia in this bill and the law of last year, which is over a million dollars. That is a varying amount. Every two years the mobile Army meets in conjunction with the militia, and that requires a million dollars or more, while in the alternate years the Coast Artillery has joint maneuvers with the militia in various localities, which requires a smaller amount; so that Army appropriation bills vary quite a little from year to year in that regard.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. I see in the report, following the item "Equipment, coast artillery, Organized Militia," an item of increase under the Subsistence Department. That is an additional amount for the militia also, is it not?

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand the Senator. Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For the Subsistence Department there is an item of increase of $383,594, just following the item Equipment, coast artillery, Organized Militia." Mr. WARREN. It is not necessarily for the militia. The appropriation for subsistence and certain other supplies, of course, had to be increased so as to approximate the estimates when the committee decided that it would eliminate the proviso cutting the Army down by five regiments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator this additional question: Is there any increase to the Organized Militia, except to the Coast and Field Artillery?

Mr. DU PONT. Does the Senator mean in numbers or in supplies for them?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the appropriation.

Mr. DU PONT. There is an increase in the appropriation of a million dollars to provide for the maneuvers of the milita. Then there is some increase for equipment of the Coast Artillery of the Organized Militia, amounting to $275,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I find three items of increase affecting the Organized Militia. Those items seem to go exclusively to the Field and Coast Artillery. Mr. DU PONT. Yes.

Mr. BU FONT. 1es.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there any increase to the National Guard outside of the Artillery?

Mr. DU PONT. I do not think there is independently of the million dollars, which is for their maneuvers. I do not remember any.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I asked the question because I am more interested in an increase to them than to the Artillery.

Mr. DU PONT. The committee has treated the militia as liberally as possible, and I think the committee takes a great deal of interest, and the Senate as well, in providing equipment and proper organization for the militia of the different States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the increase seems to be exclusively to the Artillery.

Mr. DU PONT. They were in the greatest need. They were very much worse off, inasmuch as they had not the necessary equipment for their proper instruction. Then, within the last year or two there have been a great many militia companies organized as Heavy Artillery, and it has been the policy of the department to encourage them, inasmuch as practically the militia has been made up heretofore of Infantry alone. That would account for the increase to the Artillery Arm.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And this increase will be in large part to equip them?

Mr. DU PONT. To equip them; precisely.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Hospital Corps," on page 12, line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight hundred and fifty" and insert "nine hundred and forty," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of enlisted men, $940,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "one hundred and sixty-five," so as to make the clause read:

Additional pay for length of service, $165,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I desire to be informed about these matters. Why is there an increase of $750,000 in foreign-service pay to enlisted men and $266,000 for foreign-service pay to officers, making about a million dollars' increase for sending troops abroad on foreign service?

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the House cut out the item; in other words, it changed the law which provided additional pay to troops on foreign service, which means troops in the Philippines and in Alaska.

Mr. OVERMAN. It will cost us, then, next year $1,000,000

Mr. DU PONT. The law was passed for the Philippines when they were first occupied, but the House cut that down and the Senate committee, after an exhaustive hearing of all those who are best informed upon the subject, decided to retain it, and therefore the appropriation was increased.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not understand why there should be an increase of a million dollars in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. DU PONT. It is a matter of mathematical computation of foreign pay, whatever it may amount to in figures.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does it take more troops in the Philippines than ever before?

Mr. DU PONT. No. The force is about the same.

Mr. WARREN. We are not paying any more. Mr. OVERMAN. I want to know why there should be this increase of a million dollars?

Mr. WARREN. Because the House cut out the entire 20 per cent, not only with respect to the Philippine Islands but every cent, not only ... other foreign country.
OVERWAN. You restore it?

Mr. OVERMAN. You restore it?
Mr. WARREN. We restore it to what it was before,
Mr. DU PONT. I have already said that.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment "Retired enlisted men," on page 17, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "Provided, That in computing length of service for retirement credit for double time for foreign service shall not be given to those who hereafter enlist," so as to make the clause read:

For pay of the enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, $2,150,000: Provided, That in computing length of service for retirement credit for double time for foreign service shall not be given to those who hereafter enlist.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the committee I have an amendment that should be added, on page 17, right after line 19. I will send it to the desk

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 17, at the end of line 19, strike out the period after the word "dollars" and insert a colon and the following:

Provided, That the superinteadent shall receive such allowances of quarters, subsistence, and medical care during filness as may be prescribed in regulations by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 12, on page 18.

Mr. DU PONT. I wish to offer an amendment on the part of the committee.

The Secretary, On page 18, strike out all of lines 11 and 12, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For pay of contract surgeons, $13,800.

This is a reduction of expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The rending of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 19, line 1, after the word "Army," to Provided further, That hereafter the age limit for the retirement of Army paymasters' clerks shall be the same as the age limit for the retirement of commissioned officers of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and seventy" and insert "five hundred," so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers, dental surgeons, and veterinarians on duty without troops at stations where there are no public quarters, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert: "Provided, That when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his original enlistment, or to such other place within the continental limits of the United States as he may select, to which the distance is no greater than from the place of dis-charge to place of original enlistment; but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind and subsistence for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of original enlistment, or, in lieu of such transportation and subsistence, he shall, if he so elects, receive 2 cents a mile, I except for sea travel, from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment," so as to make the clause read:

place of his enlistment," so as to make the clause read:

For travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge, $000,000: Provided, That when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his original enlistment, or to such other place within the continental limits of the United States as he may select, to which the distance is no greater than from the place of discharge to place of original enlistment; but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind and subsistence for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of original enlistment, or, in lieu of such transportation and subsistence, he shall, if he so cleets, receive 2 cents a mile, except for sea travel, from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment.

Mr. DU PONT I move as an amondment to the such case of the place of the content o

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. DU PONT. I move as an amendment to the amendment after the words "Provided, That" to "insert" hereafter."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY. I notice there is an increase of $100,000 provided for traveling allowances for enlisted men. Is that an increase over what is allowed in the current appropriation act; or is it simply an increase over what is allowed in the House bill?
Mr. DU PONT. Do you mean in line 23, page 19?
Mr. SHIVELY. I am now examining your report. On page

2 I observe there is an increased allowance of $100,000 for traveling expenses

Mr. DU PONT. Yes. The House appropriated $800,000. The committee struck it out and propose to appropriate $900,000. Mr. DU PONT.

Mr. SHIVELY. What was the appropriation last year?
Mr. DU PONT. Nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars last year. The appropriation reported by the committee is in accordance with the estimates and with a reasonable computation of the amount required.

Mr. SHIVELY. The appropriation in this bill now is $800,000? Mr. DU PONT. The Senate committee has fixed it at $900,000, increasing the House appropriation by $100,000, which is in accordance with the estimates. Last year the appropriation was $950,000, and the Paymaster General asserts that it is absolutely necessary that he must have this money to pay, otherwise there will be a deficit. That is the reason why we have increased it.

I am authorized by the committee to make this motion: Strike out the word "original," on page 20, lines 4, 7, and 10, in order to make the language conform to line 13.

The Secretary. On page 20, in lines 4, 7, and 10, before the word "enlistment," strike out the word "original."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

I wish to ask that a statement be printed Mr. DU PONT. in the RECORD. I will not read it. It shows the economies which will result from this action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

"The first legislation providing allowances for travel on discharge from the service is contained in the act approved March 16, 1802, entitled "An act fixing the military peace establishment of the United States," section 24 of which provided that—

"Whenever any officer or soldier shall be discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for any offense, he shall be allowed his pay and rations, or an equivalent in money, for such term of time as shall be sufficient for him to travel from the place of discharge to the place of his residence, computing at the rate of 20 miles a day.

"This section was repeated in the acts of January 11, 1812, and January 29, 1813, was continued in force under the general provisions of section 7 of the act of March 3, 1815, and is contained in a modified form in sections 1289 and 1290 of the Revised

"Section 1290 relates to enlisted men, and is as follows:

"Section 1290 relates to enlisted men, and is as follows:

"Sec. 1290. When a soldier is discharged from the service (except by way of punishment for an offense) he shall be allowed transportation and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service. The Government may furnish the same in kind, but in case it shall not do so, he shall be allowed travel pay and commutation of subsistence for such time as may be sufficient for him to travel from the place of discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service, computed at the rate of 1 day for every 20 miles.

"The past of May 26, 1000 (21 Stat 211) provided:

"The act of May 26, 1900 (31 Stat., 211), provided:

"Hereafter an enlisted man when discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, shall receive 4 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment, enrollment, or original muster into the service.

"The act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat., 903), provided:

"For sea travel on discharge actual expenses only shall be paid to Meers, and transportation and subsistence only shall be furnished to officers, and enlisted men.

"The act of June 12, 1906 (36 Stat., 247), provided:

"For the purpose of determining allowances for all travel * * for enlisted men on discharge, travel in the Philippine Archipelago, the Hawaiian Archipelago, the home waters of the United States, and between the United States and Alaska shall not be regarded as sea travel and shall be paid for at the rates established by law for land travel within the boundaries of the United States.

"It will be observed that the above legislation was enacted at a time when travel was slow and expensive, and that it has been kept in force long after the rapid and comparatively inexpensive methods of modern transportation had completely changed the situation.

"Further, the laws quoted above show that when an enlisted man is discharged from service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he receives free transportation and subsistence for sea travel and 4 cents a mile for other travel from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment.

"The cost to the Government for transportation, which includes an upper berth in a tourist sleeping car, and for subsistence, which includes three meals a day at 50 cents each, amounts to a fraction over 2 cents per mile; while, as a matter of fact, discharged soldiers are paid 4 cents per mile for land travel and a like amount for travel by water within certain prescribed limits.

'The expense to the Government, therefore, of returning a discharged soldier to his home is almost twice as much as the actual cost of furnishing him transportation in kind, a berth in a sleeping car all the way and $1.50 a day for his meals while he is traveling.

"No reason is apparent why this extra expense of almost 2 cents a mile should be paid by the Government when the presents a mile should be paid by the Government when the presents a mile should be paid by the Government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government when the presents a mile should be paid by the government which it is the present a mile should be paid by the government which it is the present a mile should be paid by the government which it is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mile should be pa mile should be paid by the government which is the present a mil ent comforts and conveniences of travel can be provided by furnishing transportation in kind and subsistence. Accordingly there has been added to the item "for travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge," line 18, page 19, a proviso as follows:

"Provided, That when an enlisted man who is enlisted on or after July 1, 1912, is discharged from the service, except by way of punishment for an offense, he shall be entitled to transportation in kind and subsistence from the place of his discharge to the place of his original enlistment, or to such other place within the continental limits of the United States as he may select, to which the distance is no greater than from the place of discharge to place of original enlistment; but if the distance be greater, he may be furnished with transportation in kind and subsistence for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of original enlistment; but if then and subsistence he shall, if he so cleets, receive 2 cents a mile, except for sea travel, from the place of his discharge to the place of his enlistment.

"The saving that will result from this proviso is estimated to be $460,750 a year, as shown in the memorandum from the Paymaster General hereto attached:

OFFICE OF THE PAYMASTER GENERAL,

The Annual Report of The Adjutant General for the fiscal year 1911 shows the ratio of reenlistments to original enlistments as approximately 2 to 3, or, in other words, 2 men reenlisted out of every 5 men discharged. Taking this ratio as a basis, the average cost of travel allowances to enlisted men on discharge under the proposed bill would be $0.02157 per mile.

The Estimates of Appropriations, 1913, page 189, contain an item of $000,000 for travel allowances of enlisted men on discharge to meet payments for the fiscal year July 1, 1912, to June 30, 1913. Following this estimate appears a note which reads:

"The estimate for travel allowance to enlisted men on discharge is based on a comparison of enlistments and discharges for four fiscal years, with the enlistments for the fiscal year 1910, which will determine the number of men discharged during the fiscal year 1913, and it is thereby indicated that the amount of $900,000 for this purpose is necessary."

necessary."

There was disbursed from the appropriation, "Pay of the Army, 1910." covering the fiscal year July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1910, $905,-481.59 for travel pay to enlisted men. For the fiscal year 1911 the expenditures for travel pay to enlisted men were unusually large, due to the fact that a large number of men were discharged during the fiscal year 1908 (July 1, 1907, to June 30, 1908), and immediately reenlisted for Philippine service, their terms of service expiring during the fiscal year 1911. In addition to this the establishment of the maneuver emps and the mobilization of troops along the Mexican border also increased the expenses for a large number of men who were discharged in this territory. The expenditures to date indicate that this unusual cost of travel pay will probably continue throughout the current fiscal year (July 1, 1911, to June 30, 1912), but it is not believed that thereafter the disbursements for travel pay under existing laws and conditions will average much over $1,000,000. Taking $1,000,000 as a basis of the cost of travel pay for future fiscal years, the proposed measure will result in an ultimate saving of approximately $460,750 a year.

As the proposed bill will affect only men enlisting or recalling after July 1, 1912, no saving will result within three years from such date, except in cases of such of those men who are discharged prior to the expiration of their term of enlistment, a small class.

Paymaster General United States Army.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 14, to insert:

For additional 10 per cent increase on pay of officers on foreign service, $266,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 17, to insert: For additional 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men on foreign service, $750,000: Provided, That hereafter the laws allowing increase of pay to officers and enlisted men for foreign service shall not apply to service in the Canal Zone, Panama.

Mr. SHIVELY. I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say a moment ago that there had been no increase in the actual pay of the enlisted men on foreign service and that there would

Mr. WARREN. There is not. The usual appropriation was cut out entirely by the House, and this restores it. It was not here for us to cut out. We simply replace it.

Mr. SHIVELY. The term here is "for additional 20 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men." Do you mean that that is in the current appropriation act?

Yes; the law provides that enlisted men Mr. WARREN. serving in a foreign country or in territory not contiguous to the United States—that includes Alaska—except Hawaii, Porto Rico, and now the Canal Zone, shall receive 20 per cent additional pay. That has been the law for years. On the House side they simply left it out of the bill, and we are restoring it, which puts it on the same basis as it has been before.

That makes the appropriation conform to Mr. SHIVELY.

the general statute?

Mr. WARREN. Yes, sir.
Mr. DU PONT. That is it exactly.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. On page 21, line 13, I move to strike out the quotation marks inclosing the words "when authorized by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Philippine Scouts," on page 24, line 14, after the word "fund," to insert:

Scouts," on page 24, line 14, after the word "fund," to insert: Procided, That section 3620, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of Congress approved February 27, 1847, shall not be construed as precluding Army paymasters from drawing checks in favor of the person or institution designated by indorsement made on his monthly pay account by an officer of the Army who is stationed beyond the continental limits of the United States, or In Alaska, or the Canal Zone, Panama, or en route thereto, if the pay account has been deposited for payment on maturity in conformity with such regulations as the Section of War may prescribe: Provided further, That payment by the United States of a check on the indorsement of the indorse specified on the pay account.

The amendment was agreed to

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 16, to insert: Equipment of Coast Artillery, armories, Organized Militia: Dummy guns and mortars; mounts for dummy guns and mortars; dummy ammunition; loading appliances; range and position finding equipment; alming and laying devices; subcaliber tubes and mountings therefor; labor and material necessary to install dummy guns and mortars, and to provide appliances and devices for instructional purposes in armory buildings provided by States for Coast Artillery companies of the Organized Militia, $275,000.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the chairman of the committee. Great difficulty is experienced by the organized Artillery forces of the State militia in obtaining horses for practice exercises. I know we have in Virginia plenty of Artillery companies, and when they go out for practice and carry out the guns for that purpose the present provision for supplies and equipment is not sufficient to cover this necessity. I wish to ask the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee to consent to an amendment authorizing the War Department, where the Secretary thinks it advisable, to use a part of the money provided for the Organized Militia of the State for the purpose of hiring horses for use in practice.

Mr. President, it seems to me that one of the greatest needs of our military service is the Artillery. It is impossible to have a well-equipped Artillery unless you have horses to take the guns out. I know, while governor of Virginia, it was impossible for me to get the funds to provide the horses for the Artillery in Virginia to go out as frequently as they desired and should go out. I understand it is held by the department that it can not permit any of the fund that is provided for furnishing ammunition, guns, and clothing to be used for this purpose. There is a strong effort now on the part of the Federal Government to induce people to volunteer in the Coast Artillery, the organized Artillery companies, because they recognize the great necessity for it in time of war, and I should like to have this necessity supplied in some way by an amendment at the proper place in this bill. I ask the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee if he has any objection to authority being granted to the War Department to permit funds given to the Organized Militia to be used for this purpose?

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that absolutely agree with him that the Artillery branch of the militia is a most important feature, and something should be done to improve it. In fact, as much should be done to improve it as is consistent with good sound public policy. But it seems to me inexpedient to adopt such an amendment at this moment, when the views of the War Department and of the Chief of the Bureau of Militia Affairs can not be ascertained. It would be eminently proper and wise for us to consult them.

I am sorry the Senator from Virginia did not introduce his amendment earlier, so that it could have been fully considered by the Military Affairs Committee, from which something tangible might have resulted. It seems to me that the whole field has to be looked over. The militia artillery in the other States has to be considered, and the amount of expense involved must be looked into; and it is altogether too complicated a question for us to pass upon now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, it seems to me it is not a very complicated matter to add a simple amendment to the appropriation for the Organized Militia authorizing a certain portion of it to be used for hiring horses for the Cavalry and for the Artillery of the State Organized Militia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.
Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to express my very cordial sympathy with the Senator's suggestion. I have been intimately associated with the National Guard for a considerable time during the past three or four years, and I know they have had great trouble in this respect. I know that especially our Artillery has had trouble. It is not very practical to appropriate a large sum for guns and ammunition and leave the Artillery without any provision to move and handle the guns. If there could be that simple authority given to the department-as I understand the department considers that it has not the authority—the department will handle the proposition.

Mr. DU PONT. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I will say to him that I am perfectly willing to try to ascertain between now and to-morrow what views, if any, the department entertains with regard to that subject, and possibly we might frame some amendment which will meet his views. But, as at present advised, I would be unwilling to favor any amendment until it could be sufficiently looked into. I will try to stop at the department to-morrow on my way to the Senate and see if anything can be done.

Mr. SWANSON. That is entirely satisfactory to me, but I should like to say, before I conclude my remarks, that I do not know of a more urgent need, so far as the Organized Militia is concerned, than to enable the Artillery to be well equipped and well practiced. They can not learn quickly. The State of Virginia has always been a State that furnished a great many Artillery companies. During the Revolutionary War the State far exceeded its part in this respect.

Now there are a great many Artillery companies in Virginia. The State has always been noted for its strength in Artillery and in a disposition to have good and splendid Artillery com-

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Bearing upon this very question, I find that the Engineer Department desires to make this applicable for the next two years instead of confining it to one, and also to add any unappropriated balances. Therefore I will send to the desk an amendment of that nature and let it be read.

Mr. SWANSON. Does it pertain to the Artillery?
Mr. WARREN. It pertains to the dummy Artillery; the item we have just been discussing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of line 26, on page 25:

Provided, That the foregoing appropriation and any other appropriations heretofore made for that purpose shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the Senator from Virginia if he does not think there is great danger, if it is provided that the National Government shall hire horses for the Cavalry and Artillery arms of the National Guard, that most of the National Guard will convert itself into cavalry or artillery. Would it not be a great incitation to the local livery business? As I understand, the present Cavalry of the National Guard furnish their own horses.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to say we have no cavalry company in Virginia. I do not think there is any in many of the States.

It is too expensive.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Virginia mentioned the Cavalry arm as well as the Artil-

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not mention the Cavalry. was referring especially to the Artillery. I think our Cavalry troopers in Georgia all own their own horses, and are horsemen. The difficulty is to procure horses that will do service for the Artillery, as they have had no training at all. It is exceedingly difficult to take an ordinary horse and put him at once with a gun behind him in an Artillery movement and find him proficient. To really handle guns satisfactorily part of the horses at least should have had some experience.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is a pretty indefinite proposition, it strikes me, for the Government to take the position that it will hire horses, with no limitation upon the length of time they are to be hired or when the troops are to turn out.

It might mean a very great expense,
Mr. SWANSON. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Mississippi, that an Artillery company should turn out two or three times a year. They usually go to their encampment. The only necessity for horses is when they go to their encampment for instruction by Regular Army officers. When that time comes, the Government furnishes equipment of all kinds for the Infantry; they are furnished transportation; they are furnished food; they are furnished guns; they incur no expense; and they have their salaries paid at the rate the Regular Army officers and more received. Army officers and men receive.

When it comes to practice with the artillery, which is the most important part, they are confronted with the difficulty that there are no funds provided for horses to haul the guns. It is utterly impossible for them to carry them on the cars and get them to the encampment. So far as the artillery is concerned, there are no horses unless the members of the command will go into their own pockets to provide the means to hire horses. It is impossible to learn how to use the guns on a field of battle unless the horses are provided and trained.

This does not increase the appropriation. Each State gets a certain pro rata part of this money, according to the number it has in the militia. The militia board of each State will apportion it between the Infantry and the Artillery and the Cavalry. As it is now, when the time for such practice comes, it is impossible for the governor of the State to provide the money in order that the men and the horses may have the practice necessary to make them efficient in time of war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator from Virginia think it would be well, in case an amendment of that sort is adopted, to limit the hiring to the annual encampment?

Mr. SWANSON. The purpose of the amendment, as I have drawn it, is to limit it to the Artillery. I did not know anything about the Cavalry because I had had no experience with their practice exercises.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about the Artillery, but about limiting the provision to the annual encampment.

Mr. SWANSON. It reads:

Provided, That the War Department may use a part of this appropriation for the hire of horses for the practice exercises of the organized Artillery of the State militia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator think it would be well to add "at the time of the annual encampment"? Otherwise Artillery companies might want to practice at other times, very much to the benefit of the local livery stables.

Mr. SWANSON. The difficulty is that very frequently the State does not have an annual encampment. That is very expensive. Sometimes one encampment will absorb all the funds. clothing, ammunition, and equipment furnished for the entire year. Very frequently the governor or the military board will not have an encampment for a year, but will use the funds apportioned it to equip the command. Sometimes they will simply order out the Artillery for practice.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. GALLINGER. It is agreed among Senators that the bill go over until to-morrow, as an executive session is desired, and I think the Senator from Illinois is ready to make that motion.

Mr. SWANSON. I will take pleasure in yielding for that purpose, with the privilege of bringing this amendment up to-morrow at this point.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to remark to the Senator from Virginia that under the agreement the bill is being read for amendment, the committee amendments to be considered first. His amendment would not come in anyhow, even if it could be favorably considered, until after the amendments of the committee have been disposed of.

I give notice that I shall call up the bill to-morrow immediately after the routine morning business.

Mr. WARREN. In view of the fact that I cited to-day and had inserted in the RECORD certain resolutions and records of the House bearing upon the powers of the Appropriation Committees, and that the Senator from Mississippi obtained leave to file other papers, I ask that I may also have leave to confer with him and file other papers if necessary to those he may file.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection such permission is granted.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to leave the amendment pending?

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to leave the amendment pending. move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 7 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 12, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 11, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, let Thy kingdom come in all our hearts, that with clear perceptions of right and duty we may strive earnestly and sincerely to exemplify in our daily life and conduct the sublime principles enunciated by the Master and fulfilled in His incomparable life and character, and glory and honor and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DUPLICATE ENGROSSED BILLS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 490.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be instructed to request the Senate to furnish the House of Representatives duplicate engrossed copies of Senate bills 4314 and 4623, the originals having been lost or destroyed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have curlosity enough to want to know how so many of these bills get lost. We passed a resolution similar to this last

Mr. SHERWOOD. Two Senate pension bills were lost. I can not account for how they were lost. This is to supply duplicates.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, of course I shall not object, but what is the matter that we lose so many of these bills? We passed a resolution last night similar to this for one bill, and now comes a resolution for two this morning.

Mr. SHERWOOD. They were not lost in this office. They were never sent over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the Speaker is informed that the Clerk of the House holds receipts from the committee clerks for these bills. I do not know that that explanation explains, but it is stated in justice to the clerical force at the desk.

Mr. MANN. That in part satisfies my curiosity. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

NORWEGIAN ICE BREAKER "KIT."

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I filed a report from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries this morning on the bill (H. R. 17235) to grant American registry to the Norwegian ice breaker Kit, and I ask leave that the minority have five days within which to file their views (H. Rept. 523, pt. 2). The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have five days within which to file their views on the bill referred to. Is there objection? There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF POST ROADS.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following resolution from the Committee on Rules, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint committee of both Houses of Congress is hereby created, to be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President thereof, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker thereof. Any vacancy occurring on the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment.

The said committee is hereby empowered and directed to collect information and to make a thorough and complete investigation of the condition of the public highways in the several States of the Union, including the cost of transportation thereon; the improvement, construction, and maintenance of such public highways and the cost thereof; the cost of carrying the mail over such highways and the improvement of the mail service that may be obtained by the improvement of the post roads in the United States. The committee is hereby authorized and directed to report to the Congress all information obtained from such investigation, together with recommendations as to the advisability of the Congress granting national aid to the maintenance and building of post roads and national highways in the United States, and to make recommendations as to the proper legislation to be enacted by the Congress.

The said joint committee shall conclude its investigations and report to this Congress all the evidence taken and their findings and conclusions thereon. The same at the confidence of the conclude its investigations and conclusions thereon.

Congress.

The said joint committee shall conclude its investigations and report to this Congress all the evidence taken and their findings and conclusions thereon. The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expenses of said joint committee, the sum to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not a privileged resolution, and unless it can be called up at some time when gentlemen who may wish to be heard upon the subject are present, I shall object.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have not offered it as a privileged resolution. I intended to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, but if the gentleman intends

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a resolution of this sort, which is called up by unanimous consent, called up on unanimous-consent day, after the resolution has been reported and we have had an opportunity of seeing the resolution and the report.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield for an inquiry?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if there is pending before the Committee on Rules a motion for a rule to make an amendment for a general parcel post in order to the pending Post Office appropriation bill? It is a matter of much moment to the people of the country, and I would like to know from the gentleman whether such a rule will be reported to the House ere the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill is concluded?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. This is another matter, the gentleman understands.

Mr. SULZER. I am asking for information.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that the Committee on Rules has not yet considered the question about which he inquires, and there is now no way of knowing what they will do.

Mr. SULZER. When will the Committee on Rules take up the matter?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Within the next few days.

Mr. SULZER. Before the Post Office appropriation bill is disposed of?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Before the bill leaves the House I think it will be taken up.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the committee will speedily consider the matter and bring in such a rule. The people demand a gen-eral parcel post, and the quickest way to get it is by legislation on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. There is no question that this resolution is not privileged.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I concede for the present it is not privileged.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, in the preparation of this resolution, while the committee was considering the propriety of building highways in rural districts at Federal expense, he or the members of the Committee on Rules gave any consideration whatever to the propriety of investigating the necessity for building out of the Federal Treasury streets used for the delivery of mails in the great cities of the country, and whether this resolution contemplates the ascertainment of facts in connection with the construction of streets in cities like New York, Chicago, Buffalo, Cleveland, and the other great cities of the country?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Of course the gentleman's question is very far-reaching. We have left that to the proposed committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I noticed in the reading of the resolution that no mention was made of highways in cities used for the delivery of mail.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to suggest that the streets of the cities are usually good enough for the automobiles to get through, and there has not been the pressure from the automobile manufacturers in regard to the city streets that there has been in regard to the country roads.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, seeing there might be some slight objection, I withdraw the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the resolution. This is District of Columbia day.

CONCEALED WEAPONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 14094, on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14004) declaring the carrying openly or concealed about the person any pistol, bowie knife, dirk or dirk knife, blackjack, Cagger, sword cane, slung shot, brass or other metal knuckle in the District of Columbia a felony.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons within the District of Columbia to have concealed about their person or to carry openly any pistol, bowie knife, dirk or dirk knife, blackjack, dagger, sword cane, slung shot, brass or other metal knuckle; and any person or persons having any of said weapons or instruments concealed about the person or carrying the same openly in the District of Columbia shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than one year nor more than three years: Provided, That prosecutions under this act shall be had by indictment in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That the officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates of the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, police officers, oilicers guarding prisoners, officials of the United States or the District of Columbia engaged in the execution of the laws for the protection of persons or property, when any such persons are on duty, shall not be liable under this act.

Sec. 2. That so much of any section of the act approved May 11, 1898, entitled "An act to punish the carrying or selling of deadly or dangerous weapons within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," which is inconsistent with this act, and only so far as the same may be inconsistent herewith, is hereby repealed.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "or persons."

Page 1, line 4, insert between the words "concealed" and "about" the words "upon or."

Same page, same line, strike out the word "their" and insert in lieu thereof the word "his."

After the word "Columbia," line 4, insert a period. Same line, strike out "And provided further."

Strike out all of lines 5 and 6, page 2, except the word "police" at end of line 6, and spell that word with a capital P.

Page 2, line 7, insert the word "legal" before the word "prisoners."
Same line, strike out "officials of the." At line 8, after the word "States," insert "marshals and their deputies." After the word "States," strike out all in said line 8, as well as all of line 9 and all of line 10 to and including the word "duty," and insert in lieu thereof "marshals and their deputies while actually on official duty."

Strike out all of section 2.

Add to the bill the following:

"Any knife having a blade longer than three inches shall be deemed to be a deadly weapon.

"So much of any act as empowers anybody or any court to authorize anyone to carry a concealed deadly weapon.

"Sec. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this bill as originally introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] made it a felony for anyone to carry arms openly. The Constitution provides that arms may be borne openly, and the committee has stricken out all of that part of the bill with reference to the bearing of arms openly and have confined it alone to the carrying of concealed deadly weapons. The committee is of the opinion that this is an important bill, and this being the National Capital, that a law ought to be framed, and a stringent one, which might at some future time be adopted by all the States. It is already a misdemeanor to carry concealed deadly weapons in the District of Columbia, but it does not prohibit it. Deadly weapons are still being carried in the District of Columbia and frequently fines are assessed on that account. This bill makes it a felony to carry a concealed deadly weapon, and if it could make it more I would support it much more heartily. Those who have grown up in sections of the country where the carrying of concealed deadly weapons is engaged in are those who most earnestly strive to strike it down, and I believe that if it is made a felony in the District of Columbia to carry concealed weapons, a man feeling that everybody else is disarmed will go disarmed himself, and I believe making it a felony will disarm everybody in the District of Columbia. For reasons I am most earnestly advocating the passage of the bill just as it is. I reserve the remainder of my time, and yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill, and anyone can see, if he will read the bill without the amendments, just how it was introduced. The committee have put in certain amendments after investigating the matter, and I do not desire to contend with the committee as to those amendments, but I certainly do most seriously advocate making it a felony to carry the weapons covered by this bill in the District of Columbia, except by those who are authorized by law to carry such weapons. Now, many years ago in the State of Tennessee there were carried by some citizens what was then known as bowie knives, which was made a felony to so carry. And after it was made a felony to carry that knife it was no longer carried, because you could not defend yourself even if you carried it. To defend yourself from deadly assault you were still liable to a felony for carrying it. In this Capital of the Nation, where one President of the United States has been shot down in a public railway station by a man capital of a conceptly weapon supplied without inby a man carrying a concealed weapon, anybody without in-curring more than a misdemeanor penalty can go around this Capital with deadly weapons in his pocket covered by the bill, with which, from the highest officer of the land, from the President himself down to the humblest citizen, he may shoot down and murder, I say it is a sad commentary upon our civilization that Congress will sit here and permit that which we can prevent and which can not possibly be of any use to any lawabiding citizen.

Like the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson] said, if no person could carry a pistol without committing a felony, then it would not be necessary for gentlemen to carry pistols to protect themselves, because men would not take the risk. Even the burglar would not take such a risk. Look down in the State of Virginia where, a few days ago, a judge was shot down and several other persons killed by men present with deadly weapons concealed in their pockets. If it had been a felony to carry such weapons, in all probability, that crime would not have been committed. You can see when a man has a shotgun or a rifle or a sword in his hand. You can get out of his way or protect yourself from him, but from the man who carries a concealed weapon in his hip pocket or elsewhere there is no way to protect yourself, and there is no need at this day and time for any such weapon being carried in the District of Columbia or any other city. And when you make it a felony to carry such a weapon you will not need to carry it by reason of persons who may carry them in violation of law, for they will not carry them.

It was proven by the bowie-knife experience in Tennessee. It will be the same way here. And, further, it will stop the killing of persons innocently by reason of the pistol that is loaded and not known to be loaded. It has been only a few years since a boy killed a playmate here in just that way. There have been many homicides in the District of Columbia since I have been a Member of this body that would not have taken place had it not been that it was a mere misdemeanor to carry a concealed weapon. We do not need them. More people are killed accidentally by reason of the carrying of these weapons than have ever been saved from being killed by reason of having such weapons. Here we have the whole power of the Army and Navy for our defense. Here we have as effective a police force as any in the world for our defense; therefore people do not need to have pistols in their pockets except as provided in this bill.

I will vote for the bill even as amended.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I notice in the bill there are some exceptions as to deputies and marshals while actually engaged in their duties, providing that they can carry a pistol if concealed. Is there any exception drawn from any previous bill as to people whose lives have been threatened? Can they carry a pistol?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The latter portion of the bill expressly sets that out.

expressly sets that out.

Mr. SIMS. If a man can go up and make an affidavit that he thinks his life is in danger, and wants to carry a pistol, then men will do the same thing when they think their life is in danger when they want to commit a crime. I think it is wrong that such a thing exists now. But as long as anybody is allowed to carry a pistol or concealed weapon as described in this bill, they may not need to make an affidavit. But when nobody is allowed to carry concealed weapons without going to the penitentiary, people will know that they will not need to protect themselves against such threatened crimes, and we ought to set an example here to every city in this country by making it a felony for the citizen or anyone else, except an officer of the law in the discharge of his duty, by preventing people going around as a walking arsenal in this year of grace

I hope there will be no opposition to this bill. I hope that no gentleman in this House feels that he will ever need to carry a pistol in the discharge of his duty in this House or this Capital. I am confident that no man has ever done so here voluntarily, and no man has ever done so here who would have done it if he knew he was protected by a law that kept everybody else from doing it. Whenever you make it a felony to carry a concealed weapon, unless you are in the exempted classes, you will have no fear of some other man carrying a pistol to commit a wrong, the punishment for which perhaps is not so great as applies to the simple carrying of the weapon.

I do not know whether I have used all my time or not, Mr. Speaker. If I have not, I yield back the balance to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson]. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Two minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I yield it back to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] yields back two minutes.

Mr. MANN. I would like a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. How much time does the gentleman want. I will yield all you wish.

Mr. MANN. I will not take very long.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will yield whatever time the gentleman wants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I never have carried any of these concealed weapons myself, but it strikes me that this bill is rather drastic in its terms. A man who would purchase a case knife, a table knife, at a store in this town and put it in his pocket to take it home under this bill would be subjected to imprisonment for one year in the penitentiary, with no discretion on the part of the judge. I suppose that is not intended?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no. It is not carried as a weapon in that case. A case knife is not described in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; a case knife is described in the bill—any knife having a blade longer than 3 inches shall be deemed to be a deadly weapon.

Mr. SIMS. That is

Mr. SIMS. That is an amendment by the committee.

Mr. MANN. And every man that carries a deadly weapon is subject, upon conviction, to imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than three years. A man carrying home a razor that he had purchased and putting it in his pocket would be committing a felony, and if indicted for it there would be no escape from conviction and punishment by the court. This gives no discretion to the court.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under the bill would a man be guilty of a crime if he would carry a razor with a blade about 23 inches long?

Mr. MANN. Under the bill a man would be guilty of a crime if he carried a razor at all of any length.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understood the gentleman to say that the bill defined a knife to mean-

Mr. MANN. It defines any knife with a blade longer than 3 inches as a deadly weapon, and after enumerating razors and other deadly weapons it includes them under the generic term deadly weapons."

Mr. NORRIS. Does that include safety razors? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I suppose it would.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I suppose it covers razors generally without regard to the length of the blade.

Mr. MANN. The bill prohibits the carrying of any pistol, bowie knife, dirk or dirk knife, blackjack, dagger, sword cane, slung shot, brass or other metal knuckle, with the amendments carried by the committee-clasp knife, razor, and so forth, or other deadly weapon.

Now, I do not know just what the provisions now are with reference to the carrying of deadly weapons. I believe we ought to have a strict law on the subject.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The carrying of a deadly weapon under this bill would not be a penal offense unless the person carrying it attempted to conceal it?

Mr. MANN. He would not have to attempt to conceal it if he put it in his pocket where it would be concealed.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. If he concealed it he would be amenable to the law, and not otherwise.

Mr. MANN. If a man puts it in his pocket it is concealed. If it is covered with paper so that it is not observable it is concealed. That is not a matter of possible argument. If it were not concealed the bill would be of no value.

It seems to me that, in any event, instead of providing that upon conviction a person shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than one year, the court ought to have discretion as to the length of time. In the criminal code, which we revised a few years ago, we absolutely struck out in every place the provision fixing the minimum penalty of imprisonment and fixed the maximum, leaving it to the discretion of the court to determine what the minimum should be. I think we have not incorporated that provision anywhere else. We have pending in the other body a bill, favorably reported, which would send to punishment Members of this House and of the other body in reference to the use of the Congressional Library. I obtain from the Congressional Library five or six They are returned books every week, delivered at my home. every week, in my opinion; I am quite certain of it. But at the end of every term of Congress for years I have received a notice from the Librarian that certain books which had been sent to me had not been returned. A bill is pending, which will soon be over here-I believe it has been introduced into the House, and I see it was favorably reported the other day by the District Committee in the House; a report has not been made yet, if so ordered—which makes that punishable, not if I willfully detain a book, but if I get the book and do not return it, although it may have been destroyed by accident.

Passing penal provisions of this sort may be great annoyance to the people who are innocent, and they usually result in the guilty people escaping, because while a man may be indicted for carrying home a razor if somebody wishes to take revenge upon him no ordinary jury would convict a person and adjudge him guilty of a crime and send him to the penitentiary for it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to his colleague? Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as I know, the law in every State has in it provisions similar to this proposed law, except as to the punishment. The carrying of deadly weapons concealed is a misdemeanor only. Now, does the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, know of any cases where men were unjustly punished for this misdemeanor, as, for instance, the carrying of a table knife concealed, or anything of that sort?

Mr. MANN. I think there is no case in any of the States where they define as a deadly weapon a knife having a blade longer than 3 inches, without any further description than that.

Mind you, I am in favor of making the carrying of deadly weapons very objectionable to those who have heretofore carried them, so that it will not be done; but if we fix the law so that it is too extreme the result will be that in the end it will come to be violated with impunity.

Mr. GRAHAM. It seems to me that the only difference between this and most existing laws on the subject is in the severer punishment provided here.

Mr. MANN. I think that is the main difficulty. Mr. SIMS. The amendment which the gentleman speaks about, as to the length of the knife blade, is a committee amend-The gentleman thinks that amendment is too drastic. Would that prevent anybody to be punished who violated the law by carrying the other weapons mentioned, like the pistol, the dirk, the slung shot? Would the whole law fall because the prohibited length of a knife blade might, in the gentleman's opinion, be too short?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the law would fall at all. I was calling attention to the drastic penalties provided in the bill, which might subject entirely innocent people to imprisonment, with no right on the part of the court to do otherwise.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman have reason to believe that if a man bought a razor and carried it home, he would not be convicted either by a jury or a court of having committed an unlawful act?

Mr. MANN. I think it is not unlawful. I have reason to believe that if I purchased a razor and carried it home nobody would suspect me. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. But there are some people who buy and carry razors as weapons, and use them as such.

Mr. MANN. If I should carry a razor home and use it, I do not know but I ought to be punished.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman think the words "a blade longer than 3 inches" might be considered a provision to promote the use of safety razors? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think the "blade longer than 3 inches" does not apply to a razor. I had hoped that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] would be willing to amend the bill so as to provide that the punishment should not exceed a certain amount of fine or a certain term of imprisonment, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, the gentleman wants to make it simply a misdemeanor, which it is now, and which does not protect the people against pistol carriers.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing not to define it either as a misdemeanor or a felony, but to leave it so that the court can inflict the three-year punishment, but so that the jury and the court are not required either to acquit a man or to send him to the penitentiary for one year, when nobody would believe in certain cases that it ought to be done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, several gentlemen have spoken of this bill as being very drastic. If it is not very drastic, then the committee have utterly failed in their purpose, because the purpose of the committee was to make it drastic. Unless it is made drastic, this practice of carrying concealed deadly weapons here will not be broken up, and to make it a felony is the only way to break it up. To make it a felony will disarm every man; and when we disarm every man, then no man can have any excuse for even wanting to carry a deadly weapon.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is there any overpowering reason why the minimum punishment may not be made lower?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], it might not be a felony then, and so far as I am concerned personally, I would rather see the minimum five years than one.

Mr. GRAHAM. Cases might arise where gross injustice would be done to some one who was really guilty under the law by sending him to the penitentiary for a year. I can conceive of cases where three months, or one month, might be punishment enough. Now, would not the bill, if it becomes a law, be more likely to be enforced by juries and courts if you give a wider latitude in the punishment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think not; that has been tried in Kentucky, where we have a statute making this very offense punishable by both fine and imprisonment, and in the punishment for every conviction imprisonment goes with the fine; yet it has not broken up the practice, and it is now being agitated by all the press in Kentucky to make this offense a felony, believing that will break it up. I wish to see it started right here.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Tennessee refer to the matter of felony. I am not going to define what a felony is at this time. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when we passed the codification of the criminal code in the Sixtieth Congress, one of the very distinguished members of the committee [Mr. Sher-LEY], being a colleague of the gentleman from Kentucky, we undertook to carry through, and did carry all through that bill, not a distinction between a misdemeanor and a felony, not provisions fixing the minimum penalty, but provisions like this. I am only reading the penalties for the various offenses, to which I opened by accident on this page.

SEC. 61. * * Shall be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than 90 days, or both.

SEC. 62. * * Shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 63. * * Shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than three years.

SEC. 64. * * Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

That form of penalty runs all through the criminal code, and has been substantially carried in most of the penal provisions or laws since that time. Does the gentleman think that there is any occasion here for departing from that theory of the criminal code?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not care how it is expressed, so that the minimum penalty is a very severe one.

Mr. MANN. The way it is expressed all through the code fixes no minimum penalty at all. I think there is not a minimum penalty fixed in any provision in the criminal code either for counterfeiting or anything else.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The intention of this bill is to make a minimum penalty and make it severe, so that these matters may not be lightly treated and so that the court will have to impose a severe penalty, though it be the minimum.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman thinks that in the matter of carrying a deadly weapon we ought to depart from the policy agreed upon and heretofore fixed by the action of Congress on these matters?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think so, because it is intended to deprive the court of the power to exercise leniency, which too often happens.

Mr. SIMS. With many men who carry pistols a fine would be ne punishment.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly. Mr. DIXON of Indiana. In some States they have an exception that a traveler has the right to carry a pistol. You have no such exception.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; and I do not think we ought to have.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Did the committee consider that proposition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but I think if a man goes into your State he ought not to be permitted to carry a pistol any more than you who live there.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will. Mr. BARTHOLDT. Under the present law what authority grants the customary permit to carry concealed weapons? I understand it is the custom to grant permits to persons to carry concealed weapons.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; and I understand it is greatly abused.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Do the commissioners grant them? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They are granted by the court for 30 days at a time and often renewed.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I notice that there is a provision in this bill which does away with that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; we do not want to permit anybody to carry concealed weapons, except it be an officer authorized to make arrests.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Another question. This bill evidently only applies to males.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman will understand that the word "his" is male, but it applies to the genus homo, both to a male man and to a female man.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I merely want to suggest that it ought to embrace both male and female.

Mr. MANN. Under the provisions of the first chapter of the Revised Statutes that is so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to some views I have on the matter. I do not suppose any Member of the House is more opposed to carrying concealed weapons than am I. I introduced a bill putting an internal-revenue tax on the manufacture and sale of these

Now, I can not advocate such a bill with my views of the Constitution, but if Congress is willing to apply the same principles as were applied in the bill that was passed to destroy certain match factories the other day, you have a remedy that will be effectual and permanent and forever prevent carrying concealed weapons, and will break the evil up, root and branch.

The Constitution of the United States guarantees to a man the right to bear arms. The courts have held that the legislature can prescribe the manner in which arms may be carried, but neither a State legislature nor Congress can pass a law forbidding entirely the carrying of arms,

But I call the attention of the House to this provision of the Constitution:

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Of course, if we take the general view that the mind of Congress may determine absolutely what is an unusual punishment, without leaving it to the court, that provision of the Constitution might just as well not have been written, and for that reason all the criminal statutes that I know of in all the States of the Union, and, so far as I have examined, all the statutes defining an act to be a crime under the Federal Government, leave a wide discretion in the court so that he may not inflict nor be compelled to inflict upon the citizen a cruel and unusual punishment. I do not believe that the concealed-weapon law has operated well throughout the country. I have always voted for a concealed-weapon law, and if a man is a habitual criminal, a habitual thug, a habitual thief, he ought to be punished as such, and the punishment in his case should be severe; but with the boy or the man who is not a criminal, the man who has never been charged with a crime, the same punishment would be severe and unusual. The young man in the country who might put a concealed weapon in his pocket, under this bill, would be branded as a felon before the country and his whole future destroyed. In many instances this punishment would not only be cruel, but it would be inhuman, and I believe that that provision of the Constitution should control us in making this bill, so that the court might be vested with a discretion in order that the punishment might not be cruel and unusual and degrading, and so that is would not destroy a young man's future hope and happiness. I be-lieve that the laws of the land ought to be so framed that they will make men better, and they will observe them. Punishment in one instance might be good, when it is mildly inflicted, and in another it might destroy a man's regard for the law and peace and quiet. I do not believe that punishment ought ever to be inflicted under the law for the sole and express purpose of injuring an individual. The purpose of punishment is that it may be an example to others; that it may cause others to cease to commit crime. There is no Indian revenge in the enforcement of law, and there ought not to be. Law ought to be enforced with the idea that it will preserve law and order, and deter other men from the commission of like crimes. sincerely trust that when the House shall vote upon this bill it shall have in it such an amendment as that suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and Congress will then be doing a sane and rational thing.

The question suggested by my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] is also worthy of consideration on the part of the House. In all the States that I know of the question of whether or not a man's life is in danger and whether a man's life has been threatened is always a matter of defense. In my own State the law is that no man has a right to get a permit to carry a concealed weapon. Such permission can now be obtained under the law in the District of Columbia, but where a man's life has been threatened, he must not only prove that, but more—that he has a good and sufficient reason to believe that he is in danger. It is a matter of defense. He must prove his defense before the jury. In this case the thug who cares nothing about the law may put a pistol in his pocket, and the law-abiding citizen, however mild the punishment might be, would not want to carry the weapon. If he is willing to take chances, if he is willing to say on oath, "I believe my life is in danger," if he is a reputable and good citizen and can go further and show that a dangerous man has threatened to take his life at any time he may see him, and that should be believed by the jury as a matter of defense, then, as long as that danger was impending, as long as that danger surrounded him, the law ought not to take away from the man that God-given right to defend his own existence.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. JAMES. A person whose life has been threatened and who would go and make oath to it in order to get the right to carry a concealed weapon would have an equal right to swear out a peace warrant against a man who threatened to take his

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And he has that right in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JAMES. And he could have the one who threatened his life put under bond to keep the peace. He would not have to kill him. He could have the man put in jail, and would that not be a better remedy?

Mr. SISSON. Under this bill no such right as that would be given.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the geutleman from Mississippi that under the laws of the District of Columbia when a man does threaten the life of another he can be punished for a great length of time; he can be put in prison for a longer time in the District of Columbia than in any other place in the Union that I know of. If a man threatens the life of another, he can be indicted and tried, convicted, and imprisoned.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true, but let me tell the gentleman that I shall never, as long as I live under this free flag, feel that I am compelled to go and have a man incarcerated in order that I may be safe from an attack of another man.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then the gentleman would prefer to take the law in his own hands rather than have a law which prevents him being put in that position?

Mr. SISSON. I do not, but I do not want the statute so written that good men will frequently be compelled to take the law in their own hands.

Mr. JAMES. The remedy the gentleman should observe is that the law steps in and takes charge of this man who wants to take human life. It does not say to him, go and get a pistol: we give you that right, and perhaps the man will go and kill him, but the law can step in and take that man in charge and save life. Is not that a better remedy than to allow the man to go out and get a pistol?

Mr. SISSON. The law never will say to any man, take a Mr. SISSON. The law never will say to any man, take a pistol and go kill him; but the law in nearly all the States I know permits a man if he shall be caught with a pistol on to make as a defense under the Constitution that his life was in danger.

Mr. JAMES. I will say where a man's life is threatened and he goes before a justice of the peace or county judge and makes oath that this man has threatened his life, then a warrant issues for this man to be brought before the court, and if it is shown that he has threatened this man he is put under bond to keep the peace in an amount as the justice may think wise. Is not that a better way than to give the man a pistol to go and kill him.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask a question here of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SISSON. I have the floor, but I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. CULLOP. Did you ever know anybody to be bound over to keep the peace-

Mr. JAMES. Oh, in my practice of the law for 20 years I have seen it frequently done.

Mr. CULLOP. My experience has been under a similar statute that the man always becomes very docile when the hearing is had, and he always escapes being bound over.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, frequently he is bound over to keep the peace, and it is just that sort of thing that has saved many lives in Kentucky.

Mr. CULLOP. My experience is different in that matter, or my observation, rather.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, if a man shall give bond to keep the peace, and shall agree to keep the peace, it is quite possible that he may not keep his bond. It is quite possible that it would be ineffective, and the next time he met his adversary, if he had made up his mind he would take human life and ignore the bond, it would not protect anyone from assault. It would be a poor defense for him, after his adversary shall have made a bond, the next time he met him to find himself absolutely unarmed and helpless to defend himself.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

May I have five minutes more? Mr. SISSON.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. JACKSON. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. SISSON. Yes. Mr. JACKSON. There is nothing in this law in such an extreme case as the gentleman describes to prevent a man buying a Winchester and just carrying it around, is there?

Mr. SISSON. Of course not; but when a man comes with a Winchester down the street and I see him, I have the opportunity then of going and getting a Winchester and doing likewise, or I have the opportunity of getting out of the way; but when he carries the weapon concealed he has all the advantage of me in the world, and that is the reason I despise a man who takes an infamous arsenal around in his pocket, because if he does the opportunity to commit a crime is very great, and it is a great wrong, and we ought to take it away, if we could do it; but I want to say the law is not going to stop the criminal carrying weapons, and no man in this House believes it will ever.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then you are opposed to any other law of this kind.

Mr. JACKSON. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact it will not prevent the carrying of a weapon, but only prevents the concealing of it.

Mr. SISSON. I think the law has done a good deal of good, but the law against murder has not prevented murders being committed and the law against arson has not prevented that crime, and I do not want to repeal them at all. Of course I would not repeal this law and I am willing this shall become a law if you can make the punishment in it reasonable and not unreasonable.

Would you think a burglar who carried a pistol Mr. SIMS. around and killed somebody was sufficiently punished when sent to the penitentiary for one year?

Mr. SISSON. When a man carries a pistol it is an unusual punishment to send him to the penitentiary. I am unwilling that a boy 15, 17, or 18 years old who is caught with a pistol in the District of Columbia shall be sent to the penitentiary and have his young life blighted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He will not put it in his pocket if this law passes.

Mr. SISSON. We ought to be angels, but we are not. We ought to deal with human nature as it is and not as it ought to be, and you will never make a man rise above himself or make him better by law. You can stop a man from stealing by putting him in jail, but you can not make him honest. can deter others from the commission of a like offense by punishing the offender. So I am unwilling that this bill should pass unless the court has some discretion. If he is an habitual criminal, without shame, then the punishment should be drastic. But this bill is entirely too drastic, and I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Illinois when he says that there ought to be a provision here so that a man could be imprisoned or could be fined a small sum, within the discretion of the court, for the court at last will have to enforce any law you put upon the statute books, and we may just as well intrust the court to enforce the law and administer the punishment. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment thereto.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to offer an

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the motion. I did not know the gentleman wanted to offer an amendment.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield— Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. MANN. I will offer the amendment, and then I do not

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLAYPOOL). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "shall," strike out all after the word "shall" down to and including the word "year," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If you will put it "and both,"

I will agree to it.

Mr. MANN. Well, I could not do that. Mr. Speaker, the proposition which I have offered is to strike out the penalty of not less than one year nor more than three years, and insert in lieu thereof a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment of not more than three years, or both, to be left to the discretion of the judge.

In the criminal code, as I remarked a while ago, which we passed a few years back, we adopted the policy which is carried through every section of the code, using the form which I have used in this amendment. For instance, in section 2 of the code

it says:

Whoever * * * shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman if a fine of $1 could not there be imposed?

Mr. MANN. It might be, and perhaps ought to be. say a boy of a few years of age who had taken his father's revolver and put it in his pocket at home, as many a boy has done, and who is arrested for some offense, probably bicycle riding on the sidewalk, and a policeman, with whom he had some altercation, should find a revolver in his pocket, ought not to be sent to the penitentiary and ought not to be fined more than $1.

Mr. SIMS. If that boy knew if he put his father's revolver in his pocket and went out with it, it would be a felony and he would go to the penitentiary, under those circumstances do you believe that he would take it?

Mr. MANN. I do not believe there would be one boy in a hundred who would know what the law was on the subject. I would guarantee now that there is not a Member of this House, including the gentleman who drew the bill and the gentleman who reported the bill, who knows what the law is to-day on the subject of carrying deadly weapons, so as to cover every provision in it. And yet we expect boys to know all about it who know nothing with reference to the law at all.

Mr. SIMS. I want to ask the gentleman how many good fathers he thinks will keep a pistol stuck around their premises if it is a felony for his boy, or himself either, to carry a concealed weapon?

Mr. MANN. Well, I think it is quite proper to keep a pistol in your house, or some other kind of weapon. While I have not done it in recent years, if I were keeping house here in some house in the town, and living there with my wife alone, I would feel I was derelict in my duty if I did not have some weapon in the house either to defend my wife in my absence or defend ourselves at night. That is not against the law.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the gentleman suffers so much fear. I have a larger family than he has, and I have never had a pistol in the house, and never expect to have, nor any other kind of weapon.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can afford to live in a better house than I can and on a street where there is better police protection.

Mr. SIMS. I am not so afraid of burglars that I have an old pistol lying around the house.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. May we have the amendment read again? The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Page 2, line 1, strike out, after the word "shall," down to and including the word "year," in line 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this amendment. You might almost as well not pass this bill as to pass it with this amendment. It is a mere discretionary punishment. Who wants to put a fine of $1,000 on some white or black boy? The rich, who can afford to pay the money, will carry pistols, and the judges will not put any of them in prison when left to their discretion. If you want to ruin this bill, leave a discretion in the court, and most earnest pleas will be made to the court as to the respectability of the man and his family, that it is his first offense, and so on. Now, good Christian fathers, with a law making the carrying of pistols a felony, are not going to have them lying around a room where their wives or boys can use them or carry them.

For years the Evening Star of this city, a paper that has always advocated good morals, has asked for this legislation, and pointed out instance after instance where deaths and homicides have followed by reason of not having such a law as this on the books. I do not care what the laws of the District of Columbia are now. I can not repeat verbatim what they are. But I know they do not protect the people from the evil of carrying concealed weapons. What burglar, white or black, or what criminal, white or black, would care for going down and perjuring himself and saying that his life was in danger in order to carry a concealed deadly weapon? It is too late in this age of civilization for any gentleman to get up and oppose this bill on hypothetical, impossible cases which people imagine might happen.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the penalty of one year's imprisonment is the lowest prescribed for a felony in the District?

Mr. SIMS. I could not state positively how that is. But whether it is or is not, why does the gentleman want anything less than a year for a man to walk around here as a human arsenal, with the Army and the Navy, the Metropolitan police, and the Capitol police all here to protect him against any possible assaults that may be made upon him?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to ask the gentleman this other question: Suppose the case suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], of a young man taking a pistol from his father's home. Does not the gentleman believe that a penalty of one year in a penitentiary, as provided under this bill, would, under those circumstances, be an excessive and an unusual punishment?

Mr. SIMS. Of course you can imagine hypothetical cases and impossible cases, and thereby prevent the passage of any criminal law. In the first place, the good father is not going to have the pistol. In the second place, the boy is not going to carry it; and in the third place, if such a case should occur, we have got the pardoning power. Now, we should not stand back and continue the present conditions for the sake of considerations which may be conjured up by a heated imagination as to a boy who might carry his father's pistol out while his father was holding a prayer meeting. I do not believe such a case will occur, and if it did the punishment would be so severe in its nature that the pardoning power would come to his relief.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly, Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Is there any power here that would grant a license permitting the carrying of a pistol?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. If a man thinks his life is in danger he can go down to court and obtain permission. That is a bad provision in the existing law.

Mr. KENDALL. This is a question now as to the policy or expediency of the punishment to be prescribed. Everybody concedes the wisdom of enacting proper safeguards as to the carrying of deadly weapons. Would the gentleman have any objection to striking out the minimum penalty in the bill and making the clause read that the punishment shall be imprisonment in the penitentiary for not more than three years?

Mr. SIMS. That is the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. KENDALL. What could be the objection to allowing the court to determine in such a case and exercise a wide discretion as to the punishment that ought to be applied?

Mr. SIMS. Let me tell you what would happen. human; they are open to appeals to sympathy when it is in their power to punish a crime and fix the penalty. As I say, the poor, friendless negro boy, or the poor, friendless white boy will be trotted off to his three years of punishment in the penitentiary, but the rich and influential boy will probably get the minimum. Now, why not have a rigid minimum? That is the way to prevent crime. Make the punishment in the first place such as will prevent the commission of the crime, and do not put it in the power of any judge to reduce it below that minimum

Mr. KENDALL. But suppose the question of guilt is to be determined by the court-

Mr. SIMS. Certainly—Mr. KENDALL (continuing). In that case does the gentleman believe that juries can be assembled that will convict people where the punishment is as excessive as is provided in this bill?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, the punishment is never excessive when it is necessary to have the law obeyed.

Mr. KENDALL. I think it would defeat the purpose of the bill itself.

Mr. SIMS. Do you think the jury and the judge would perjure themselves when the evidence is clear and plain, simply because the judge and the jury might differ with Congress as to the degree of punishment that ought to be inflicted?

Mr. KENDALL. Does not the gentleman know that in all history where penalties are too severe, the juries will not apply

No: I do not think that is true.

Mr. KONOP. Suppose I should put a razor in my pocket in the morning and bring it over to the barber shop to have it sharpened. Would I be subject to a penalty?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no. You are not going to use it as a weapon.

No jury would convict you under those circumstances.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SIMS. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. Is there a provision in the bill defining when a man carries an instrument of death as a weapon and when he carries it as an ornament or in a legitimate way or accidentally, or anything of that sort?

Mr. SIMS. Yes. He never carries a weapon as an ornament secretly. He always carries it openly in that case, as he would carry a sword, or something of that sort. There is nothing in the bill to prevent that.

Mr. STANLEY. The gentleman does not catch my meaning, I fear. Is there anything in the bill—I was not here when it was read-excepting cases where a man, for instance, should buy a razor and take it home, or get his revolver repaired and have a piece of paper wrapped about it to take it home? Is there any distinction drawn here between carrying a weapon for purposes of homicidal fancies and carrying it for the innocent purposes named by the gentleman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There are no more exceptions in this bill than there are in Kentucky, where the gentleman lives.

Mr. STANLEY. The law says "carrying as a weapon." I caught it from the gentleman's speech, but not from the bill. Mr. KENDALL. There is no provision in this bill that makes that distinction.

Mr. MANN. The bill does not even say "weapons." It says "instruments." It says "weapons or instruments."

Mr. KENDALL. It says "persons carrying these weapons." Mr. SIMS. It does not become a weapon unless it is carried My friend used a case knife as an illustration. P. You describe these things as being deadly as a weapon.

Mr. KONOP. weapons; and if I carry them, it does not make any difference for what purpose, I am liable under this bill.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken about that. Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Is it not a fact that the carrying of any deadly weapon is not a violation of the law unless a man carries it in a concealed condition?

Mr. SIMS. In a concealed manner.
Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. And the question as to whether a man is carrying it in a concealed manner is a question purely of fact, triable by a jury or the judge.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly it is.
Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. So that the question that the gentleman asks can be answered very easily.

Mr. KONOP. If I carry a razor in my pocket, is not that concealed?

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. That is purely a question of fact, to be tried by the judge or jury.

Mr. KONOP. The fact is that it is concealed in my pocket. Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman want to amend this bill so as to permit a razor to be carried as a weapon?

Mr. KONOP. Not at all. I should like to have the bill amended so that if a man carries a gun or a razor or a knife for any other purpose than that of assault he shall not be guilty of a violation of the law.

Mr. SIMS. That would ruin the bill, and I am opposed to it. If the gentleman wants a law which will permit the carrying of dirks, sword canes, and other weapons, and yet make it necessary to prove that they are carried as weapons, when they are homicidal weapons, then the gentleman is opposed to the law, and that is all there is to it. What we ought to do, under the obligation resting upon us, is to make a rigid minimum penalty. When we enact such a law it will break up the practice of carrying deadly weapons. In this city, where two Presidents have been shot down by assassins who carried concealed weapons and where others may be, where they have a large force of secret detectives now who go around with the President every time he goes out, a minimum punishment of one year for carrying a concealed weapon is graciously low.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Yes. Mr. SIMS.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman think that the fellow who intends to kill a President will hesitate on account of the penalty for carrying a weapon of that kind?

Mr. SIMS. He might not, if he was crazy

Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman think that a man who intends to commit an offense that will subject him to capital punishment will be deterred by the penalty provided in this

Not in the case of a crazy man, of course not. Mr. CALLAWAY. Does the gentleman think a man who is going to commit a burglary will stop on account of the penalty provided in this bill for carrying a weapon?

Mr. SIMS. I certainly do.

Mr. CALLAWAY. He is going to commit a greater offense, that will submit him to a heavier penalty.

Mr. SIMS. He may not be caught. Is the gentleman opposed to this bill?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes; I am opposed, as a general thing, to any bill that makes a thing a felony that is not a crime per se.

Mr. SIMS. Then, the gentleman will have to amend every criminal code in this country, if he is in favor of making crimes only those things which are mala in se. If the gentleman desires to make nothing punishable unless it is a natural crime he will start a revolution in this country.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I said a felony. I am not in favor, generally, of making a thing a felony that is not a crime per se.

Mr. SIMS. Then, I have no argument with the gentleman. I am not surprised that he is opposed to this bill.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Suppose a sight-seeing party from my State washington there was a 15-year-old boy who had a pistol in his pocket. Does the gentleman think he ought to be sent to the penitentiary for a number of years?

Mr. SIMS. I think he ought to be sent somewhere for ever starting with such a weapon.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I do not.

Mr. SIMS. I think he ought to be punished to some extent for living in a State that permits such a thing. It would be hard on the boy, but he ought to live in a better State.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I ask the gentleman another question.

Suppose the laws of that State are lax, or it is no violation of law in that State, is it not natural to suppose that the boy might think it was so here?

Mr. SIMS. Why does your Georgia boy want to come to the Capital of the Nation with a pistol in his pocket?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Why do people violate the laws, anyway? Mr. SIMS. The gentleman states an extreme case that would not happen in 100 years.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in some States-I know that it is so in my own State-that there can be set up as a defense the fact that a person was traveling such a distance from his home that took him beyond the circle of his friends and acquaintances, and might not the boy from Georgia be under the impression that the law was the same here as there?

Mr. SIMS. If he was, why that boy from Georgia would be

Mr. SIMS. It lie was, why that boy from deorgia honder pardoned or never convicted.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. I see in the bill, in line 6, it speaks of a clasp knife, and in lines 6, 7, or 8 it says "or other deadly weapons."

That provision of the bill would prevent a man carrying a pocketknife. All the courts have held that a knife that produced death is a deadly weapon.

Mr. SIMS. The bill provides for the length of blade—3 inches. It may be amended to make it 3½ or 4 inches. I want to say to gentlemen that the bill, before it was amended, was drawn by the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. I did not draw it. It was drawn to meet conditions existing here, and the committee amendments are intended only to benefit the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is there any difference between a blade 2 inches long and one 6 inches long as to the effect it will have in attempting to cut a man's throat?

I think so. Mr. Speaker, I yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. CULLOP. I hope the gentleman will not do that; I have an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will withhold it until the gentleman offers it. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the demand for the previous question and I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word in favor of this amendment. I believe that if this bill is passed as it is, imposing a penitentiary sentence, that the law will repeal itself. I have had experience, as I have no doubt other gentlemen here have had, in the prosecution of men charged with the carrying of concealed weapons. We have in my State, and in the courts where I had some experience prosecuting, a statute-I often saw it called into action—which makes it a felony to carry concealed weapons. But it also provides punishment by jail and fine, as well as a penitentiary sentence. I have prosecuted numerous cases before juries of men charged with carrying concealed weapons, and I have never seen in my experience a jury that would send a man to the penitentiary for carrying a concealed weapon unless that man was a most vicious character to lead us to take this action out of regard to the safety of the

and a well-known criminal. Take a young man who would have a pistol in his pocket carrying it from a neighbor's to his own house for some protection of his family, and he should be caught with that weapon concealed in his pocket, you could not find a jury in this whole country that would send him to the penitentiary. But there are cases where men should be punished for carrying a weapon where it is not of such a nature as to invoke a penitentiary sentence. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. It will insure the carrying out of this proposed law, and insure what we want, a stop put to the carrying of concealed weapons in the District of Columbia.

If you find concealed weapons on a criminal or a vicious character, the jury and the court will ordinarily send him to the penitentiary; but you ought to make some provision for the man of good character, who has been found to have upon him a concealed weapon, or a man who is passing through the District. I do not believe that a man who is passing through the District, going from one place to another, should be convicted and punished for having a revolver upon him. The laws of most States make exceptions to such cases, and provide that where a man is merely passing through a State on a mission of business or otherwise, and conducting himself properly, that this law should not be made applicable to him. Let us pass this bill so that it can be enforced and will bring the results looked for. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to make the carrying of concealed deadly weapons a felony. When any amendment is adopted which makes it a smaller offense than a felony I am against it, because the law as it exists in the District of Columbia to-day fixes a small minimum fine, and that law is as good as the amendment that is offered. If such an amendment is adopted I shall move to lay all amendments on the table and hope the bill will be defeated.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the consideration of this bill is, in my judgment, a very important matter, and I think it is well for the House to weigh carefully what is meant by it. It is possible to suggest cases in which the operation of this law may work a hardship. But if this House passes this bill to-day, making the carrying of a concealed weapon a felony, with no right in the court to impose a less punishment, the news of that action on the part of Congress will go all over the United States; and there is no 15-year-old boy with intelligence enough to find his way to the National Capital who will not know that such a law is in existence, and who will not know that he incurs this penalty if he carries a concealed weapon when he comes here. I am in favor of the action which is now contemplated, because I believe that any less punishment will not have the effect that is desired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TOWNER. Certainly. Mr. DYER. Let us take the case of one of the boys that the gentleman mentions—a young man coming, say, from his own State, who does not know about this penalty of a penitentiary sentence for carrying a gun. Suppose he should have purchased one here in Washington or somewhere else and was carrying it home, does the gentleman think that he should be sent to the -penitentiary and made a convict and a felon because of that?

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I believe, in the first place, that there will be no boy, as I suggested a moment ago, of sufficient intelligence to find his way here who will not know, if this bill is passed, what will be the penalty for such an act.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come when this country must do something of this sort in order to stay the flood of violent crime that is the greatest disgrace this Nation to-day suffers, not only in the esteem of the world, but in the judgment of all good people. It is a striking commentary upon the standards that we have established in this country that we are to-day the most violent Nation on earth, the Nation that has the greatest percentage of violent crimes, the Nation that has the least regard for human life of any nation in the world, and, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we can do no greater act to stem this tide of violence in the country than to set here an example that will go out to every part of the Nation that we are opposed to anything that will lead to further crimes of this character. While we here in the city of Washington maintain the open saloon and then invite those to come here with the tendency to buy revolvers or to bring them here, it seems to me we are almost inviting the conditions that arise when passions are inflamed until all restraint is taken away and crimes of violence follow. It seems to me that the high standards of our civilization, that the great necessity that we now see before us, ought lives of the citizens of the country, and especially of this district.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I take it from the discussion here this morning that the purpose of this bill is to meet a local condition which is assumed to exist here in the city of Washington. At the proper time I desire to offer an amendment which I believe is necessary to perfect this bill and which I think the committee will adopt. That amendment will be as follows:

In line 4, after the word "Columbia," insert the words "not then and there being a traveler."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If he is walking along the street is he not a traveler?

Mr. CULLOP. No; that is not the sense in which the word "traveler" is used at all, as the courts have defined it in State after State. It has a well defined meaning. The danger of this bill is the excessive punishment. When you add to a criminal statute an excessive punishment you have nullified the statute itself, and you can not enforce the punishment. When you make such a penalty as you propose here, you would be powerless to enforce the statute. Juries will not enforce it because the punishment provided is excessive. I hope that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kendall] will be accepted, if you want to cure this evil.

In the commission of the offense here defined all offenders should not be punished alike. You have fixed the same punishment for everyone who commits this crime, no matter what the character of the offender and the aggravation attending its commission. A man who would carry a pistol or any other weapon in time of peace in a civilized country like this ought to be punished, of course. He has no need for it, and the punishment ought to be severe, but if you make it too severe, as you are attempting to here, you will be unable to enforce the statute, for the reason that the courts and the juries will hesitate to convict when persons charged are tried. For that reason I think that the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa ought to be adopted, and also the amendment that I propose to offer.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.
Mr. JACKSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that Guiteau, who shot President Garfield, would be termed a traveler under the amendment that he offers?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, you would not try him for carrying a concealed weapon. His offense would come under a different statute altogether. It is not in point.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. You would, if you had caught him before he killed the President.

Mr. CULLOP. He would be tried for the crime that he committed, and if he was found in the city of Washington not passing through or traveling from one point to another, he would be found not to be a traveler under the construction that the courts in almost every State in the Union have placed upon that word when used in the connection it is here employed. Such an illustration is not pertinent to the subject matter under discussion.

Mr. JACKSON. Suppose some police officer had arrested him before he committed a crime?

Mr. CULLOP. He would not be guilty under the statement I have made of carrying concealed weapons.

Mr. JACKSON. He would be a traveler. Mr. CULLOP. No; he would not be a traveler under the construction courts have placed on similar statutes. It is a question of fact to be determined in the trial of the case, like any other question of fact.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman think we ought to have some definition in the law as to what constitutes a traveler?

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, no; we could not well do that, as the circumstances of every case must largely determine it. It is a question of fact under the proof whether a man is a traveler or not. If he is stopping here in Washington month after month he is not a traveler.

Mr. JACKSON. What does the gentleman think of the man who shot McKinley at Buffalo-I can not pronounce his name-

Czolgosz, I think it was, or something of that kind?

Mr. CULLOP. There is not anything in this statute which shows he was or was not a traveler at all; nothing whatever. He was not a traveler. He was punished for a higher offense.

Mr. JACKSON. My impression from what I remember of the history of the event is that he went there for the purpose of killing President McKinley and coming away again.

Mr. CULLOP. He was not a traveler, and no jury would have so found him to be; there is no trouble about determining the question of fact in such cases, as our decided cases show.

Mr. JACKSON. I am merely asking the question.

Mr. CULLOP. If the question had been presented to the jury, they would not have found him to be a traveler. Now, I want to call attention to another feature in the bill which is objectionable. In line 9, page 2, it contains this language, "officers guarding legal prisoners." Now, is there any prisoner who is not a legal prisoner?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Plenty of them. Mr. CULLOP. I never heard of it. Who is not a legal prisoner if properly under arrest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Are not plenty of people illegally agrested?

Mr. CULLOP. That presents a very different question. As long as he is in the custody of the officer he is a legal prisoner as far as the law is concerned. The word "legal" ought to go out of it or you will have simply emasculated the force of your statute on this subject. If a man is under arrest by an officer, he is legally holding him—at least by color of law if not by process of law—by the authority of the officer himself, who is made a guardian of the peace by virtue of his office, and you have simply made that provision nugatory if you leave it there in that way. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will pass in proper form. The carrying of concealed weapons is one of the grave offenses of the country and should be prevented by proper police regulations.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say the word "traveler" is pretty well defined or settled.

Mr. CULLOP. In the courts; yes.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman say that a man who lived just outside the District, or over in the city of Alexandria, who came to Washington for some purpose, was a traveler, or would it be necessary for him to live in Indiana or Tennessee?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly not. That would be a question of fact under the proof whether he is a traveler or not, and the courts have repeatedly construed similar statutes. it in the language of several State statutes if we enact this provision.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How far would he have to live from the city of Washington in order for him to come under the term of "traveler"?

Mr. CULLOP. He can live in the city of Washington and be a traveler, and he may live remotely from Washington and be here and not be a traveler. I hope the gentleman, as a lawyer, does not put up that kind of a proposition to me. A man in the city of Washington could be starting out on a journey and have a weapon and carry it and be a traveler, and a man living in Alexandria and coming here with a weapon in his pocket might not be a traveler.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would a Member of Congress be a traveler under this bill?

Mr. CULLOP. He might be under some circumstances, and under others he would not be. If he lives here and goes about the city he would not be a traveler and could not claim immunity from punishment, and if he carried a weapon he should be condemned, and severely so. For him there would be no justification.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the gentleman heartily on that.

Mr. CULLOP. In my judgment, he ought to lose his seat if he carries one, because he, above all others, should not indulge in such a dangerous thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with the gentleman in that.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to offer an amendment which I have written on the bottom of this page.

Mr. KENDALL. Is it a substitute?
Mr. MADDEN. It is an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor], and I ask to have it rend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has not offered an amendment.

Mr. CULLOP. I am going to offer it as an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the amendment which I have pending be closed.

Then the gentleman can offer his amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all debate on his amendment be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. DE FOREST. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendment reported again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

6

The amendment was again reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Division, Mr. Speaker. The House divided; and there were-ayes 57, noes 8.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.]

Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The SPEAKER. The year and nays come automatically. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentces, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 183, nays 26, answered "present" 12, not voting 170, as follows: VEAS_192

Ending April 13:

Mr. BUCHANAN with Mr. HARTMAN.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no." I had forgotten that I was paired with the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. Tilson. I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, this is a reenactment of practically the existing law on the subject, and I therefore move to lay the bill and amendments thereto on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson | moves to lay the bill and amendments thereto on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the management of the bill now pass to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all.
Mr. SIMS. In the present parliamentary situation?
Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all in the parliamentary s Oh, not at all in the parliamentary situation. The mere offering of an amendment and its adoption do not transfer the control of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has charge of this bill now, and the Clerk will report the first committee amendment. [Ap-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

On page 2, line 4, strike out the colon and the words "provided that prosecutions."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is an error in printing the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Kentucky any explanation to offer to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have no explanation about it.
Mr. MANN. I say the amendment as printed proposes to strike out "Provided, That prosecutions." The amendment strikes out the word "prosecutions." That would require prosecutions in two places. The amendment should be to strike out "Provided, That." The printing of the bill itself shows that.

Mr. CULLOP. And there should be a period after the word " years.

Mr. MANN. The report shows that the printing of the bill is erroneous, and that the amendment intended is to strike out the words "Provided, That," and to commence the word "prosecution" with a capital P.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment, change, or correction suggested by the gentleman from Illinois will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows: In line 6, strike out the colon and the remainder of the line. Strike out all of line 7 and line 8 down to and including the word "police."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows: In line 9 insert, after the word "guarding," the word "legal."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this amendment ought not to be adopted. If it is adopted, you will nullify the bill in part. Who is a legal prisoner? Are you going to wait until a man is convicted in order to determine that he is a legal prisoner? Must you try him before the officer is to take hold of him? I hope this amendment will not be agreed to.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

In line 9 strike out the words "officials of the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of line 10, after the word "states," and all of line 11, and all of line 12 to and including the word "duty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

In lines 12 and 13 insert the words "marshals and their deputies while actually on official duty."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the House that the words in line 13, "while actually on official duty," ought not to remain in the bill. The marshal and his deputies ought to be permitted, while going to or from their homes or any other place, to have the necessary weapons, so that they may be able to use them when they get to the place of their official duty.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that the words "on official duty" also apply not only to marshals but to police officers. If the amendment remains in the present form police officers, officers guarding prisoners, marshals, and their deputies while actually on official duty will not be liable under this act, but a police officer going home after he has finished his work will be compelled to take his revolver out of his pocket and hold it in his hand on the way home, thereby frightening everybody whom he meets.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not considered proper that an officer may carry the necessary weapons at all times?

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman entirely, that the words "while actually on official duty" ought to be stricken out of the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. I move that the words "while actually on official duty" be stricken out of the amendment in line 13.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13 strike out of the amendment the words "while actually on official duty."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 2 and insert the following: "Any knife having a blade longer than 3 inches shall be deemed to be a deadly weapon."

Mr. MANN. I ask for a separate vote on those two propositions. The first is a motion to strike out. The second is not an amendment to take the place of what is stricken out; it is an entirely different proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is divisible. The Clerk will report the first proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 2.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this part of the bill ought not to go out.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] suspend to allow the reading of the part that it is proposed to strike out?

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 2, which reads as follows:
"Sec. 2. That so much of any section of the act approved May 11, 1898, entitled 'An act to punish the carrying or seiling of deadly or dangerous weapons within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' which is inconsistent with this act, and only so far as the same may be inconsistent herewith, is hereby repealed."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the act referred to is section 855, and this act is intended to take the place of it. This bill makes a law which can be enforced, while section 855 contains this provision, to which I want to call the attention of the House:

SEC. 855. Carrying weapons: Any person who shall within the District of Columbia have concealed about his person any deadly or dangerous weapon, or who shall carry openly any such weapon, with intent to unlawfully use the same.

Now, this act takes out that provision; that is, the intent to unlawfully use the same, and makes the bill now, if it becomes a law, so that it will be effective; and when you find a man with a deadly weapon concealed on his person it then becomes effective, and upon the trial you do not have to prove what his intent was. The mere fact of his having the weapon concealed upon his person is the crime itself. To repeal this provision will give these gentlemen what they ask for, just what they desire; that is, to properly punish these men who are carrying around these various munitions of war. This amendment ought not to be allowed, and the original bill, as presented, ought to be so worded as to repeal section 855; otherwise you will have on the statute book a provision that you must prove that there was an intent to use the instrument before you can convict the

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. I have not seen a copy of the law of 1898, to which the gentleman refers, but do I understand him to say that if this committee amendment be adopted a conviction under this bill, if enacted into law, would require the prosecution to prove the intent?

Mr. RAKER. I think so, as it becomes a part and parcel of the law, and the two will be construed together.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.
Mr. RAKER. But there is so much danger in the matter.
Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I can see no reason in the world why section 2 should not remain in the bill, although I have not heard any reason given for striking it out, but this would be a law by itself and stand on its own feet in any event. It is possible that the other law might remain and give them an opportunity to proceed under one law or the other which might not be desirable.

Mr. RAKER. I do not know how they construe the statutes in Washington that are passed by Congress, but with us if a valid act is found in the code of law and there is another provision of law applicable to the same subject, if they are not in conflict-and this would not be in conflict-they are construed together. Here would be one act saying it was unlawful to carry, these weapons and in another act saying that before you can convict a man you must prove that he had an intent to unlawfully use it

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman read that provision? Mr. RAKER. Certainly; it is section 855:

Any person who shall in the District of Columbia have concealed on s person any deadly or dangerous weapon, or who shall carry upon if up such weapon with intent to unlawfully use the same, shall be ed not less than $50 nor more than $500, or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both.

And then it goes on with other provisions.

Mr. PADGETT. Does not the intent apply to the open carrying and not to the concealed carrying?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman one more question.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield. Mr. COOPER. Does not the clause which the gentleman read refer to the open carrying, the public carrying of the weapon, and not refer to the concealed weapon?

Mr. RAKER. No; it refers back to three things: First, any person who shall have a deadly weapon with intent to unlawfully use it; next, any person who has a dangerous weapon and unlawfully intends to use it; third, any person who shall openly carry any such weapon with intent to unlawfully use it. unlawful intent goes back to all the purposes. There could be no question but that it would apply to all of them, and you must prove on the trial, and the jury must find—did the man have the weapon; second, did he have it with intent unlawfully to use it. You will find that act is not repealed; it is not in conflict with this act.

The courts are bound to hold, and will instruct the jury that they must find, that the defendant had the weapon on him; second, that he had it on him with intent to unlawfully use it. So, if you are going to remodel this law, if you are going to make it so it is absolutely effective and give some results and take these dangerous deadly weapons away from men carrying them around, and make it so it will be enforceable, you must repeal that provision. The only thing the court will instruct the jury is, "Did the defendant at a certain time have upon his person the particular kind of weapon named? And if so, you should find him guilty."

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RAKER. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt our power in one provision of law to levy a penalty against the carrying of a weapon with intent to do a bodily injury, and in another provision of the law levy a penalty against carrying concealed weapons without regard to intent?

Mr. RAKER. I do. I think there is no question about that. Mr. MANN. The gentleman thinks that we have not the

Mr. RAKER. I think we have, beyond any question. Mr. MANN. Here is the section of the law that now exists, which provides a penalty for carrying a weapon, either concealed or openly, with intent to do bodily injury; and here is a bill before us to prohibit the carrying of concealed weapons, regardless of intent. Does the gentleman claim that when construing the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, the court will have to read into it a provision levying a penalty against an entirely different offense-that of carrying a weapon, concealed or openly, with intent to do bodily injury?

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that this bill is intended to provide against the carrying of these weapons named in the bill, known as deadly weapons? That act is intended to provide for the same thing, only it has a further provision that you must prove that the man had it on his person, openly or concealed, with an intent to unlawfully use it.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman will notice that this bill relates only to the carrying of concealed weapons, without regard to intent. The existing law provides against the carrying of weapons openly or concealed with intent to do a wrong.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will concede this to the gentleman unquestionably, that under section 855, as to carrying weapons openly, that law will not be affected, but as to carrying concealed weapons, you add a new law, of the kind and character of this bill, which will control, and the question of intent will be there.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest, in addition to what the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] said by way of answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that it strikes me that the court in the first instance, if we had these two laws on the statute books, would try to find out what was the intention of Congress. There is no doubt in my mind but that we can do just what the gentleman from Illinois says.

Mr. RAKER. I concede that.

Mr. NORRIS. The court in determining our intention would take into consideration, to see whether we intended to repeal one law or another, the penalities in both of these acts, and it would then find that in the act which is the most severe, as far as the crime is concerned—that is, in the one where they prove intent, for instance, to commit a murder-the penalty provided is much less than the penalty provided in the other law, which simply provides against the carrying of concealed weapons.

Mr. RAKER. True. Mr. NORRIS. And And in doing that, it seems to me, the court would reach the conclusion that we could not have intended such a condition to exist.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, that Congress never intended to put a man in State prison for years for merely having on his person a knife with a blade 3 inches long concealed in his pocket without proving that he had it there to use it for some unlawful purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. The court, I think, would likely hold that Congress never intended that simply because a man had a weapon concealed without any proof of intent, or perhaps with proof of no bad intent, that he might be sent to the penitentiary for a year or three years; whereas as a matter of fact, if he was found with a revolver on his person concealed and there was proven an intent to use it to take human life, that he could be sent to jail for only 30 days. It seems to me that the propositions are inconsistent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California yield, that I may ask the gentleman from Nebraska a question?
Mr. RAKER. Certainly.
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from California, I think, has each distinguished the bench by being members thereof. I have never had that good fortune or bad fortune, whatever it may be called.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a bad fortune for the gentleman's people that he has not.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the court, the judge on the bench, when he is construing a recent act of Congress or of the legislature which is clear and explicit as to what is the crime and what shall be the penalty, has to go back a good many years to see what Congress thought 15 or 20 years ago?

Mr. NORRIS. Is the gentleman through with his question?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I would say, in answer to that, that a court if it could, and the acts were consistent, would permit them both to stand.

There is no conflict in these acts. Mr. MANN.

Mr. NORRIS. But the court would look behind and find that where we provided for a heavy penalty the crime was a minor one, and where we provided a light penalty the crime was grave, so the court would be inclined to say that Congress did not mean to do such a foolish thing, and therefore would hold that both of the acts could not and would not stand.

Mr. MANN. Whether both would stand is another question;

the last one would stand.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, there is no doubt about it.
Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska think that in a case like this that the court, taking the recent act of Congress, would read into that act provisions which were in a former act of Congress that entirely changed the scope of the recent act?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not say that. I say I believe, in answer to the gentleman's suggestion, that both of these acts will stand and both remain in force; that the court would be apt to hold, by the passage of this act, that we repealed the other one, that we provided for a lighter punishment for a heavier offense

Mr. MANN. I think myself that it does not make any difference whether this act is repealed specifically or not; that to the extent we change the law the original act is repealed.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I should think so.
Mr. MANN. I do not care whether it is repealed by special provision or not.

Or by implication.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that it is a rare thing to find in any State an act where the mere fact of having one of these weapons on their person is a crime, and can the gentleman point out any particular State where such a statute is now in force?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman frankly I suppose if there is any Member of this House who is not familiar with the criminal laws of the country or the statutes I am that Member.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the reason I made the objection and it is this: In the present bill before the House I take from its language that where a man is charged under that act with having on his person or concealed on his person one of these instruments, you would not have to charge that he had it there with an intent of unlawfully using it, and upon the trial you would not undertake to prove that he had the intent unlawfully of using it, but the mere fact that within the District of Columbia he had that weapon concealed on his person he is guilty, and the jury should find him so under the instructions of the court.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.
Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Nebraska to what the law would be if we enacted this bill. This is the existing law:

Any person who shall within the District of Columbia have concealed about his person any deadly or dangerous weapon, or who shall carry openly any such weapon, with intent to unlawfully use the same.

So the law now upon the statute books provides that if a man carries a concealed weapon, a dangerous weapon, or he carries the same weapon openly with intent so and so, he shall be punished. Surely there is no question about that at all. The comma in there, the punctuation, makes the last clause, with intent, to apply to both. There is no doubt about that; it is per-Now, then, suppose that we omit all reference to the carrying of weapons openly, there being no reference to that in the pending bill, then if we enact this into law, what do we have?

We have this law upon the statute books, provided that if anyone carries a dangerous weapon concealed with intent unlawfully to use the same he shall be punished, and we put on the books a law providing that if he carries these weapons concealed at all, without any regard to intent, he shall be punished, and the amendment would strike out the repealing clause. Then we have, necessarily, to repeal this, or, if it is to be repealed by implication, the question is, What would the courts do?

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that the best way to avoid the question of what the court might determine, if this bill should become a law, would be to strike out this, or, in other words, vote against this proposed amendment and leave the bill as it

Mr. COOPER. The best way, in my judgment, would be, perhaps, to strike that out and insert an amendment repealing so much of section 855 as relates to the carrying of concealed and dangerous weapons.

Mr. MANN. That is all this does, really.

Mr. COOPER. That is what ought to be done, so there will be no necessity for any court to construe that at all, and that would make it perfectly clear, and it is not clear, as has been shown by the discussion here.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, that section of the bill which is stricken out by way of amendment was drawn and put in by the corporation counsel of this District, for the purpose of making it clear that this act was to repeal so much of the act referred to as might be in conflict with this.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move as a substitute for the committee amendment to strike out section 2 of the bill and

So much of section 855 of the act approved May 11, 1898, entitled "Code of Law for the District of Columbia," as relates to the carrying of concealed or dangerous weapons in the District of Columbia is hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin if he means his amendment to take the place of the motion to strike out and insert? That is practically what this committee amendment is, and the part they propose to insert embraces two separate, substantive propositions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that the part that is to be inserted does not in any way relate to section 2, and it would not have been germane to offer an amendment to strike out section 2 and insert these provisions. They are inserted as additional paragraphs to section 1, and intended so by the committee, and strike out section 2. They ought to have been printed ahead of section 2.

The SPEAKER. Of course that is true. The Chair was going to call attention to that. What the Chair was trying to get at was, Is the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin intended to take the place of it?

Mr. MANN. Of section 2, stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquires of the gentleman from Wisconsin if the amendment which he has offered is to strike out section 2 and insert the matter proposed by him?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir. Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] yield?

Mr. COOPER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is not the provision in section 2, "that so much of the act referred to which is inconsistent with this act, and so far as the same may be inconsistent herewith," precisely the same thing as the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. RAKER. I do not think there is any question about it.

That is what the gentleman means,
Mr. COOPER. I propose simply by my amendment to make It so plain that there would be no necessity for any future discussion such as has taken place here on the floor.

Mr. MANN. The discussion was partly in reference to other matters. I agreed that section 2 ought to remain in, but we wanted it understood in the House what was intended by it.

Mr. RAKER. It seems to me that the amendment as it purpose. It strikes me as being more general than the one suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER. I made it apply specifically to concealed weapons.

Mr. RAKER. It is a better way in the repealing clause to specifically refer to the amendatory act than to say "sistent with this act." That requires a study of the act.

Mr. MANN. You can not name what is covered in that act. This act covers so much of or any section of the act which is "inconsistent with this act, and only in so far as the same may be inconsistent herewith."

Mr. RAKER. That covers it all.
Mr. MANN. The truth is, I felt like complimenting the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], who introduced the bill, on framing the best repealing clause I have ever seen in the House.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that we are entitled to have a vote upon this amendment as to the striking out of section 2 without any consideration as to the proposed additions here?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the inquiry.

Mr. RAKER. Section 2, on page 2 of the bill, includes lines 15 to 21. Now, can not we have a vote on that, and then take up the other matters in relation to section 2, and not complicate them in any way?

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair was fixing to do a while ago. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Cooper] offers an amendment which the Clerk can not understand.

Mr. COOPER. I think in view of what is being said here I will move to strike out the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on voting down section 2
Mr. COOPER. Vote down the committee amendment.
Mr. RAKER. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is to strike out section 2. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.
Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, just one word on the other, namely, lines 22 and 23, inclusive. I move to strike out. The question is with the idea that a knife a sixteen-hundredth part of an inch over 3 inches is a deadly weapon is the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of in my life, and ought to be defeated.

The SPEAKER. There are three substantive propositions comprehended in italics.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a separate vote, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first proposition. The Clerk read as follows:

Any knife having a blade longer than 3 inches shall be deemed to be a deadly weapon.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I sympathize with the purpose of the committee in inserting this amendment, but it seems to be a mistake in some respects. A gentleman on the floor of the House a short time ago showed me a blade of a knife more than three inches long. The blade of an ordinary carpenter's knife would be more than three inches long. I have a number of pruning knives in my amateur garden at home that have blades that are more than three inches long. I would hate to think, if I had one of them in my pocket, that I might be arrested for carrying deadly weapons. Of course the provision in the bill applies to all kinds of knives, and, as I remarked before, it would apply to butcher knives, table knives, and all kinds of knives. I think the provision "deadly weapons" ought to be sufficient without inserting this.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next proposition. The Clerk read as follows:

So much of any act as empowers anybody or any court to authorize anyone to carry a concealed deadly weapon in the District of Columbia is hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that if this section is to stand it should be marked "section 3."

Mr. MANN. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that that be made "section 3."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding, in line 4, after the word "Columbia," the words "not then and there being a traveler."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CULLOP. It should go on page 1, line 4, after the word "Columbia." Insert the words "not then and there being a traveler.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 1, insert, after the word "Columbia," the words "not then and there being a traveler."

Mr. CULLOP. The purpose of this amendment, I think, may be explained by what has already occurred in the discussion. If a man is passing through the District of Columbia with a weapon on his person or in his grip—that is, about his personhe would be subject to prosecution and punishment under this act. If a man is on his way to attend to some business in a remote section of the country and passes through the District of Columbia and happens to stop off for an hour to change trains, he would be subject to the penalties of this bill if he carried a deadly weapon, although there was apparent need for him to carry it at his destination. In such event he ought not to be amenable.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes. Mr. RAKER. For the benefit of what might follow, the gentleman just used an expression that I want to ask him about. Does the gentleman contend that if a man has a deadly weapon, we will say a bowie knife or a loaded revolver, in his valise, that it is on his person and he would be punishable under this act?

Mr. CULLOP. This does not stop with "on his person." It says "on or about his person." If he is walking up the street with it in his grip, it is about his person. The provisions of the measure are made drastic on purpose. Anybody would so construe that language. I am trying to get it perfected so that it will fill a useful purpose and not be a dead letter on the statute books.

Mr. RAKER. And if a lady would have a bowie knife or a pistol in one of these hand grips with strings or chains on, that would be on her person, would it?

Mr. CULLOP. That is not a probable example, and I am surprised at such an illustration, but in such a case it would be on or about her person under this act as now proposed.

Does the gentleman think it would cover a Mr. RAKER. case of that kind?

Mr. CULLOP. That would come clearly within the definition of the measure as now proposed. It does not discriminate between somebody carrying it in a handbag or in a scabbard. The language employed is "on or about his person," and it contains no exception as to sex. All are treated allke.

Mr. RAKER. Take the case of a man going from the depot to a hotel with a six-shooter in his grip. Would that apply to him?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes. Why not? There is no exemption as it is now written. This amendment is very appropriate for that reason, and I hope it will be adopted. Its purpose must be conceded by all to be a good one and one that will aid in the enforcement of the measure when put into practical operation.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be the duty of the police of the District of Columbia to search every traveler entering the District and to confiscate any concealed weapon found in the possession of such traveler before allowing him to cross the line.

[Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor].

Mr. MANN. To what is that amendment offered?

Mr. MADDEN. It is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor].

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] as amended.

The question being taken, the amendment as amended was re-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment at the top of page 3 was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, insert as lines 1, 2, and 3 the following:
"So much of any act as empowers anybody or any court to authorize anyone to carry a concealed deadly weapon in the District of Columbia is hereby repealed."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this amendment recommended by the committee, which was disagreed to a little while ago, proposes to repeal the law which empowers the courts to authorize any person to carry a concealed deadly weapon. I would like to inquire of the gentleman who introduced the bill whether, under the form of the bill as it now stands, it would be possible for a regular night watchman to carry a pistol or other weapon for his protection or for the pursuit of a criminal? It seems to me that there ought to be some provision inserted in the bill which would authorize a regular watchman to have some kind of a weapon.

Mr. SIMS. The exemptions in the bill as introduced are the exact exemptions contained in the District Code. I neither added to nor took away any exemptions. I simply changed the punishment. The Code of the District of Columbia as it now exists contains all the exemptions from liability which were contained in my bill as I originally introduced it. I did not feel like taking any responsibility of adding to or taking away from the exemptions. In other words, if it is unlawful now for a night watchman to be armed, it will be unlawful with this bill enacted into law. If it is lawful now, it will be lawful under the bill if it is passed without amendment in that regard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] moves to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was re-

The question being taken, the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting as lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 3, the words:

"So much of any act as empowers anybody or any court to authorize anyone to carry a concealed deadly weapon in the District of Columbia is hereby repealed."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed. Mr. MANN. I move to amend the title by striking out of the first line the words "openly or." The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the title by striking out the words "openly or."

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. The title ought to be further amended by striking out the words "or dirk knife" and inserting in place thereof the words "clasp knife, razor."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the title the words "or dirk knife" and insert the words "clasp knife, razor."

The amendment was agreed to.

RAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit a question? Would it not be better to amend the title by inserting the words "upon or," before the word "about"? The title now reads "concealed about the person."

Mr. MANN. Personally, I think the word "about" covers both upon and about.

On motion of Mr. Sims, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 20190. An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rock River, Ill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 2904) to confer upon the Commissioners of the District of Columbia authority to regulate the operation and equipment of the vehicles of the Metropolitan Coach Co.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to furnish to the House of Representatives. in compliance with its request, duplicate engrossed copies of the bills (S. 4314 and S. 4623) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SPENCER ROBERTS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid going into Committee of the Whole twice I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 12371) for the relief of Spencer Roberts be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12371 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12371) for the relief of Spencer Roberts, a member of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint and promote Spencer Roberts, now a member of the Metropolitan police force of said District, in class 1, to any vacancy that may exist in class 3 of said Metropolitan police force.

The following committee amendments were read:

Amend, page 1, line 4, by striking out the word "empowered," and inserting in lieu there of the word "directed."

Amend, page 1, line 4, by striking out after the word "to" the words "appoint and."

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out the word "any" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the first."

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out the word "exist" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "occur."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the remainder of my time I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. MANN. There is no time; we are in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Can the gentleman from Kentucky tell us whether the District Commissioners have any opposition to the passage of this bill?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They have.

Mr. MANN. Are they opposed to the bill? Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. They are opposed to the bill. Mr.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the relief of a member of the police force of the District of Columbia who was unjustly discharged in 1905, it being then alleged that he made a false report to his superior officer, the substance of which was that he had been assaulted while on duty on his beat by two colored men and robbed of his revolver, and that his hat, gloves, and overcoat were badly slashed.

These matters came up for consideration before the police trial board, and he was reinstated in 1909, it being found that he told the truth and had been unjustly discharged. been reinstated by the commissioners, but he has lost his right to the grade in which he would now be if he had never been unjustly discharged. This bill merely restores him to the right that he would have had if he had not been unjustly discharged.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will. Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is good policy for the Congress to require the commissioners or the superintendent of police to appoint or promote a police officer; does he think that the legislative body should undertake to usurp the functions of the administrative body and, in addition, to give to the commissioners the power to appoint and require them to appoint some one?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do, undoubtedly, because this man would have been entitled to this position if he had not been unjustly discharged.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry that I yielded to the request for the bill to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. If the man has been unjustly removed, he should be restored and have every right and privilege as if he had not been discharged.

Mr. MANN. That goes without saying; that is laying down an axiomatic truth. But is the opinion of Congress that a man has been unjustly removed to be imposed upon the administrative officers who are in superior control of the man? We never have done it in any other case. We frequently pass bills giving the President the power to appoint somebody in the Army or the Navy, either on the active or retired list, and various things of that sort, but in no case have we compelled the appointment. say that, in my judgment, the President of the United States, if he performs his duty properly, will not look at this bill a minute before he vetoes it. If you want to give the commissioners power to appoint this man I have no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will say that it is not Congress that is forming the judgment that he was unjustly removed; the commission has formed that judgment, and by virtue of that they should reinstate him. We are directing them to do a simple act of justice.

Mr. MANN. Evidently they do not agree with you about it. Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. That makes no difference. Mr. MANN. I think it makes a great deal of difference as to whether the legislative body shall undertake to direct and require the appointment of some one by the administrative body. No such bill has ever been passed by Congress before within my knowledge. This bill was not proposed that way; the gentleman who prepared the bill only proposed to empower the commissioners to make the appointment. The committee proposes to amend it by directing them to make the promotion or appointment—a power over which the legislative part of the Government has no control.

It is the duty of the Executive or administration to make pointments. We may vary the law by giving them authority appointments. to make appointments where we have a police law, but by what right do we undertake to say that a particular man shall be appointed to a particular place? I have always resisted the executive encroachment upon the legislative powers, and I shall resist the encroachment of the legislative upon the administrative power.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. We want to make sure of the restitution of this man to his rights.

Mr. MANN. The amendment that is pending is to strike out the word "empowered" and insert the word "directed." The bill, as introduced, reads:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint and promote Spencer Roberts.

I do not know what the circumstances of the case are. read the report. The report indicates that this man has been unfairly treated, not by reason of the fault of anyone in the department. The circumstances are not set out very fully. Charged once with some offense, he was acquitted, but was afterwards dismissed. If the superintendent of police and the District Commissioners, who were charged with the control of the police force, and the whole force, being charged with the administration of the police laws of the District, think that this man ought to be appointed or promoted, authority conferred upon them is enough.

Mr. MADDEN. Have they not that power now? Mr. MANN. They have not under existing law. The law requires a man to serve a certain length of time in one class in order to be promoted to another class. If, in addition to that, we propose to tell them that they must do it, then there is no discipline left in the police department. Such an amendment ought not to be agreed to, in my judgment.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to be-lieve that the commissioners would do this act of justice. I have no reason, perhaps, to know that they would not do it. I have not communicated with them. I do not know what their thoughts or intentions are in the premises, but in order that all doubt may be dissipated, and in order that there may be absolute relief afforded this man, I do not believe that we should stand on any technicality just now, but that we should give him his rights as long as we have the power to do it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes. Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that the Members of Congress are in a position to know just exactly what the Commissioners of the District should do in the matter of disciplining members of the police force?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. But he is not under discipline.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it would be wise for the legislative branch of the Government to say to the executive branch of the Government, "You must conduct your affairs along certain lines, and if you do not do that we will enact laws that will direct you to do it, regardless of whether it is going to destroy discipline or not"?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not believe that it would be destructive of discipline for the reason that the man is not under discipline. He has been restored. It has been recognized that he was unjustly dealt with.

Mr. MADDEN. But does not the gentleman realize that if this man can get what he wants, regardless of whether the commissioners want him to have it or not, that that takes away the power of the commissioners to enforce discipline?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Not at all. Mr. MADDEN. Certainly it does.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Not at all. The man is not under charges

Mr. MADDEN. If this man can get it, every policeman knows that he can get what he wants, so there will not be any discipline in the police department.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that if there is any policeman on the police force in this District who has been dealt with in the manner in which this man has been dealt with, he is entitled to the same justice that we believe ought to be given this man.

Will the gentleman tell the House what Mr. MADDEN. treatment this man has had to which he objects? He has not told the House anything at all about the unjust treatment the man has received. The House is not in possession of any facts to justify it in acting upon the bill that is presented by this

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. In 1905 he found himself dismissed from the service, or was forced to resign, which was the equivalent of being dismissed, by virtue of the fact that a false conclusion had been arrived at by those who heard his case. He was without pay for four years. He is not looking for any If full justice were done this man, he would get back pay. back pay from the time he was forced to resign until he was reinstated.

Mr. MADDEN. What evidence has the gentleman to prove that the man was unjustly treated?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has again expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, anticipating that some questions of this character might be asked, I suggested to the attorney for Mr. Roberts that he procure a letter from the gentleman who was one of the commissioners at the time this trouble occurred, and I am going to read that letter:

THE WASHINGTON HERALD, Washington, D. C., February 16, 1912.

Hon. Geo. F. O'SHAUNESSY, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Relative to a bill now before Congress for the relief of Spencer Roberts, having for its purpose his promotion to that class on the Metropolitan police force to which he would have been entitled had he not resigned in the year 1905, I beg to say that his resignation was enforced and was in reality brought about by the charge against him of having made a false report to his superior officers. It is true he was acquitted of that charge by the police trial board, but there was left great doubt as to the correctness of the charge until long after his enforced resignation, when the whole matter was fully cleared up and Mr. Roberts exonerated by the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and by that board's direction reappointed on the force.

The charge against him of having purchased some liquor while on duty, which liquor was not used by him but taken to his family, was a minor matter, and he would never have been removed or forced to resign on that account, the real cause being, as stated, the alleged false report.

report.
I think the passage of the bill would be a simple act of justice to Mr. Roberts. Very truly, yours,

HENRY L. WEST.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will.

Mr. JACKSON. Was that letter which the gentleman has just read written before or after the amendment proposed by the committee?

Mr. JACKSON. Well, was that before the committee proposed to strike out the word "empowered" and write in the word "directed"?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It was.

Mr. JACKSON. I understood the gentleman to say, or some one to say, that this bill had been drawn by another than the committee.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The bill was drawn by a Member not of the committee.

One other question I would like to ask the Mr. JACKSON: gentleman. Would this man have been entitled to this appointment-that is, would it have been compulsory under the law for this man to have been in the first grade now had he not been removed?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I believe so.
Mr. JACKSON. The commissioners had no discretion whether he received this appointment or not if he had served that long. In other words, does this grade depend entirely upon length of service?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Length of service and faithful performance of duty

Mr. JACKSON. Well, have the commissioners any discretion as to the character of service that entitles one to promotion?
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Without question they have.

Mr. JACKSON. They have? Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Without a question. Mr. JACKSON. Then if the bill is passed in its present form, as has been suggested here, it will be practically Congress selecting this man to be a member of the first grade.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Because all the time he has done duty he has performed his duty faithfully, and it is only to be presumed he would have performed his duty just as faithfully all the while had he not been removed. Now, I want to say to the gentleman, think of the wages this man has lost, and then ask yourself if we are doing ample justice in merely restoring him to the grade which he would occupy.

Mr. JACKSON. Is there any proposition to pay wages? That is another matter; but the question I was calling to the gentleman's attention is, Are not we substituting the Congress to do the very thing these commissioners are supposed to do?
Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I can not agree with the gentleman on that proposition; I do not think so.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would be the last man on the floor of this House to do an injustice to any man who may be in any kind of employment, but I do not believe that this House has sufficient information upon which to base action asking the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to place this man in a given grade. I believe if we give the commissioners the power to place him in a grade that we have done everything we ought to do. Suppose we directed them to do it. They will be obliged to do so. If we give them the power, then it is optional with them whether they shall do it or not; and I have faith in the integrity of the commissioners sufficient to warrant me in believing that if this man is entitled to be promoted, if the commissioners have the power, he will be promoted. No act of Congress could be more destructive of discipline than the one sought by this bill. There is no business enterprise anywhere on the face of the civilized globe that could be successfully conducted under such a plan as this. The executive authority in any business enterprise must have discretionary power to regulate the discipline of that enterprise or it will fail.

The Government of the United States, or the District of Columbia, is only a business institution after all in which every citizen of the land is a stockholder, and it becomes the duty of the stockholder to do everything within his power to sustain the executive officers chosen in the proper performance of their duty; and no policeman, no matter how distinguished the service he may have rendered, should find himself in a position of saying to the executive authority over him that he can get what he wants regardless of what the disposition of the executive officer may be. This is a bad precedent which ought not to be established. If this man has had any injustice done him I believe it ought to be rectified, and I believe that when we give the power to the commissioners to reinstate him that we have rectified that injustice. Ah, but the gentleman from Rhode Island stated, he has been four years without pay. True, he was off the force for four years and during that time he drew no money out of the Public Treasury, but I do not assume, and I would not care to assume, that during that four years he was idle. Who knows but that during that period he carned more in the employment in which he was then engaged than he would have carned if he had been on the police pay rolls? Give the power to the commissioners to do this man simple justice, but do not, under any circumstances, direct that he shall be reinstated regardless of whether it is just or not. I hope with all my heart and with every intention to do justice to this man, as I would to any other man who is obliged to work for a living, that this amendment will not prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, this police officer, Mr. Roberts, made a report on a certain occasion, as I recall it in the year 1905, that he had been beaten by some colored men, his clothing destroyed, and his revolver taken. His report was not believed and he was found guilty of misrepresentation, as I understand it, by the police trial board and he was obliged to resign, preferring to resign rather than be dismissed from the service.

A year or more afterwards one of the colored men, William Wooden, alias Hog Eye, whom Officer Roberts had described and given the name of as one of the two men that had assaulted and robbed him, was arrested and found to have in his possession the revolver taken from Roberts. This man pleaded guilty, and confessed to the assault and robbery just as Officer Roberts had reported, and was sentenced to impris-onment, and Officer Roberts was later reinstated and has made good.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LOBECK. Yes.
Mr. WILLIS. I am anxious for some one to give a reason why the commissioners would not do justice to this man if they were empowered to do so. Why is it not a sufficient com-pliance if we give them the power to reinstate the officer? Why must we go ahead and say here that he must be reinstated regardless of the facts and the judgment of the commissioners?

Mr. LOBECK. Just the same as when the executive of a business corporation, as referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden], is directed by the board of directors, and must do as directed. The District Commissioners will not give this man the proper rank that he is fairly entitled to when a vacancy occurs, for some reason unknown and unexplainable.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Loneck] yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. LOBECK. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIS. That is the precise point on which I want to get information. How does he know they will not do the offi-cer justice? How does he find it out? The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] also stated that. How do you know it?

Mr. LOBECK. We were informed to that effect.
Mr. WILLIS. How did you get the information?

Mr. LOBECK. There have been letters on file to that effect. Mr. WILLIS. Well, they ought to be in the report. The House is called upon to act here on information that the gentleman says is contained in letters.

Mr. LOBECK. I did not make the report; but this is simple justice to a man who has performed faithful service. There is no question as to his fidelity in the work done in this city. He is an honest, sober, and efficient officer, and I believe it is within the power of Members of this House to do simple justice to a man who has been faithful if the District Commissioners will not do so.

Mr. KONOP. Did the District Commissioners inform the committee that they were opposed to this measure?

Mr. LOBECK. This is information that is one or more years old.

Mr. KONOP. Did they inform the committee by communication?

Mr. LOBECK. I think by communication.
Mr. KONOP. What reason did they give?
Mr. LOBECK. The same reason that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] gave, namely, that it might have an effect on the efficiency of the service.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I can hardly understand the generosity of the District Committee. This bill shows on its face that it was introduced by request. The man who requested its introduction must have been the attorney for Spencer Roberts, or Spencer Roberts himself. It must have been satisfactory to Spencer Roberts and Spencer Roberts's attorney when it was introduced, and why should the District Committee bring in this bill now with an amendment which changes the whole tenor of the bill? The bill as introduced gave the commissioners authority to advance Mr. Roberts, but by the amendment they are directed that he shall be advanced. The committee say now that they have information that the District Commissioners will not do justice to this man. If this bill passes as originally introduced I doubt very much if the facts that are contained in this report are brought to the attention of the District Commissioners, if they will refuse to do simple justice to this police officer, who was undoubtedly wrongfully discharged. But, Mr, Speaker, I think by the adoption of the committee amendment we will be setting a precedent that will lead this House and Congress into ways for which we will be sorry. Are we to sit as a body listening to the demands and appeals and to redress the wrongs of every police officer and every fireman? We have written in the statute books a wise provision in regard to their promotion, and I am in favor of the bill as it was originally introduced, and I am opposed to the committee amendment. will do no harm to pass the bill as introduced, and will give the commissioners authority to right a wrong. But for this House to say, on the information that is before it, that this man Spencer Roberts is entitled to greater relief than he himself thought he was entitled to when he asked that the bill be introduced, it seems to me is going a little bit too far.

The letter that was read by the gentleman from Rhode Island, if he will note, was dated sometime in February, 1912. bill that was before that committee then was not the bill that was reported here with this amendment. The bill upon which that letter was based was the bill which was originally introduceda bill that simply empowered the commissioners to reinstate him. The bill as amended was not reported to this House striking out the word "empowering" and inserting the word "directing" until more than a week after the letter was written, and therefore could not have been the same bill that was put before the commissioners. It seems to me that the amendment reported by the committee should not prevail.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly as much disposed as any Member of this House or this committee can possibly be to do justice to this man.

I can not see upon what theory the committee proceed when they assume, if we give to the commissioners power to reinstate this man and promote him to this grade, that the commissioners are not going to act justly. There is no enlightening informa-tion in the report that accompanies this bill. I have read it all. What right have we to assume that the Commissioners of the What right have we to assume that the Commissioners of the District are not just as much disposed to do justice in this case as is the membership of this House? It is their business to know about things of this sort. The Members of this House do not know the details of this case. The members of the committee do not know the details of this case. At any rate, they have not set them forth here, except as they have read them from the report of the committee, and we have all done that.

Mr. LOBECK. We know those things to be facts.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. If the gentleman will yield to me, I would like to enlighten him by reading this letter.

Mr. WILLIS. I will be glad, if I can get more time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. This is the letter:

OFFICE OF THE CORPORATION COUNSEL, COLUMBIAN BUILDING, Washington, August 4, 1996.

OFFICE OF THE CORPORATION COUNSEL,
COLUMBIAN BUILDING,
Washington, August 4, 1906.

Hon. Henry L. West,
Commissioner, District of Columbia.

Dear Sin: I have very carefully considered the application of Mr. Spencer Roberts for reinstatement to the office of private on the Metropolitan police force, and beg to state that, in my opinion, the application should be granted.

Mr. Roberts was tried March 17, 1905, while I was chairman of the police trial board, upon a complaint charging, in the first specification, that on January 27, 1905, while on duty, he procured certain intoxicating liquor from one Farrell, a saloon keeper, through one Sindey Small; and charging, in the second specification, that the accused, on said date, drank said intoxicating liquor while on duty.

Upon consideration of the evidence then submitted, the trial board found the accused guilty of the charges set forth in the first specification, and not guilty of the charges of having drunk the intoxicating liquor; and as a punishment for the offense of procuring the liquor in question, while on duty, the board recommended the removal of the officer from the force. This recommendation was approved by the major and superintendent of police, and the commissioners were about to pass an order giving effect to the recommendation, when, to avoid dismissal, Mr. Roberts resigned. Shortly thereafter the trial board was directed to give Mr. Roberts a rehearing, upon the statement of Mr. M. A. Ballinger, his attorney, that he had been unable to secure the attendance of certain material witnesses at the former hearing.

The rehearing took place in May, 1905, at police headquarters, when Mrs. Roberts, the wife of the accused, John W. Keetz, Charles Anderson, Dr. Stone, Sergt. Kramer, Sergt. Schneider, Sergt. Conlon, Capt. Conmor, Christian Hansen, and Mr. Roberts simself gave further testimony at this hearing.

Whilst I concurred in the finding of the trial board I was never altogether satisfied of Mr. Roberts's guilt. I feared, from the first, that the board fest prejudice against Mr. Roberts, I reached the conclusion that he was unworthy of belief, and I accordingly disregarded his testimony.

In this connection I beg to call attention to the contents of the report of Capt. Swindells, dated June 26, 1905, which will be found amonget the papers in this case. It will be seen that after the rehearing Capt. Swindells, without notice to Mr. Roberts or his atforney, summoned this man Small to his office and had him make certain statements in reply to witnesses who gave evidence in behalf of Mr. Roberts on the rehearing. I need not say that it was improper for the captain to do this. If he wanted more light and thought that he could get it from Small, he surely should have had him summoned before the trial board and notified Mr. Roberts's counsel and given him an opportunity to appear and cross-examine the witness. I respectfully submit that these ex parte statements have no place in the case and should not be considered.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more, so that the gentleman can finish the reading of the letter in my

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The letter proceeds:

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The letter proceeds:

I also find amongst the papers a "report" made by Pvt. J. S. Johnson as the result of an investigation as to the character of J. W. Keetz, which Capt. Swindells appears to have requested him to make. It would be just as improper to consider the statements set forth in this report as to consider the ex parte statements of Small—in fact, more improper. The persons who appear to have been interviewed by Johnson were not under oath; and if they had been summoned before the trial board I seriously doubt whether they could have qualified as witnesses.

trial board I seriously doubt whether they could have qualified as witnesses.

The fact that the witness Keetz forfeited collateral in the police court once upon a time would have very little weight, even if it had been proven in the regular and proper way. Mere forfeiture of collateral in the police court does not necessarily import guilt. I have frequently heard of innocent persons forfeiting small collateral in preference to going to the police court. I once had occasion to argue that guilt must be inferred from the mere forfeiture of collateral, and the court held that my contention was not well founded and decided against me.

So that I submit that the mere fact that Mr. Keetz once forfeited collateral in the police court in the sum of $10 does not render him unworthy of credence.

According to the testimony, Mr. Roberts has by no means a bad record, and he has been a good, efficient policeman. The worst that can be said against him is that he has been at times a little overzealous in the performance of his duties. He was convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer on December 22, 1904, and fined $25 and warned, and that was the only conviction standing against him at the time he was convicted of the offense of giving an order on a saloon keeper for intoxicating liquor while on duty. I will venture the assertion that there are a great many men on the force with worse records than Roberts.

I believe Roberts told the truth in this case, whutted to the heard.

I believe Roberts told the truth in this case, but I must confess that I thought otherwise from the testimony first submitted to the board; else I should never have assented to the recommendation for removal

I thought otherwise from the testimony first submitted to the board; else I should never have assented to the recommendation for removal from the force.

I have the honor to suggest that if you decide to look into this case that you carefully read Mr. Roberts's application for reinstatement. I think it is very worthy of consideration. It has made a favorable impression on me, and I think it contains very little that could be called exaggeration, notwithstanding the fact that it was probably prepared by Mr. Roberts's counsel.

I have taken more than ordinary interest in this case because of my belief in Mr. Roberts's innocence of the offense for which he was driven to resign, and because I myself, in a measure, am responsible for his being off the force, owing to my concurrence in the trial board's finding. He was wrongfully convicted, and I say let justice be done him though the heavens fall. Fint justifia ruat coelum.

The resignation was to all intents and purposes a dismissal from the force, and there can be no question, it seems to me, as to the authority of the commissioners to reinstate the applicant. If the commissioners reach the conclusion that he was improperly convicted, all that will be necessary will be to pass an order vacating and setting aside the order accepting Mr. Roberts's resignation and directing his restoration to duty.

duty.

The importance of this case and my desire to see justice done the applicant furnish my only apology for the length of this communication.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully, yours,

Mr. WILLIS. Who signed that letter? That is what I am waiting for.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. It is signed by A. Leftwich Sinclair, special counsel. He was one of the trial board, as you will see, that convicted the man.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, if any further evidence were necessary to show that this amendment ought not to be adopted, or, if adopted, that the bill ought not to pass, the communication that the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] has read has furnished that evidence.

The question before the House is this: Shall we set aside the duly and properly constituted authorities, those who are placed at the head of the police department, and then, upon a mere statement or a letter written by somebody, special counsel for somebody

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Of the police commissioners— Mr. WILLIS. The Members of the House are called upon to pass upon the intricacies of these cases of promotion—
Mr. LOBECK. He states that this was the special counsel for the commissioners.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not care anything about who it is. The point I am making is this: That the law provides a method whereby these matters can be attended to, and if the committee had reported this bill in the form in which the bill was originally introduced the commissioners would be given complete power in the premises. But they put that all aside. matter is brought in here, and if this is to be relied upon as a precedent hereafter when there is any trouble in the police force, cases are to be brought in here, letters are to be read, and prejudices are to be aired, and you will have an absolute end of all discipline in the police department of the District of Columbia.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the sensible thing to do in this case is to proceed in the proper way. I do not want to do anything but justice. It is not necessary to argue with me that this man is an excellent policeman. I have no question about that. I feel sure he is. The point I make is that you are not proceeding now in the proper way.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we can save further discussion by accepting the bill in its original

Mr. WILLIS. Then I have nothing more to say. I am perfectly satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert some remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent to print some remarks in the RECORD. On this bill?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. No. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AKIN of New York. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if he has any letters that were purloined from my office and is going to insert them in the RECORD? I notice that there has been printed in the RECORD a letter that it is claimed was sent to me. If he will assure me that there is nothing that I have anything to do with, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I give the gentleman that

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the Republican Party is in no wise responsible for the high cost of living, except as it is responsible for better living.

More than this, the voter who would endeavor to escape the burden of this high cost by voting for Democratic candidates will not only fail to accomplish his desired relief, but he will find that he has invited a condition of universal distress.

Neither Republican laws nor Republican policies have occasioned the high prices which prevail, except as they have caused unexampled prosperity, which enables the burden to be more easily borne, while if the Democratic Party should come into power there will be a repetition of the hard times in 1893, when the workmen of the country made a sorrowful procession to the

No one questions the fact that during the past 20 years there has been a steady rise in the cost of the necessaries of life. Men and women who have hitherto lived in comparative ease and comfort-who have, at least, from fixed incomes been able to meet their expenses without incurring debt-now find that they must exercise the strictest economy if they are to live within their income. Those whose incomes from their occupations have not increased work harder and enjoy less. The problem of making both ends meet carries with it much anxiety

In a country like the United States, in which the political instinct is highly developed, there is a natural tendency to give to everything, from the most commonplace municipal ordinance to the ratification of a treaty or a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, a political status. There exists, therefore, in the minds of many a belief that a political organization is responsible for unsatisfactory and undesirable conditions, even though these conditions bear no relation either to politics or to any system of government. The political organization in power is the Republican Party, and many well-meaning people believe that somehow it is responsible for their present situation.

Nothing could be further from the truth. Not only this, but the election of a Democratic administration would impose upon the country a period of absolute distress.

If the increase in the cost of living was confined to the United States, there might be some foundation for the assertion that it is due to the long-continued control of national affairs by the Republican Party.

On the contrary, the high cost of living is not experienced alone in this country. It is a world-wide problem. The reports from consular officers, obtained by direction of President Taft, and by him transmitted to Congress, demonstrate this fact. Prices have risen even in free-trade countries. Even in | erate to raise the price of foodstuffs.

distant Tokio the problem has become most acute. In Manchester, England, the figures show that the increase has been 13.6 per cent over 1898. The consul general at Paris reports that the increased cost of ordinary foodstuffs in northern France has become the most generally absorbing topic of public

In Germany living conditions have been seriously affected by the continued rise in the price of food products, many of the commodities having advanced beyond all previous records. Holland prices have been steadily rising since 1896. An official agricultural report covering important articles, such as beef, pork, eggs, butter, ham, wheat, and beet sugar, shows that the increase has ranged from 16 to 55 per cent in the 12 years following 1898. These products had also risen in price in 1911 as compared with 1910, and vegetables were also higher. In brief, every country in the world is struggling with the problem of higher cost of living.

If the trouble is universal the cause must be universal.

As money becomes more and more plentiful its purchasing power decreases. In the olden days in this country it required a basketful of Continental currency to purchase a barrel of flour, and when the printing presses of the Confederate States were turning out reams of paper money it cost a thousand dollars to buy a bushel of potatoes. Gold is now the basis foundation of money, and there is more gold in the world today than ever before.

We are now producing about $500,000,000 annually, whereas 20 years ago the average yearly output was only $100,000,000. In 25 years the average annual production has been quintupled and in 10 years the increase has doubled. This enormous addition to the basic money of the world has been a prime factor in lifting prices of commodities from their former level. We passed through the same experience in this country in 1850, following the sudden and spectacular discovery of gold in California. Then, as now, prices soared, and the effect was felt throughout the world. The contribution of California to the world's gold supply was, however, insignificant as compared with the amount which is now being extracted from the mines of South Africa, Australia, and the United States, including Alaska. There is no immediate likelihood of a diminution in the supply.

While the increase in the supply of gold is unquestionably the principal factor in the situation, there are other causes which must be considered. Not one of them, however, is directly or indirectly traceable to Republican legislation or policies and could not be affected by a change of administration.

First, the highly complex civilization which we have developed in this country compels a larger degree of expense in our daily existence.

Humanity rightly demands a constantly improving environment. The homes in which our people live are properly equipped with conveniences unknown to our forefathers. The day of the tallow candle has passed. The necessities of to-day were unattainable luxuries two generations, ago. Universal educa-tion has stimulated higher ideals of living, and these, while tending toward the improvement of the race, are not to be enjoyed without consequent additional expenditure. The single item of the telephone is an illustration. We are spending millions upon millions of dollars each year for the use and enjoyment of an invention which has become necessary to the conduct of our daily life. The automobile, while still a luxury to many, has also demonstrated its usefulness as a rapid means of locomotion and is deemed a requisite to the successful transaction of business. Innumerable instances of similar character might be cited as indicating drains upon the indi-Innumerable instances of similar vidual purse which did not present themselves in former years. Second, the production of foodstuffs has not kept pace in this country with the growth of population.

There is, unfortunately, a trend away from the farm to the urban centers. The statistics of the census are convincing upon this point. Between 1880 and 1890 the increase in the number of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits was only 50 per cent, while in the same period the increase in the number engaged in manufacturing industries was 100 per cent. figures of the census also show that between 1900 and 1910 there was a drift of 11.6 per cent of the population toward the nonproducing food centers. The result of this movement toward the cities is shown in the decrease in the acreage of cereals harvested and in the quantity of cereals produced in the United States. The increase in the acreage of cereals harvested between 1900 and 1910 was only 3 per cent, while during the same period the increase in population was 18 per cent.

If we do not produce food in a ratio commensurate with the growth of population, the law of supply and demand will opPeople must eat to live. Food is a necessity, and if the supply becomes less adequate, which is the present fact, the available supply must increase in value. Out of this situation, however, the farmer emerges with much profit. The prosperity of the agriculturists in a large part of our country has never been so great as during the past two decades. The increase in the value of farm lands has been phenomenal and is to be recorded in billions of dollars—figures which are almost incomprehensible. Not only this, but the statistics of the Department of Agriculture show that the average increase in the price of articles purchased by the farmer has been only 12.1 per cent, while the average rate of increase in acreage values was 72.7 per cent, or six times as much. Thus the farmer has not been heavily burdened by comparison as a consumer, and yet has been able to market his product at a larger profit.

As a Nation we must rejoice that this prosperity has been experienced by the agricultural classes. The farmers constitute the bone and sinew of our population. In intelligence, regard for law, and industrious application they excel the tiller of the soil in other countries. A Republican administration has afforded them, through the institution of the free rural delivery of mail, exceptional advantages for prompt communication in matters of business and in the receipt of daily and weekly In addition to this, the banking facilities in agricultural sections have greatly improved, while the efforts which are being made in various localities, through agricultural colleges and experiment stations, developed under the broad and liberal policies of Republican administration, are producing ex-cellent results. The Republican Party is making every effort to meet the problem of the decrease in the food-producing class by making waste ground productive, by teaching the farmer how to get the largest results out of the earth with the least expenditure of time and labor, by dignifying the profession of the agriculturist, and demonstrating in every way its apprecia-tion of his work. The intelligent, scientific farmer is to-day the bulwark upon which we, as a Nation, rest, and to him, more than to anyone else, must we look for relief from the condition which a decreasing food supply has created.

The gold supply can not be diminished by legislation. Party platforms can not increase the number of food producers. The increased cost of the distribution of commodities, which is another factor in the high cost of living, is beyond congressional enactment or political policy.

In so far as this important matter can be regarded as within Government control the effort of the Republican administration has been steadily exercised in the direction of securing a reduction of this cost. The Interstate Commerce Commission, after a patient, careful, and impartial inquiry, has undertaken to place freight rates upon an equitable basis, and is now endeavoring to obtain fair treatment for the public in the matter of express charges. Neither the Interstate Commerce Commission nor any other governmental agency can, however, deal with the problem which confronts the retailer who, in order to meet competition and retain trade, is compelled to distribute small packages over a large area. This necessitates the maintenance of an expensive and extended system, and the cost is naturally borne in some degree by the consumer. In some of the larger cities the cost of delivery has become enormous and is a factor in the high cost of living which can not be ignored.

The extent to which the middleman figures in the commercial transactions of the present day is another vital matter. He can not be eliminated by a change of administration. His existence is not due either to Republican legislation or Republican policies.

It is important to remember that the protest against high prices is confined almost entirely to foodstuffs. There has not been an excessive increase in the cost of manufactured articles. This demonstrates that the tariff which protects the manufacturer from foreign competition is not the cause of the increased cost of living. In fact, the workingman has benefited by an increase in wages to help him meet the higher cost of living, although this ratio has not, in all cases, been proportionate to the heavy burden laid upon him. Like an endless chain, however, the increased cost of living leads to higher wages, and these, in turn, mean higher prices for the product of the workman. Appreciating this serious phase of the problem, President Taft, with sympathetic statesmanship, has recommended the creation of an industrial commission, which will make a thorough investigation into the whole matter. If, for instance, a manufacturing corporation which raises the wages of its employees reimburses itself for this additional outlay by raising the price of its product, there should be some authority to discover whether or not it is already enjoying inordinate profits and whether its business relations are such as to insure it an illegal monopoly of that product. The Republican Party would have both employer and employee mutually and equitably share in a common prosperity, and its broad-minded leaders are working in this direction.

Overcapitalization may have been a contributing factor to the high cost of living, inasmuch as money which has been required to pay interest and dividends upon inflated values might have been saved to the consumer by decreasing the cost of production, or might have been devoted to paying higher wages to the workmen. President Taft's wisdom in dealing with great problems is again shown in his recommendation for the creation of a Federal commission which shall bear the same relation to industrial corporations as the Interstate Commerce Commission does to the railroads. This commission would unquestionably remedy much of the evil of overcapitalization which now exists.

Every fair-minded man must thus be convinced that the high cost of living is not due to Republican legislation or Republican policies. More than this, the present situation, which the Republican Party is endeavoring to remedy, would become immeasurably worse if legislation is enacted which would disrupt the business of the country. The Democratic Party offers no solution of the problem of the high cost of living, save through a radical assault upon the protective system which has given this country its unexampled prosperity.

Everyone must recall with serious misgiving the period when the Democratic Party was last given opportunity to revise the tariff—a period accompanied by universal business depression and much individual distress. As compared with those days of commercial despair, the burden of the increased cost of living seems light, indeed. The memory of that sorrowful time has not yet been effaced. The American people will certainly not jeopardize their present prosperity by inviting a repetition of 1893. The enactment of Democratic free-trade laws, such as have originated in the House of Representatives, would destroy American industry without solving the high-cost problem. What would be thought of a physician who, instead of curing his patient's malady, put the unfortunate man to death?

The Republican Party, now in control of national affairs, has from its very inception demonstrated its interest in and sympathy for the wage earner. It came into being as the friend of oppressed humanity and it has been always foremost in all efforts to secure improved conditions for the American people. It is doing everything in its power to solve the present problem, even though it recognizes that the conditions which exist are in no sense the result of its legislative or political policies. It will continue in the future to devote its best endeavors to relieving the people of the burden of the high cost of living. These efforts will be made, however, along rational and safe lines. They will not menace the business stability of the country, as would be the case if a Democratic administration should come into power, but, on the contrary, will make more certain our splendid progress as a Nation and the prosperity and happiness of each individual citizen.

The Republican Party is not only not responsible for the high cost of living, but it is the only party which can solve the problem without inviting national disaster.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 strike out the word "empowered" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed."

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. That amendment is withdrawn. Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman wants this amendment voted down.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not withdraw it. It is a committee amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "appoint and."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman has consented to the voting down of the preceding amendment, because it raised one of the most interesting questions that has come before the House. Here was a proposition in the bill originally authorizing the Commissioners to appoint and promote Spencer Roberts. Then, it was changed to a proposition to direct the Commissioners to promote Spencer Roberts.

to direct the Commissioners to promote Spencer Roberts.

The Constitution of the United States, fixing the powers of the President, says in connection with the appointment of various officials:

But the Congress may by Law vest the Appointment of such inferior Officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the Courts of Law, or in the Heads of Departments.

That has been construed to give Congress the authority to permit the District Commissioners or other officials to make appointments.

In this case the appointment has been made; but a proposition was made directing the commissioners to transfer the appointee from one class to another class.

We frequently pass laws dividing employees into certain classes and automatically providing for their promotion. As a legislative power, that power is not questioned; but whether we have the power under the Constitution, an employee having already been appointed to an office, to direct the Executive to change the appointment and to put the appointee into a different office or a different class of the same kind of office is a very interesting question, which I did not wish to have raised by this bill.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think that could arise with respect to an officer of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes. Officers of the District of Columbia are officers of the United States. We create the government of the District of Columbia. We provide its officers, and while they are officers of the District of Columbia as Territorial officers are officers of the Territory, still they are officers of the Government of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. The question is an interesting one, as the gentleman suggests. My recollection is that the Constitution provides that the District of Columbia shall be under the absolute control of Congress. I am not quoting the exact language.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember the express provision of the Constitution.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is in the Constitution a provision that Congress exclusively shall legislate for the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. The provision of the Constitution is-

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District.

That does not change the powers of the Executive under the Constitution. That is a mere power given to Congress to legislate concerning the District, as it would otherwise legislate concerning other places in the country. That is found on page 90 of the Manual. It is an interesting question, but it is not wise to raise it where it is not necessary.

Mr. GARRETT. My recollection of that provision of the Constitution in regard to appointment by the President is that it names specific appointments that the President shall make, and then provides that Congress may have power to provide for some other method of appointment of some other officers-"inferior officers" is the expression used.

Mr. MANN. It says:

But Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior offi-cers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

That is the provision following the provision that the President shall make appointments of ambassadors, ministers, consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, the first of the officers being appointed by advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. GARRETT. My impression has been, so far as the District officers are concerned, that they were exclusively under control of the Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In the debates on the act of 1878, commonly known as the organic act, this question was all thrashed out, and it was practically conceded by everybody that Congress had the right to make appointments-in other words, that the power given to the President to make appointments was the general law, and this was the exception to it.

If the gentleman will pardon me Mr. MANN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And in the original act, when it was first prepared and presented to Congress, provision was made for their appointment otherwise than by the President.

Mr. MANN. These appointments do not have to be made by the President; they are made by the commissioners. Please distinguish between the legislative power to create an office and to provide for filling it and the power to name the person who The power to create an office, the power to provide that it shall be filled, is a legislative function which we possess; but when it comes to naming the person who shall fill the office, that is an executive function which the legislative power does not possess

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. That is due, is it not, to the legislative enactment which gives the President the power to appoint?

Mr. MANN. Without legislative enactment the President only has the power of appointment to any office under the Government of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT. Except those provided by the Constitution. Mr. MANN. He has the power to appoint them, all executive and judicial offices. Of course, he does not have the power yet to appoint Members of Congress, although some Executives have sought to exercise it indirectly.

Mr. GARRETT. The indications are that it may be exercised in some States in a short time. I have understood that the provision of the Constitution gives power to Congress to absolutely wipe out the District government, change it entirely.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GARRETT. And wipe out every officer in it. Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly we have the power. We can wipe them all out.

Mr. GARRETT. If we can wipe them all out, why not wipe out one?

Mr. MANN. We can wipe out one, but we can not say that a certain person shall occupy a certain office. We can say that the President may appoint him to the office, we may create the office and we may provide that it shall be filled by the Executive, but we have not the power to appoint. The power to fill the office, the power of naming the person, is not a legislative power, as I contend, but is an Executive power; and in this day, and I suppose there always was a time, when the different branches of the Government seek to encroach upon each other, and when the Executive at times apparently seeks to encroach upon the legislative power, we ought to be careful that we do not attempt to usurp the Executive and administrative power by claiming that as a part of the legislative power.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit an interruption, the office was created under the territorial form of government in 1871, and it was continued by the act of June 20, 1874, and continued by the act of June 11, 1878, which is known as the organic act. The office was created way back yonder. Long before the introduction of this bill Mr. Roberts had been appointed under these acts. This is not an act to again appoint him, but it is an act to change him from one position, which the commissioners may do, and by lapse of time to another grade of the same position, which would increase his compensation.

Mr. MANN. I admit to the gentleman that the question is different from the question of original appointments. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Johnson], who is our authority in the House upon District matters, just stated that this police force was created, I think, in 1871.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Originally in 1861.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is not very distinct, but it is that the Metropolitan police force was originally created in 1861.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky., In 1861; but that was before we had the municipal government of the District of Columbia. We had the three divisions—Georgetown, Washington, and the levy court. The mayor of Georgetown, Washington, and the right to appoint police; the mayor of the city of Washington had the right to appoint police; and the levy court had the right to appoint police; but not until 1871, February 21, was that authority conferred upon the governor.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that in the act of 1861 they created a police force for the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Its functions to be exercised by the three authorities.

To be assigned in part to the city of Washing-Mr. MANN. ton, in part to the city of Georgetown, and in part to the country districts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is correct.

One-half the cost of those officers who were as-Mr. MANN. signed to the different localities to be paid by taxation raised upon the different municipalities.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is correct; and the rest the United States Government was to pay. Mr. MANN. I am glad that my recollection agrees with the recollection of the gentleman from Kentucky. I do not know which of us would be the older to remember personally in regard to that.

Mr. FOSTER. Neither gentleman need tell his age. [Laughter.] The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. O'SHAUNESSY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering District of Columbia business.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business, with Mr. Oldfield in the chair.

RECLAMATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF ANACOSTIA RIVER AND FLATS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 22642) providing for the protection of the interests of the United States in lands and waters comprising any part of the Potomac River, the Anacostia River or Eastern Branch, and Rock Creek and lands adjacent thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Sec. 3. That the said cause shall then proceed with all practicable expedition to a final determination by said court of all rights drawn in question therein, and the said court shall have full power and jurisdiction by its decrees to determine every question of right, title, interest, or claim arising in the premises and to vacate, annul, set aside, or confirm any claim of any character arising or set forth in the premises; and its decree shall be final and conclusive upon all persons and corporations, or others, parties to the suit, or who shall fall, after public notice as hereinbefore in this act provided, to appear in said court and litigate his, her, their, or its claim, and they shall be deemed forever barred from setting up or maintaining any right, title, interest, or claim in the premises.

SEC. 4. That if on the final hearing of said cause the said Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall be of opinion that there exists any right, title, or interest in the land or water in this act mentioned in any person, or corporation, or others, adverse to the complete and paramount right of the United States, the said court shall forthwith and in a summary way proceed to ascertain the value of any such right, title, interest, or claim, exclusive of the value of any improvement to the property covered by such right, title, or interest made by or under the authority of the United States, and report thereof shall be made to the Congress.

SEC. 5. That from the final decree of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and every part thereof, in the premises, an appeal shall be allowed to the United States, and to any other party in the cause complaining of such decree to the Supreme Court of the United States, which last-mentioned court shall have full power and jurisdiction to hear, tr

Sec. 6. That for carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, to be expended only upon the direction and approval of the Attorney General for such purposes as he may deem necessary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope somebody will give us an explanation of this bill and let us know whether it is a proposition in an indirect or direct way, whatever it may be, to acquire Rock Creek Park. I am heartily in favor of that, but I would like to know whether this is accomplishing the purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is a trifle facetious in respect to acquiring Rock Creek Park, when it has already been acquired. The Attorney General drafted this bill and sent it over, and it has been approved by the Department of Justice and by the Commissioners of the District. I am not particularly wedded to it, for the reason that perhaps ultimately it does mean a park; but whether it does or does not should not be a matter of serious consideration at this time, because, as a matter of fact, the United States Government owns land in the Anacostia Flats to which adverse title is set up, and there are squatters on some of it, and clouds on the title to some of the very many lots over there. What is to become of them finally should not be a question now. If the United States Government owns them, the United States should recover them and the title should be cleared and put in the United States. After that is done, if the United States wishes this property for its own use or Congress consents that it may be given to the District of Columbia for a park system, that becomes another question.

But the first question, as I said, is if the United States Government owns valuable land, and it does, then the clouds to title should be cleared and all squatters should be removed and all disputes settled. This is the first bill, I understand, that has ever sought to do that and that alone. The various other bills which have been introduced relative to this subject have carried with them a park plan or an assessment of damages upon the property owners in that section over there. This does not deal at all with that. It deals with nothing except the question of regaining United States property which the Attorney General of the United States says belongs to the United States and removing clouds from the title of property which the Attorney General says belongs to the United States.

Mr. MANN. If I understand, if the gentleman will yield, it is proposed by this bill not to give the Attorney General authority to commence condemnation proceedings, but simply to file a bill to quiet the title of the United States

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. To file a bill in equity, the bill says Mr. MANN. Just where is this property? Will the gentleman tell us? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is along the Eastern Branch of the river above and below the navy yard and on both sides of the river, extending to the Maryland line of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman tell us whether there is involved in any way, directly or indirectly, in this bill or the proceedings which this bill is a part of, a proposition to condemn a portion of that property and pay for it by special assessment? Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I understand not,

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows there has been a good deal in the newspapers on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There has; but this does not pertain to this bill.

Mr. MANN. I understand it does not pertain to this bill, but does it not pertain to purpose for which this bill is directed; that is, that the Government shall assert its title to certain property over there with the expectation of then condemning property to which it does not have title as the court shall ascertain and raise the money by assessment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; that is not the object of this bill. The object of this bill is to take away from the use of other people this property when it belongs to the United States Government.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman estimate at all the area that would be involved here?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I asked the Department of Justice for that information, and they have not given me the accurate figures. They say it requires some measurements that have not been made, but there are a good many hundred acres that the United States Government is entitled to in that section. They also desire the passage of this bill that some needed land which is in question just beyond the navy yard may be acquired for the purpose of extending the navy yard.

Mr. MANN. Of course this really appropriates quite a considerable sum of money to quiet the title to not a very large area of land. It is safe to say that if there are people living upon this land claiming title to it that not many of them will have as much money proportionately to spend in defending their title as the Government will have in prosecuting its title.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, the committee left that matter—the bill appropriates $25,000, and as to whether that is too large or not the committee left it to the discretion of the Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I do not think the committee is subject to any criticism for that. That, however, indicates the size of the undertaking and the value of the land in a way, and the quantity of land which may be concerned. Is it possible that the Government owns several hundred acres of land down here on these creeks or branches which other people are in possession of?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; but the question arises on a change of the river in one respect, as to what point the Government does go, and the whole matter in some sections is in dispute and there is but one way of arriving at the correct ownership of it, and the Attorney General had the committee to understand this was the only way he could see by which it could be arrived at.

Mr. MANN. We made an appropriation a few years ago, I think, of $10,000 to be expended by the Attorney General in investigating the title of the Government to certain river front I do not know whether they were these lands lands down here. or not. Does the gentleman know whether this is the result of that investigation in part?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This goes further than the Anacostia Flats, if the gentleman will notice. It goes to the Anacostia River, the Eastern Branch, and also on the Rock Creek land. The Department of Justice contends that there are some pieces of property in the Rock Creek section that belong to the United States Government and they want to get into that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I may say, personally, I hope the Government will obtain title to this property, and having obtained it will keep the property as a public park or part of a park system and not sell it or otherwise dispose of it. I think that we can not have enough parks in a growing city like Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I differ with the gentleman in that I would not convert the entire District of Columbia into parks.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman does not differ with me about that, because I would not do that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But the gentleman's remarks were pretty nearly that broad.

Mr. MANN. Well, I meant we can not have enough, because Congress will never be willing to have enough, The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill under the five-minute rule. The Clerk proceeded with and concluded the reading of the POLICE AND FIREMEN'S PENSIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move now to call up the bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia. Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed hereafter to cause to be annually levied upon all property in the District of Columbia which is now or which may hereafter become subject to general taxation, such a rate of taxation as will provide such sum or sums as will be sufficient to meet any present or future deficiency in the fund now set aside by law for the payment of police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the tax so levied shall be collected by the collector of taxes in and for the said District of Columbia, and the proceeds thereof shall by him be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the said fund or funds for the payment of the police and firemen's pensions and relief provided by law. The Treasurer of the United States shall from time to time, when the existence of any deficiency in the fund for payment of police and firemen's pensions and relief shall be certified to him in writing by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, pay from the Treasury of the United States the sum or sums necessary to meet said deficiency under the written direction of the said commissioners in order that each person lawfully entitled to any part of said police and firemen's pensions and relief fund may receive the same in full.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect upon its passage.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Clerk dispense with the further reading of the bill and that the gentleman in charge make a statement of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there ob-

Mr. MANN. It is a very short bill, and I think it ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the tax, the levy and collection of which is herein provided for, shall be an additional one, over and above the tax rate now provided for by general law, and the proceeds thereof shall not be used for any purpose other than that hereinbefore authorized. Said tax shall be levied and collected, as above provided, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia at the same time as the tax on all property now subject to general taxation in the said District. There shall be no contribution to either of the aforesaid funds, either directly or indirectly, from the United States. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed, on the first day of each and every month until the first collection of taxes under this act shall have become available, to draw a requisition upon the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for such sum or sums as will, when added to the amount already to the credit of each of the hereinbefore-named funds, be sufficient to pay in full the amount lawfully due each and every person upon the roll of the police relief fund, District of Columbia, as well as those upon the roll of the firemen's relief fund, District of Columbia; and the said Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be paid the amount of said requisition for the said purposes out of any moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the District of Columbia which can, in the opinion of the said commissioners, be spared for the time being from any fund held by the said Treasury for the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That any money so used shall be repaid to the fund from which it was taken out of the first money collected under the tax herein provided for: And provided further. That no part of the money gathered under said levy shall be paid to those upon the rolls of either of the said two relief funds until all of the money taken out of the Treasury as aforesaid shall have been refunded thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this bill is intended to provide a permanent means for obtaining funds, now lacking, to pay the pensions provided by law to policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia. It does not in any way alter or affect the District pension law or the basis on which those pensions are paid or in any form whatever affect the pensions themselves. It simply aims to provide for the payment regularly of the shortage now unpaid—the pensions which are legally due to the firemen and policemen of the District and which are specified in full in the report accompanying the bill, each pensioner being given by name and address, the cause of the pension, the date, and the amount being fully stated in the report.

The money from the present sources permitted by law is not sufficient with which to pay these men that which belongs to them. There was a shortage during the fiscal year just closed of about $15,000, and the pensioners failed to receive the money due them by that amount. There is an estimated shortage in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, of about $25,000, and by so much the pensioners will fail to get the money which has been lawfully set aside for them. This condition of a decreasing supply for an increasing fund has been going on for a number of years. It was foreshadowed in Report No. 429 of the Senate, of the Sixtleth Congress, first session. At that time that report, to which reference is made in the report of your committee, pointed out the condition which now exists.

This fund is one that has always been wholly paid by the District of Columbia. Into it not a dollar of United States money has ever gone. It is supplied by a dollar per month retained from the officers' pay, by certain fines, which are deposited to the credit of the firemen's relief fund, and from certain other resources, like the dog tax and others.

There has been a continuous history here of temporizing with this fund. As it ran short from one source or another there would be added a certain amount to it. That method of dealing with it has proved increasingly unsatisfactory, and now your committee thought it-

Mr. MADDEN. Would it interrupt the gentleman if he were to allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REDFIELD. No.
Mr. MADDEN. I notice the amount of the pension varies greatly. I was wondering whether there was any fixed amount granted as pensions, and why, and how?

Mr. REDFIELD. That is by law, I believe, charged upon the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. MADDEN. And it is optional with them as to what they shall allow?

Mr. REDFIELD. Yes; save that there is a maximum fixed.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering if it would not be very much better if there were some special amount fixed by law, instead of leaving it optional with the commissioners.

Your committee did not attempt, I will Mr. REDFIELD. say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], in the faintest way here to alter or change the existing pension law, or to deal with it at all; but, accepting the law as it stood, your committee attempted to provide means of payment of that now lawfully to be paid, but, as a matter of fact, largely unpaid.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman state what the maximum pension is per month?

Mr. REDFIELD. Fifty dollars per month. Mr. MADDEN. Does that include commanding officers as well as patrolmen?

Mr. REDFIELD. I think the commanding officers receive a larger sum, fixed by statute. That is all reviewed in Senate Report No. 429, to which reference is made.

Mr. MADDEN. I notice that some of these pensions are higher than $50 a month.

Mr. REDFIELD. I think the officers' pensions are higher, being fixed by statute. But I repeat that the committee did not attempt to alter the law fixing the pensions, but, assuming that to be lawfully fixed, to provide for the shortage of the fund, and

Mr. MADDEN. How much is that shortage now?

Mr. REDFIELD. The shortage for the year ended June 30, 1911, was about $15,000. The figures here, which were obtained from the auditor of the District, stated that in the police fund the shortage was $10,304.30.

Covering how long a period?

Mr. REDFIELD. For that year. And the shortage in the firemen's fund for that year was $5,262, and for the present year ending June 30, 1912, there is an estimated shortage of approximately $25,000.

Mr. MADDEN. When the pension is once fixed, is it within the power of the commissioners to increase that pension or reduce it?

Mr. REDFIELD. I am not prepared to say what the law is on that subject, for the reason that-

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. This does not affect it.
Mr. REDFIELD. This bill does not deal with that at all.
Mr. MADDEN. The reason why I asked the question is that I was wondering whether some law could not be enacted fixing at a specific amount the pension to be paid, and whether if that were done it would not meet the case; whether we would not have revenue coming in from the present sources to meet all future needs if we figured out exactly what pensions we could pay.

Mr. REDFIELD. I will say to the gentleman that that could only be done by scaling down very materially the pen-

Mr. MADDEN. I would be in favor of paying all deficiencies if we adopted the policy which I have suggested.

Mr. REDFIELD. The committee would like to have it placed clearly before the House that they are not presenting a pension bill. No pension bill has been suggested by the committee or contemplated by them in this connection. But accepting the law now existing, and taking it as it stands, the committee have endeavored by this bill to provide the funds for making the necessary payments under it.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman will excuse me for interrupting him, but I am only asking for information. I do not want to embarrass the situation at all.

Mr. REDFIELD. I am very glad to have the gentleman ask all the questions he desires.

Mr. MADDEN. I was wondering whether the gentleman from New York could tell us what is the aggregate amount of pensions paid to the firemen and policemen annually?

Mr. REDFIELD. That appears in detail in the report, on pages 2 and 3, for the years 1898 to 1911, inclusive.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the aggregate? Mr. REDFIELD. I can tell the gentleman the aggregate of the two funds by adding together the figures which appear in the report

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is $125,000 in round num-

Mr. REDFIELD. It is $120,000 to $125,000 a year for the two funds

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. To which fund is added the $700 or $800 monthly which they themselves pay by taking a dollar a month from their respective salaries.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the average annual income from the present sources to be applied for pensions of these two classes?

Mr. REDFIELD. The total receipts from all sources for the year 1911 for the police fund were $81,500 and for the firemen's fund, $40,200.

Mr. MADDEN. What are those sources?

Mr. REDFIELD. From the dog taxes—
Mr. MADDEN. What do those taxes amount to?
Mr. REDFIELD. The dog tax for the year 1911, which went to the police fund, was $22,115.14. None of that was applicable to the firemen's fund.

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that this is all shown in detail in the very full information furnished by the auditor of the District, to be found on pages 2 and 3 of the report.

Furthermore, in order that this whole matter might be ventilated as fully as possible, you will find on page 4 of the report not only a statement of the pensions that are now paid, but a comparative statement, showing what they are now as compared with what they were at the time of the last legislation upon the subject.

On the final pages of the report will be found the name, address, and length of service of each pensioner, and the amount and cause of each pension now paid.

Mr. MADDEN. Are the widows and orphans of firemen and policemen pensioned?

Mr. REDFIELD. They appear upon this list and are stated to be widows and children, in each case where such is the fact. I am very glad to have these detailed questions asked, because the committee have tried in this report to cover these details so fully that they can easily be studied.

There appears, also, on page 5 of the report, the results that will be carried by this bill in the shape of increased taxation, from which it would appear that, reckoning this deficiency as $5,000 per annum more than it now is, assuming it to be $30,000 instead of approximately $25,000, the auditor of the District states, and it is shown in this report, that the net results will be that a man paying taxes on property valued at $10,000 will be called upon to pay 85 cents a year because of this measure,
Mr. MANN. In that connection will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REDFIELD. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Is not very much of the property in the District unimproved, and is not the valuation of such unimproved lots so low that the tax under the gentleman's proposition would not amount to so much as one cent per lot? And is it not a rather expensive proposition to apportion a tax of 1 or 2 cents against each lot?

Mr. REDFIELD. I am not sufficiently informed as to the details of property in the District to say to what extent the condition mentioned by him prevails, but I have taken this up with the auditor of the District and have gone over it with him very carefully, and he assures me that there will be no material, practical difficulty as to expense in assessing and allotting this tax.

Mr. MANN. Does not this bill require that this tax shall be separately extended on the tax rolls?

Mr. REDFIELD. Not at all. This bill expressly requires the opposite of that. A misunderstanding to that effect arose as to this bill in its original form, but when it was amended and a section was added by the committee, it was then expressly stated, and it is understood by the auditor of the District, that this is not a separate tax, but is to be a portion of the tax now authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt but that the gentleman is cor-When I read this bill I had the impression, and I have the impression now, that it requires a separate tax.

Mr. REDFIELD. I call the attention of the gentleman to lines 2 and 5, inclusive, on page 3:

Said tax shall be levied and collected, as above provided, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia at the same time as the tax on all property now subject to general taxation in the said District.

In bringing that matter to the attention of the auditor for the District, he approved verbally and, in fact, revised completely the whole form not only of that paragraph, but of all the bill, in order that it might conform to the existing practice.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the auditor speaks with some degree of authority.

Mr. REDFIELD. I thought he did.

Mr. MANN. But the provision in the bill that the tax shall be an additional one, over and above the tax rate now provided by general law, would seem to me to indicate that this was to be extended separately and not added to the tax rate:

Mr. REDFIELD. I would say to the gentleman that I have never known any construction of the word "additional" to mean separate, and upon bringing that to the notice of the auditor of the District he did not see that distinction. Speaking for myself, as the author of the bill, I will be glad to accept any phraseology to make it more explicit.

Mr. MANN. When you say that a certain thing shall be additional to something else, it means separate; it does not mean a part of. When you say that a tax shall be an additional tax, it seems to me that it means a separate tax. Certainly that matter ought to be arranged so that there will be no difficulty in reference to the collection of taxes and tax sales

Now, I would like to ask the gentleman one other question, assuming that this bill will not be disposed of to-night, so that the gentleman may be prepared to give the information on the subject when the bill comes up again. The gentleman has referred to the committee having made no change in reference to the pension laws, but only endeavored to provide money to pay the pensions now allowed by law. So that the gentleman will be prepared, I wish to call his attention, in a way, to what seems to me to be the fact that pensions now allowed by law are not fixed pensions at all, but a provision that so much money shall be in the policemen and firemen's pension fund to be distributed by the allowance of the commissioners. The law does not provide the amount to be allowed for pensions at all, although it has a limitation, but provides a fund out of which pensions shall be paid. I do not understand how it can be said that when you increase the fund you are simply providing money for the payment of pensions now allowed by law, when the only allowance is a fund now provided out of which the commissioners may pay pensions.

I suggest to the gentleman now that there are other matters to be brought before the House. I desire to be heard at some length on the bill myself in reference to civil pensions. It is now 5 o'clock.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill H. R. 22642 to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Oldfield, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 22642) for the protection of the interests of the United States in lands and waters comprised in part of the Potomac River, Anacostia River or Eastern Branch, and Rock Creek, and lands adjacent thereto, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass; that the committee had also had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20840) to provide for deficiencies in the fund for police and firemen's pensions and relief in the District of Columbia, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 354 (H. Rept. 534).

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is hereby authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,600 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House.

With the following amendment:

Line 3, strike out the words "$1,600 per annum" and insert in lieu thereof the words "$6 per day during the remainder of the present session."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is this a resolution for the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. Mr. MANN. I hope that it will pass.

INVESTIGATION OF SHIP LINES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 470 (H. Rept. 530).

Resolved, That all expenses that may be incurred by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries under resolution (H. Res. 425) adopted February 24, 1912, authorizing said committee to investigate the methods and practices of various lines of ships, etc., to an amount not exceeding $25,000, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this resolution carries $25,000.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. This carries the same amount as was provided in the matter of the investigation of the Steel Cor-Yes. This carries the same amount as was poration and in the matter of the investigation of the Sugar Trust.

Mr. MANN. I think the sugar investigation did not carry $25,000.

Mr. LLOYD. The gentleman is right. That was $10,000. Mr. MANN. The other carried $25,000. It seems to me that the gentleman from Missouri ought to be willing to start with less than $25,000. He will find it embarrasses him more than anybody else to have $25,000 at his command, with the hungry horde that will be pressing on him on every side in a campaign.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Alexander].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that so far there has been no hungry horde after the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not had any money yet.

Mr. ALEXANDER. We had prospects, and ordinarily that is

Mr. MANN. Why, here you are going into a political campaign. I do not think the gentleman will use the money for a political campaign, but a thousand people will want him to do so and suggest persons to whom that money should be distributed. I have no objection, if he insists upon the $25,000, although if I were in his place I would want to start in with a smaller sum, feeling that if I needed more money the House would be willing to grant it. We spent $25,000 on the steel investigation. I do not think the gentleman will have time during the rest of this Congress to spend $25,000 in the same way that it was spent in the steel investigation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee will not spend a dollar that is not necessary to be expended, and so far we have incurred no expenses except in the employment of one expert, who entered upon the discharge of his duties on Monday, but this investigation necessarily will extend beyond the present session of Congress into the summer months, and it is necessary that provision be made for the expenses that may be incurred. I hardly think it is necessary to assure the House that not one dollar will be expended unnecessarily.

Mr. MANN. Oh, nobody supposes the gentleman will voluntarily spend money unnecessarily, and yet every Member in this of some person or under his control a large sum of money it inevitably means the employment of more people at higher salaries than would be provided with a smaller sum. The gentleman, instead of paying two or three hundred dollars a month for expert accountants, will find he will be called upon to pay $500 to $1,000 a month, because he has the money and they will tell him they will not work for less.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.
Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman explain what is proposed to be investigated under this resolution?

Mr. MANN. The Shipping Trust,
Mr. MURDOCK. It says, "Investigate the methods and practices of various lines of ships." What is the purpose?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is the gentleman familiar with House resolution 425?

Mr. MURDOCK. I am not, and that is why I asked the question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, in brief, it provides for an investigation of alleged foreign shipping combines, domestic shipping combines, and combines between domestic and foreign shipping, and the relations between them and the railroads and all related subjects. It is a very comprehensive resolution.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will it be comprehensive enough to take in the foreign subsidies?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman that I have already taken up this and other subjects with the departments and am endeavoring to get all the information I can that is called for in the resolution through the departments of the Government. The information called for that will require investigations abroad I am undertaking to get through the State Department and the Bureau of Trade Relations.

In connection with the chief of that bureau, I have formulated inquiries, which have gone forward to the diplomatic and consular representatives of our Government, to investigate the question of subsidies, subventions, bounties, and so forth, and to what extent they are paid by foreign governments, and the laws relating thereto, and whether or not rings and pools exist, and to what extent, if at all, they are legalized under the laws of other countries. We are seeking to get all that information called for abroad through these means. The War and State Departments and the Departments of Justice and Commerce and Labor are cooperating with the committee in every possible way. Mr. MURDOCK.

Now, would the resolution be comprehensive enough to take in the making of a contract between foreign ship companies and railroads in the matter of transporting immigrants to this country and after their arrival in New York locating them in the West?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; it is broad enough for that.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman contemplate doing that thing?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; we have not that matter directly in mind.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that this resolution is broad enough to authorize an investigation of everything connected with the merchant marine since the memorable trip of Neah's Ark?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; I think that we would be barred by the statute of limitations; at least I hope so. I am very sure I have no disposition to go that far back. In fact, in view of the campaign pending, I enter upon the labor involved with very great reluctance anyhow.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL. Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 18661. An act to provide for an extension of time of payment of all unpaid payments due from homesteaders on the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, as provided for under an act of Congress approved June 21, 1906.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 2. An act supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes.

CONTINGENT FUND DISBURSEMENT.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] House knows perfectly well that where you put into the hands offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 469 (H. Rept. 531).

House resolution 469 (H. Rept. 531).

Resolved, That the sum of $4,000 shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by the committee appointed under the resolution of the House of Representatives adopted May 16, 1911, to make an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether there have occurred violations by the United States Steel Corporation, or other corporations or persons, of the antitrust act of July 2, 1890, and the acts supplementary thereto, the various interstate-commerce acts, and the acts relative to the national banking associations, etc.; and that all vouchers ordered by said committee shall be signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman tell us whether this will be the last installment of this continued story?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer except to say this, that unless it is necessary to ask for an additional appropriation or allowance it will be sufficient.

Mr. MANN. That is certainly a clear and frank statement. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-Iution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that it is getting pretty late.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there are two other resolutions that I hoped to bring up, but the gentleman from Illinois is anxious that we conclude at the present time, and he has notified me of the fact that there is not a quorum present and that the question would be raised. I therefore move that we do now adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 12, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

ALASKA RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. By direction of the Committee on Territories, I introduce a bill to provide for the construction and equipment of 1,000 miles of railroad in Alaska, and for other purposes, and I ask to have it read for the information of the Senate and then referred.

The bill (S. 6275) to provide for the construction and equipment of 1,000 miles of railroad in Alaska, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

A bill (S. 6275) to provide for the construction and equipment of 1,000 miles of railroad in Alaska, and for other purposes.

miles of railroad in Alaska, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, through the Alaska Railway Commission, herein provided for, to make examinations and surveys for and to locate, construct, and equip such line or lines of railroad and such appurtenances thereto as are necessary or convenient for the operation and maintenance of such line or lines of railroad as common carriers as will, in his judgment, open up Alaska and lead to the development of its mineral, agricultural, and other resources, and will make it possible to obtain a coal supply suitable for the Navy and other Government uses: Provided, That this act shall not authorize the construction, exclusive of sidings, switches, and turnouts, of more than 1,000 miles of railroad.

clusive of sidings, switches, and turnouts, or more than 1,000 miles or railroad.

SEC. 2. That to enable the President to carry this act into effect there is hereby created the Alaska Railway Commission, to be composed of five members, who shall, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be appointed by the President and shall be subject to his removal. One member of such commission shall be an officer of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, who shall be chief engineer and chairman of the commission.

SEC. 3. That the members of this commission, while actually engaged in the work of the commission, shall receive such compensation as shall be determined as just and equitable and as shall be fixed by the President, together with necessary traveling expenses and subsistence while going to and from and while engaged in the field service, and no more: Provided, That any person already in Government service, either appointed on or detailed to the commission, whose salary is fixed by law, may receive such additional compensation as may be just and equitable and as may be fixed by the President.

SEC. 4. That the President shall annually submit to Congress a report on the work of the Alaska Railway Commission, including a statement of expenditures, which shall contain a list of members of the commission and all technical employees thereof, together with their salaries.

SEC. 5. That the commission shall acquire, in the manner provided ment of expenditures, which shall contain a list of members of the commission and all technical employees thereof, together with their salaries.

Sec. 5. That the commission shall acquire, in the manner provided by the act of Congress approved May—, 1898, entitled "An act to extend the homestead law to Alaska, and for other purposes," in the name of the Alaska Commission, the rights of way for any designated line or lines of railway and for the necessary station or terminal grounds in connection therewith; and the commission is authorized to exercise the right of eminent domain and may sue and be sued in the name of the Alaska Railway Commission. The President may make reservation of such additional public lands for rights of way, stations, terminal grounds, or other purposes, as may be necessary for carrying out the work herein authorized.

Sec. 6. That where any line designated for construction connects with any existing line the commission, subject to the approval of the President, may acquire by purchase such existing line, with all its appurtenances, at its fair and reasonable value: Provided, That the commission may, in its discretion, subject to the approval of the President, acquire by lease instead of by purchase any existing line or lines, upon such terms and conditions and at such rentals as may be agreed upon by the company owning such line or lines and the commission, but the rental shall not in any case exceed 4 per cent per annum upon the reasonable value of each line: Provided further, That the commission shall not be bound to acquire any such existing line or lines by either purchase or lease, but may contract for running powers and hauling rights over such line or lines at such fair and reasonable rates as may be agreed upon by the company owning such line or lines as and the commission, and in case of disagreement as to the reasonableness of any rate for transportation, the same may be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Sec. 7. That any line of railroad designated and construc

SEC. S. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States, from time to time as the proceeds may be required to defray expenses on account of the line or lines of railroad herein authorized to be constructed or acquired, such sum or sums as may be sufficient therefor, and to prepare or issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $100, $500, and $1,000, payable 50 years from the date of issue and bearing interest, payable in gold coin, at a rate not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States as well as from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commission shall be allowed or paid thereon, and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of paid thereon, and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of a printed, out of any mone of bonds here an authorized is hereby apprehicated out of any mone of bonds here an authorized is hereby apprehication paid to pay the expenses of preparing, advertiying, and issuing the same.

SEC. 9. That the bonds authorized by this act shall be known and designated as "Alaska railway bonds," and shall be a first lien and charge against the line or lines in respect of whilch the proceeds shall have been expended and against the revenues and property of such line or lines of whatever kind or description, present or future, and the net revenue to be derived from the line or several lines shall be devoted to the payment of the interest upon the bonds and to the payment and retirement of the principal thereof as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 10. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not oftenwise appropria each mile operated," shall be, and both said clauses are, hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. That upon or prior to the completion of any line of railroad constructed hereunder the commission may, subject to the direction and approval of the Fresident, and upon tender, lease such line or lines for the operation thereof for a term not exceeding 50 years in such manner and on such terms as shall hereafter be provided by Congress.

SEC. 13. That the Alaska Railway Commission is hereby authorized, under the direction of the President, to perform any and all acts, including the employment of necessary technical, clerical, and laboring force, the rental of suitable quarters in Washington and elsewhere, the purchase of supplies, tools, and equipment that may be necessary and proper, for the purposes of carrying the provisions of this act into effect: Provided, That any tools, equipment, or other property belonging to the Government, used in constructing the Panama Canal or elsewhere, and no longer needed for such purpose, may be transferred to the commission for use in Alaska.

SEC. 14. That the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 3, 1908, entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," are hereby extended and made to apply to persons employed under the provisions of this act.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL (H. R. 21477).

Mr. CLAPP (for Mr. LA FOLLETTE) submitted an amendment relative to a survey of the mouth of the Siskiwit River on Lake Superior, and also for the improvement of Brule Harbor, Wis., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted an amendment relative to the improvement of Charlevoix Harbor, Mich., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the improvement of Gravs Reef Passage, off Waugoshance, in Lake Michigan, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the survey, for the purpose of charting only, of Crooked Lake, Burt Lake, and Mullett Lake, and their connecting waters, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ASHURST submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $250,000 to carry into effect the provisions of the sixth article of the treaty of June 8, 1868, between the United States and the Navajo Nation or Tribe of Indians, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 22043) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN LAWS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 282), which was read and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the manuscript of the laws, agreements, Executive orders, proclamations, etc., relating to Indian affairs, be printed as a Senate document.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. Guggenheim was, on his own motion, excused from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has asked in writing to be relieved from further service as one of the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads. Without objection the request of the junior Senator from Oregon is granted. The Chair appoints the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] to fill the vacancy.

THE POSTAL EXPRESS (S. DOC. NO. 557).

Mr. OWEN. I present a memorial relative to a postal express, which I ask to have printed as a Senate document and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator on what subject is the memorial?

Mr. OWEN. The memorial relates to a parcel-post express. It is short and explains the reason why merchants should not object to that system.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a memorial from some organization?

Mr. OWEN. It is a memorial by George P. Hampton, secretary of the Postal Express Federation. As I have stated, it is not a long memorial, and will be useful for the purpose I have named.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order to print will be entered, and the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM (S. DOC. NO. 556).

Mr. POMERENE. On March 20 there was ordered printed as a Senate document an address by ex-Senator Foraker, of Ohio, delivered before the Ohio Constitutional Convention, March 14, 1912. A few days later there was ordered printed an address by President Taft on the subject of the initiative and referendum, delivered before the General Court of the Legislature of Massachusetts, at Boston, March 18, 1912. I have a copy of a speech of Hon. Herbert S. Bigelow, delivered before the Ohio Constitutional Convention, March 27, 1912, on the same subject. I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order there-

for is entered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On April 5, 1912: S. 3686. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Coal Co. and the Eastern Coal & Mining Co. to exchange certain lands embraced within their existing coal leases in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for other lands within said nations. On April 8, 1912:

S. 2434. An act providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut.

On April 9, 1912:

S. 252. An act to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the Children's Bureau;

S. J. Res. 96. Joint resolution to amend an act entitled "An act appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippl approved April 3, 1912; and

S. 5718. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

On April 10, 1912:

S. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the Librarian of Congress to furnish a copy of the daily and bound Congress-SIONAL RECORD to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard.

OUORUM OF COMMITTEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former legislative day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 280) submitted by Mr. Clarke of Arkansas on the 9th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the several standing committees of the Senate having a membership of more than three Senators are hereby respectively authorized to fix, each for itself, the number of its members who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee; but in no case shall a committee, acting under authority of this resolution, fix as a quorum thereof any number less than one-third of its entire membership.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate. The pending question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curris] to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw my motion to refer the resolution and offer the amendment which I send to the desk, if amendments are now in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his motion to refer the resolution and offers an amendment to the resolution, which will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the resolution, after the word "membership," it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a comma, and to add "nor shall any report be made to the Senate that is not authorized by the concurrence of more than one-half of a majority of such entire membership."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I accept that amendment.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas accepts the amendment, which therefore becomes a part of the resolution. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to.

UNITED STATES v. AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I gave notice a day or two ago that at this time I would ask the Senate to consider Senate bill (S. 3607) to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to certain organizations or persons in the suit of the United States v. American Tobacco Co. and The Army appropriation bill is now in course of consideration and disposal, and I have no inclination to interpose the bill to which I have referred as against the further progress of the Army appropriation bill. Therefore, being informed that it will probably take all day to finish the Army bill, I renew my notice for to-morrow morning at the same time.

Mr. DU PONT obtained the floor. Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DU PONT. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

STANDARD OIL AND AMERICAN TOBACCO COS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the other day I gave notice that I desired to address the Senate on the subject of Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co. As we were not able to complete the consideration of the military appropriation bill on yesterday, and it is the desire of the committee to complete that consideration to-day, I shall defer my proposed address until after the address of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to-morrow.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DU PONT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18956) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, after thanking the Senators from Iowa and Ohio for their courtesy in this matter, I will proceed to answer, as promised, the suggestions of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] in regard to the hiring of horses for the use of militia in the different States. I will say to him that I have looked up the question and find that authority for hiring such horses now exists under section 12 of the Regulations of the Organized Militia, adopted in 1909. An examination of this section and of section 13 will disclose the fact that horses may now be hired for the use of the organized field batteries of the militia with the sanction of the Secretary of War.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment, on page 25.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to withdraw my suggestion of an amendment providing for the hiring of horses for the Artillery. find that in 1909, becoming operative in July, 1910, a provision was made authorizing the department to expend the money set aside to the States for this purpose. That occurred after I was governor of my State, and I did not know of that legislation until my attention was called to it by the chairman of the committee. That provision is ample; so I withdraw the amendment which I offered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia withdraws the amendment offered by him. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WAR-REN] to the amendment of the committee, which the Secretary

The Secretary. On page 25, after the word "dollars," in line 25, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting the following proviso:

Provided, That the foregoing appropriation and any other appropriations heretofore made for that purpose shall remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1914.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and, without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Subsistence Department," in the item of appropriation for the purchase of subsistence supplies, on page 28, line 25, after the words "in all," to strike out "$8,605,273" and insert "$8,988,867.42," and in line 6, after the word "fund," to insert "Provided, That hereafter the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 30, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 763), shall not be construed to apply to the Subsistence Department," so as to read:

Mr. BACON. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Delaware, or some other member of the committee. I am now referring to the paragraph we have just passed before reaching this. I want to inquire when was the term "Organized Militia first introduced into an appropriation bill? It used to be the "National Guard."

Mr. DU PONT. In reply to the Senator from Georgia, I will say that that term is to be found in what is known as the Dick law—the legislation of 1901, as I remember it. The act designates that portion of the militia as the Organized Militia or the National Guard, so that they are synonymous in the terms

Mr. BACON. In that act it is so denominated—"Organized Militia" or "National Guard"?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes; or National Guard. Mr. BACON. I recollect that very well. That bill was afterwards amended, I think in 1903 or 1904.

Mr. DU PONT. In 1903, I think.

Mr. BACON. And that designation or denomination was still maintained?

Mr. DU PONT. Yes. Mr. BACON. Now, the inquiry I make of the Senator is this: I notice in the present bill, and I find it is also the case in the bill of last year-

Mr. DU PONT. Yes.

Mr. BACON. The term is not used in the alternative, but the term "National Guard" has been dropped entirely and only the words "Organized Militia" are used. I want to ask the Senator what time that innovation was first recognized, or when was it that that designation was first adopted?

Mr. DU PONT. I am not able to answer as to the precise time, but I bave always been under the impression that the words "National Guard" were dropped in the interest of brevity.

In the interest of what? Mr. DU PONT. In the interest of brevity.

Mr. BACON. Brevity?

Mr. DU PONT. And that it has become gradually the practice to use it in various acts with reference to regulations, and Mr. BACON. I am waiting for the Senator from Delaware to finish.

Mr. DU PONT. I am through. I think it is a great mistake to make that change.

Mr. BACON. In the Dick bill the words "Organized Militia" were used more as words of description. The words "National Guard" have become thoroughly identified with what we know as the volunteer organizations throughout the United States. They are everywhere called the National Guard.

Mr. DU PONT. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me, I take issue with him on the statement that it is synonymous with the term "volunteer organization." The Volunteers are a different organization entirely. The National Guard is purely and simply a militia organization.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Delaware will complete what he has to say, so that when I start I may make my statement with continuity.

Mr. DU PONT. I have nothing to say at the present time. I merely wish to explain, as the matter is being discussed, the difference between the Militia and the Volunteers. It seemed to me there was confusion in the mind of the Senator from Georgia in regard to those two classes.

Mr. BACON. I do not think the Senator is entirely correct in what he says. By "volunteer organizations" I mean organizations which are to be found in all the several States, in which citizens voluntarily associate themselves in military organizations. The Senator has confused in his mind that term with the Federal Volunteers which we have provided for in the act of 1899, I think, with the view of raising the troops that went to the Philippines. But the Federal Volunteer troops are altogether different from the volunteer troops in the dif-

In my part of the country it was a good while before the term "National Guard" was adopted. It was universal in the Northern States long before it was adopted in the Southern States. In the Southern States-certainly in my State, and I think in others—those organizations were called volunteers; but, recognizing the fact that the term "National Guard" was one that was attractive and dignified, and which was universally true of all the country, except, perhaps, in our particular section, these volunteer associations dropped the name by which they had previously been known and adopted the name of the "National Guard."

When I say that the National Guard was a volunteer organization, I do not mean that the name "volunteer" was the technical name of those organizations. I simply meant that they were organizations which were brought into existence by the voluntary action of the members who composed it. As is suggested to me by the Senator from Alabama, in some places they were called State troops.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. I think possibly I may explain to the Senator from Georgia the use of this term. When the Dick bill was passed, there were certain conditions that the State had to comply with before it could get the benefit of the provisions of that law. I recall that the General Assembly of Virginia passed a law authorizing the governor to accept the provisions of the Dick bill and to have the troops organized under it. Then there was a distinction between the organizations that accepted its provisions and obtained supplies from the Federal Government and those who did not.

I presume from that time on, so as to designate the people who were entitled to the provisions and conditions given by the Federal Government, the term "Organized Militia" was used, meaning those who had organized and accepted the provisions of the Dick bill and consequently were designated as specific volunteers who were entitled to the provisions of the act. I suppose that is the way the term appears in the appropriation bill, because most of the States accepted the provisions and became organizations so as to get the benefits of the Dick bill.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President-The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. ROOT. I think if either of these terms were to be omitted, the one to be retained should be "the Organized Militia," following the course of legislative definition which we began with in the act known as the Dick bill. That bill, passed January 21, 1903, provided-

That the regularly enlisted, organized, and uniformed active militia in the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, who have heretofore participated or shall hereafter participate in the apportionment of the annual appropriation provided by section 1661 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended, whether known and designated as National Guard, militia, or otherwise, shall constitute the Organized Militia.

So the term "Organized Militia" is the statutory term for all of the State organizations, under whatever name, that par-ticipated in the apportionment of the annual appropriation. I understand it to be the fact that all these State organizations have participated in that appropriation and in the successive appropriations. So by their own act in coming in and participating in the provision made by Congress they have become what the law declares to be the Organized Militia, and are subject to the provisions of law in respect of their organization and discipline under the Constitution, and are entitled to the provision made by our National Government for their support.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am very much obliged both to the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from New York for the suggestions which they make. I do not think, however, that they have allowed me to express myself sufficiently to enable them to catch the exact point or reason for the inquiry which I made of the Senator from Delaware. There is a very distinguished author who put in the mouth of one of his characters an inquiry which is very often repeated, and that is, "What's in a name?" The name "National Guard" is one which has been used by these organizations for 40 years. one which they use to-day. It is one that they are fond of and which they prize, and if you will examine their publications you will find that they always speak of themselves as the National Guard.

I am not making the interruption for the purpose of contending that there is no warrant in law for the use of the term "Organized Militia." I was simply desiring to suggest, in the interest of these organizations, that it would be better that the law should designate them as they designate themselves and give them a name that they themselves desire to have given

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BACON. I do. Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I have not the slightest objection to have the term "National Guard" incorporated here on page 59, line 18.

Mr. BACON. I would be perfectly willing to say "Organized Militia known as National Guard." I am sure that they do not want to be called militia.

Mr. DU PONT. I would prefer to use the term of the Dick bill, and say "or National Guard."

Mr. BACON. Very well, I am perfectly willing to have that done. The exclusion of it practically denies to them the name and it is the name by which their organizations are known generally. Their effects are greatly in that converting their effects are greatly to the convertion. Their officers are spoken of in that connection; they have publications in which they use that name altogether, and have publications in which they use that name altogether, and I think it is a name which should be preserved. That was the sole purpose of my interruption.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I should like to say one word more in reference to what the Senator from Georgia has just said on the subject of volunteers. I appreciate that every member of the National Guard, the Organized Militia, is a volunteer in the sense that he voluntarily engages himself in the National Guard. So is the regular saldier a volunteer in the National Guard. So is the regular soldier a volunteer in that sense; he is one who voluntarily engages in the Regular Army. But the technical term "volunteer" applies to another class of

I move that the words "or National Guard" be inserted.

Mr. DU PONT. Very well.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 59, after line 15, before the words "Organized Militia," insert the words "National Guard or," and insert the same words in line 18, so as to read:

Ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard or Organized Militia: For procuring reserve ammunition for field artillery for the National Guard or Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, $500,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.
The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 59, after line 20, to strike out the remainder of the bill in the following words:

Sec. 8. That the appropriations herein provided for the several departments consolidated under this act shall

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the sections of the Army bill, from and including section 2, which are known as the legislative sections of the bill, have been stricken out, as the committee does not believe that important and radical legislation of this kind should be included in an appropriation bill, but should be discussed on its own merits as an independent measure as soon as the proposed plan of reorganization is received from the War Department.

Section 2 provides for lengthening the term of enlistment from three to five years; section 3 cuts off the increase of pay for foreign service; section 4 consolidates the Quartermaster, Subsistence, and Pay Departments of the Army into one corps, and makes the chief of such corps a major general; section 5 provides for a service corps of enlisted men to take the place, sooner or later, of civilians now employed in the three departments named; section 6 consolidates The Adjutant General's Department, the Inspector General's Department, and the General Staff Corps into a bureau of the General Staff, thus fundamentally changing the duties of the General Staff Corps into that of an administrative bureau; section 7 reduces the number of general officers and the pay of all graduates of the Military Academy who have had less than 20 years' service under their commissions.

The subjects covered by these provisions directly affect the efficiency of the Army, and can not receive the careful consideration which their importance demands when included in the provisions of an appropriation bill. It is true the House Committee on Military Affairs gave considerable time to the consideration of the subjects involved, and your committee has heard thereon the Secretary of War, the Chief of Staff, Gen. Wood, and the Assistant Chief of Staff, Gen. Carter.

The consensus of opinion of the military authorities is that it is inadvisable at this time to attempt a partial reorganization of the Army. The entire subject of reorganization has been under prolonged investigation by the General Staff Corps, which corps was created by law for the purpose, among other duties, of studying and advising upon such subjects. The subject of reorganization is so vitally connected with the success of our arms and covers so wide a range that it has required a long time for consideration; and while the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff have assured your committee that the report will be ready during the present session, it is believed to be the part of wisdom not to hurry so important a measure. Until fully matured by the military authorities of the War Department and by the Military Committees of the two Houses of Congress the time required for its full discussion should not be hastened by the urgency of an appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the portion of the bill which has been stricken from it. If I approved every line of it I should still be very glad that the committee had stricken it out, and I trust the committee will be fully sustained by the Senate.

The power to originate bills for raising revenue belongs to the House alone. There is no provision in the Constitution that gives to the House or to the Senate the sole power of originating appropriation bills. There is, in my opinion, nothing in the Constitution that can be twisted into any such limitaton. a week passes that we do not originate appropriation bills in the Senate. We originate them on claims, we originate them on public buildings, we continually originate them, and it is never questioned. There is no distinction in the Constitution between a general supply bill and a special appropriation for a specific object. But by long practice and, I think, very wise practice, general supply bills originate in the House, and that power is conceded to the House and has been conceded to it by the Senate. I think it is a proper arrangement. I think the great bills of supply should originate in the popular branch.

But, Mr. President, as it rests upon concession and practice it is a power that should be all the more carefully exercised. Both Houses have been extremely careful in their rules to prevent the attachment of legislative provisions to appropriation bills. The House has been far stricter than the Senate in that respect. The House rule provides that no amendment involving a change of existing law shall be in order, and that is a very stringent provision. In the Senate the point of order lies against anything that is new legislation, but both are directed to the same purpose, which is to prevent making the great appropriation bills the vehicle of general legislation.

I am well aware from long experience here that general legislation is at times attached to appropriation bills. Nobody considers it a good practice. But it has been very limited. It has been done in cases of emergency. It has been done in small matters where a point of order might lie, but where it would be only a technical objection. For many years the House in conference has enforced this principle with the utmost strictness. I have known case after case where the House had no objection to the amendment made by the Senate, but refused to admit it in conference, simply and solely because it was legislation.

The principle which underlies that practice and that rule is a sound one. If the great appropriation bills which must pass in order to carry on the Government are to be made the vehicle of legislation we put a pressure and a compulsion on either one of the Houses or on the Executive, which it is most improper to put.

In this particular case, Mr. President, an entire statute has been ingrafted upon this appropriation bill. It is not an emer-There is no demand for it. There is no great evil to be cured. It may be desirable to pass a statute reorganizing the Army, but it should come up as separate legislation. The rules of the House were set aside in order to do it, and we are now called upon to take the bill with this entire statute ap-The compulsion is obvious that if we do not take the bill with the statute appended the supply for the Army may

Mr. President, I for one had much rather see the supply bill for the Army fail for the time being than have the Senate yield in any respect to compulsion of this sort, which would curtail its constitutional powers and put it in a position which it ought never to occupy.

It is even stronger in the case of the Executive. To undertake to place upon the Executive the alternative of vetoing a supply bill, a great appropriation bill, or of accepting a statute which he may not approve is a position in which the Executive ought never to be placed. If I were the Executive under such circumstances I never would assent to a statute presented to me in

I think, Mr. President, in the interest of proper legislation and for the maintenance of the different powers of the several branches of the Government the Senate ought to refuse to accept statutes presented to them in this way on supply bills.

There is no question of the propriety of the general principle that the great appropriation bills should not carry legislation. No departure from it is a good thing, and such a departure as this is a very bad thing. I think it ought to be stopped at its inception, and I trust that the Senate, without any regard to whether this is a good measure or not—I care not whether I should approve every line in it-will make it perfectly clear that it can not submit to have general legislation of the most sweeping kind presented to it in this manner, with the threat of the failure of the supply bill hanging over them unless they accept the statute which is appended to it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, my only purpose in rising at this time to make a reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] is the impression he has expressed in regard to these provisions being contrary to the rules of the House. The chairman of the committee who prepared the bill is from my State. I wish to say in justification of him and in justification of the House of Representatives that the bill was prepared entirely in accordance with the rules of the House.

Mr. LODGE. Let me ask the Senator, was not the rule modified for that purpose?

Mr. SWANSON. It was not. Under the Democratic control of the House, since the time of Mr. Holman, of Indiana, there has been a rule in the House that legislation can be put on appropriation bills provided it reduces the expenditures of the Government That is the present rule of the other House, as I understand it.

Mr. LODGE. That may be the rule of the House at this session, but the rule of the House with which I was familiar was that an amendment to raise an appropriation was out of order while an amendment to lower an appropriation was in

Mr. SHIVELY. That is the rule now.
Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is entirely correct as to the practice when he was in the House.

Mr. LODGE. But, Mr. President, that never carried with it any obstacle to a point of order that an amendment was a change of existing law.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, when I was a Member of the other House, which was Democratic, we had there what was known as the Holman rule, which rule provided that there might be legislation on an appropriation bill provided it reduced expenditures. That rule continued until the Republican Party came into control of the House of Representatives, when it was abolished.

As I understand, when the present House of Representatives adopted its rules, it made as a part of its rules and procedure the old rule known as the Holman rule, which provides that an amendment, though it changes existing law, is in order provided it reduces expenditures. That being the rule of the House of Representatives, the pending bill was prepared in accordance with that rule. These amendments would not have been in order unless they had resulted in decreased expenditures on the part of the Federal Government. I understand that all of the provisions of the bill that change existing law are of that character, and would result in a saving of expenditure by the Government. For the Senate to declare, as the Senator from Massachusetts would suggest, that that rule is contrary to the idea of the Senate, that propositions reducing expenditures, if put on appropriation bills, will not be considered by the Senate, seems to me to be a method of procedure that would not be wise on the part of the Senate.

The House of Representatives presents propositions on this appropriation bill carrying reduced expenditures—propositions for economy; they are presented to the judgment of the Senate; they are in order under the rules of the other House; they come here properly, and, it seems to me, they should be considered on their merits; and not by any system adopted in the Senate should we say they will not be considered under any circumstances.

Mr. President, with the vast expenditures of the Federal Government, with the great outflow of money from the Treasury every year, it seems to me it would be very wise for the Senate to adopt as a rule that any amendment that would reduce expenditures should be in order and be considered on its merits. Most of the reforms in legislation in Congress that have resulted in saving money to this Government have been under the operation of that rule. I should be glad to see the Senate adopt a rule permitting amendments to existing law to be attached to an appropriation bill, provided they would result in reduced expenditures. The advantage that would accrue from that is that it would give a government as efficient, a government as good, with less money; and unless a proposition results in a decrease of expenditure, it is not in order. But if we can run this Government more economically, as efficiently, and the proposition can be presented at the time the money is being appropriated out of the Treasury, it seems to me that such a rule is wise, and that such legislation should be fairly and justly considered on its merits by the Senate and also by the other branch of Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I referred to the rules of the two bodies as indicating what I believe they do indicate and have always indicated—the intention of both Houses not to make the general appropriation bills the vehicles of general leg-The fact that the other House has changed the rule does not in the least touch my point. It makes no difference, so far as the principle is concerned, whether the legislationas it could, with some slight technical phrase-reduces an appropriation or whether it increases it or whether it leaves it as it is. The vice of the system is putting general legislation on an appropriation bill, where such legislation does not pass by its own merits, is not intended to pass on its own merits, but is to be driven forward and driven through on the theory that we have got to have the appropriation bill passed in order to carry on the Government. That principle I believe an unsound principle. I do not think it ought to be followed if it can possibly be avoided.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to make a suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly I will yield to the Senator.
Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Suppose that the provisions in this bill, or those in any other appropriation bill sent to us from the other House, should be against their rules, how can we correct them?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, their rules, Mr. President, are of no importance in this connection. I am speaking about a principle. referred to the rules merely as illustrating the attitude of the Houses, that is all.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Each House is the judge of its own rules

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; absolutely. I did not intend to make any reflection at all in regard to the operation of the I spoke of the practice of the other House as it was when I was a Member of that House, which is now a great many years ago, when, certainly, new legislation could not be put on an appropriation bill even if it reduced expenditures. I merely used it as illustrating the attitude of the Houses toward appropriation bills, which I believe to be a sound attitude.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator. Mr. SHIVELY. I think if the Senator from Massachusetts will reflect he will recall that in his service in the other House the Holman rule was in force at least a part of the time. The Holman rule, of course, was a distinct exception to that general body of rules which the House has. The doctrine of the rule was that legislation the tendency of which was to reduce expenditures was salutary even on a general appropriation bill, was entitled to be considered on its merits, and it was protected by the rule for that reason.

Mr. LODGE. I may be wrong about it. My remembrance was that that applied only to the amount of the appropriation, that it was not in order to move an increase in an appropriation, but it was in order to move a decrease in an appropriation. I did not recall that it went to the extent of authorizing new legislation.

Mr. SHIVELY. It very frequently happened, under the operation of that rule, that where the general statute prescribed the amount of a given salary, in the appropriation bill itself the salary was reduced. There were hundreds of such cases.

Mr. LODGE. I have no doubt that the Senator from Indiana is correct, and that the rule permitted new legislation, but the practice in the House of late years has certainly been to prevent any new legislation on appropriation bills under any circumstances.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is true. I think it was about the Fifty-third Congress that the rule was changed. While the rule has been changed and the practice has been changed in that respect, what followed, the increase of expenditures and all that, does not mean that the change of the rule was a salutary change.

Mr. LODGE. That may or may not be. I used it, as I repeat, merely as an illustration of the attitude of the two Houses, which is against new legislation being added to an appropria-tion bill. Of course, it is perfectly easy to put on any amount of legislation and make some little change in it that will reduce an appropriation; but I do not believe it is good practice, that it is fair to the Senate, or fair to the Executive-and I think that has been the general opinion in both branches—to put on an appropriation bill general legislation. I think the general principle on which we have always acted has been that general legislation must be considered on its merits, and wholly apart from an appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator please wait a moment, until the committee amendments have all been offered?

Mr. LEA. I thought they had been offered.

Mr. WARREN. I have two slight amendments which I ask leave to offer on behalf of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask to turn back to page 7 and insert the amendment which I send to the desk. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 7, line 14, in the amendment of the committee heretofore adopted, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "two." The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I also ask leave to offer an amendment on the same page, a little lower down, to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 7, in line 20, in the amendment of the committee heretofore adopted, after the word "Affairs," is proposed to insert "and the Board of Road Commissioners for Alaska."

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I should like to inquire— Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow the Secretary to read the remainder of the amendment, which is practically only one more word?

Mr. BRISTOW. Very well. The Secretary. And in the same line, before the words "of Congress," it is proposed to strike out "act" and insert "acts."

Mr. BRISTOW. I want to inquire in regard to substituting the word "two" for the word "three," in line 14, on page 7. I understood that the committee considered the matter and decided that "three" was the desirable number.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is right. It did, but afterwards-I had forgotten that the Senator was one of the proponents of the proposition—it was thought that it would make the assignments irregular. They should be in even years, two and four years; and to put it in that form-three years-would be to make it clash and out of harmony with all the other regulations regarding the matter.

Mr. BRISTOW. Could it not just as well be made four years instead of three?

Mr. WARREN. It could be made four years, but is it good policy to send back to his command for four years an expert in the Quartermaster's Department or the Ordnance Department or any other department when two years would practically answer all purposes?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I rise to a question of order, The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. I understand these amendments are offered to the amendment on page 7, which has already been agreed to by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. Literally speaking, the amendment can only be amended in the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. I understood that very well, but I thought I asked consent to offer the amendment. If there is any objection, of course Mr. LODGE. I

I did not know unanimous consent was asked. The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was not asked. The Chair did not so understand. If the Senator from Massachusetts raises the point of order, the Chair sustains it, and the amendment can not now be considered.

Mr. LODGE. I know that it can be done by unanimous consent, of course, but the President ruled on yesterday—and perfeetly correctly, of course—that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] could not offer an amendment to this amendment which had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. At that time.

Mr. LODGE. And that he could offer it only in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LODGE. And I think if that rule is applied to the Senator from Mississippi, it ought to be applied to everyone else.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming asks no exceptions. Often, in making a request, I "ask" to do so-and-so, but neglect to ask, in plainly spoken words, as I ought to, unanimous consent. It was my intention to do so in this instance; but, not having done so, the Chair, of course, will rule that the amendment is out of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has so ruled, and the amendment can only be considered when the bill shall have been reported to the Senate, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRISTOW. Referring to the amendment—
Mr. WARREN. It has been ruled out of order.
Mr. BRISTOW. I want to make a few remarks about both of the amendments while I am on my feet. Referring to the amendment to substitute the word "two" for the word "three," in line 14, I am advised by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Root] that, in his opinion, it would be very unwise to make the period three years because of its relation to other matters in the military establishment. Only having been a member of the committee for a short time, of course, in a matter of that kind I would accept his judgment,

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. I may say on the subject that the question of staff service, of detail service in relation to service with troops, was very fully discussed and considered and testimony taken upon it 10 years ago, at the time when we were changing from the old system of a permanent administrative Staff Corps, permanent quartermasters and commissaries, and so on, to the detail system. At the time when the question of staff details was considered the conclusion was reached very deliberately that it would be wise to provide that after a four years' detail in one of these departments the officer should be required to go back to his regiment for two years, and that is now embodied in the statutes which regulate those details. I think it would be a misfortune to make a change here that would involve very great confusion in construing different statutes and different rules, and it would be a misfortune to cut down the length of the possible detail from four years to three.

We have broken up the system of having permanent staff officers, who acquired special information and facility in the kind of work which has to be done under detail, and four years is a short enough time for a man to become familiar with that kind of work and render the best service. If the period were cut down below that, I think we would suffer seriously in losing the very best part of the service of the officers who are detailed, while requiring them to go back and serve two years with troops serves to keep administrative staff officers in touch with the military establishment. I think it would be a misfortune to change the rule. It certainly should not be done without a careful revision of existing statutes, which now prescribe a

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me-

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly. Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will say that the amendment was inserted by the committee at my instance, as he will remember. The object was to prevent officers remaining constantly about Washington and to effect a change in that particular. Since the committee adopted that provision, however, I have become convinced that it will not do to leave it in the shape it is now in view of the existing statutes concerning other departments of the Army, so that I am perfectly content with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, of course on matters of that kind I would not stand out against the opinion of the Senator from New York [Mr. Root], who himself has been Secretary of War and is very familiar with these matters, and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Johnston], who has had far larger experience than have I; but, referring to the other amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I understand that it was considered by the committee and that the committee re-fused to accept it. I am somewhat surprised, therefore, that the Senator should offer that amendment here, because I understood that he accepted the action of the committee as wise.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say, in that regard, that it was put in originally, and then, as the Senator knows, was stricken out because it was not considered necessary. We misunderstood the situation; but afterwards, when we understood that the provision, if it affected the Alaska road commissioners, would disarrange the work going on there, we thought it best to restore it as it was.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, it has not been considered by the committee since, I am sure, for I have been present at every meeting the committee has had.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will understand that in matters of this kind that come up quickly while an appropriation bill is being considered it is usual to consult the proponents of the proposition or its objectors, as, for instance, in the case of the Senator from Alabama, who proposed the three-year requirement, which was subsequently changed to four with his consent; but if the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Bristow] objects to the Alaska amendment, I will not offer it. It has already been ruled out of order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think—
Mr. WARREN. I think it would be unfortunate, but we will let the matter go. I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. BRISTOW. I regret to disagree with the Senator from Wyoming, but I think it will be fortunate, instead of unfortunate, if that exception is not made.

Mr. DU PONT, I now offer individually the following amendment, to which I hope there will be no objection. The Intent of this amendment is to protect the tomb and last resting place of George Washington from any desecration, and it is needless to say that it is a subject in which a vast number of people all over the country have a very deep and abiding interest. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 59, after line 20, insert:

The Secretarry. On page 59, after line 20, insert:

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $33,000 to reimburse the government of the District of Columbia, which site is hereby transferred to the Secretary of War for such purposes as may be authorized by law, and the jurisdiction now vested in the Commissioners of the District of Columbia over said site, being that certain parcel of land in the county of Fairfax, State of Virginia, known as "Belvoir" or the "White House" tract, containing 1,500 acres, is hereby transferred to the Secretary of War : Provided. That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to use such of the clay deposits on said site as may be required in the brick manufacturing plant in the workhouse institution at Occoquan, Va.: And provided further, That the sum herein appropriated is hereby made available for the purposes contained in the District appropriation act approved March 31, 1909, under the title of "Sites for reformatory and workhouse," as amended by the provision contained in the urgent deficiency act approved August 5, 1909; and the provision contained in the urgent deficiency act approved March 31, 1909, that the two tracts of land to be acquired as sites for a reformatory and workhouse shall be widely separated, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Delaware if

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Delaware if the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have been consulted in reference to this amendment?

Mr. DU PONT. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that they have been consulted, and they transmitted this draft of the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that be so, I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LEA. I now ask action upon the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 17, line 3, after the word "dollars," insert the following proviso:

Provided. That hereafter in the computation of longevity pay the time served on active detail by retired Army officers shall be added to the service rendered by said officers prior to retirement for the computation of the pay to which they shall be entitled.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I should have no objection to legislation of that kind offered as a separate measure, with an opportunity to compare it with existing legislation, and also to first submit it to the department for report. Of course, the amendment is clearly out of order.

Mr. LEA. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me for a

Mr. WARREN. I yield, and will probably make the point of order later. However, I take pleasure in yielding to the Senator from Tennessee for anything he wishes to say.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, I think the amendment is approved by the War Department. I have not myself submitted it to the department, but I am informed it is approved by them. It merely restores the status which obtained before the amendment of 1903. It affects about 20 officers on the retired list, none of them above the rank of major, and merely makes an equality between men who have been placed on the retired list and who are now on active duty.

Mr. WARREN. This subject is one that has had a great deal of consideration—the matter of retired officers called into active service—and I would prefer that we should have time to consider the proposed measure in direct comparison with the legislation we have.

The amendment is not estimated for; it has not the indorsement of any standing committee; it has not been offered and printed and sent a day in advance to the committee in charge of the pending appropriation bill; it increases expenditures, and it is legislation, and I therefore make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk to be inserted on page 57, line 16.

The Secretary. On page 57, after the word "dollars," in line 16, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase or manufacture of such ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops as can be manufactured at Government arsenals from or by any person, firm, or corporation which has not, at the time of commencement and during the prosecution of the work of said ordnance stores, established an eight-hour workday for all employees, laborers and mechanics, engaged or to be engaged in the work on the ordnance stores named herein.

Mr. DU PONT. I make the point of order that the amendment is in contravention of Rule XVI of the Senate. There is no estimate for it, and it has not been to any committee.

Mr. JONES. It is simply a limitation on the appropriation, Mr. President.

Mr. DU PONT. The rule of the Senate to which I refer is that prohibiting general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is general legislation.

Mr. DU PONT. It has not been approved by the department, nor has it come before the committee or been considered there.

Mr. LODGE. It is general legislation. Mr. DU PONT. General legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Section 1 of the rule to which the Senator refers reads:

Unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

The Chair would like to inquire whether this amendment is moved by direction of a standing committee.

Mr. JONES. No; it is not, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Chair thinks on that ground the amendment is not in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES. I desire to offer a similar amendment to be inserted after the word "dollars" in line 12, on page 58.

Mr. DU PONT. I make a similar point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the amendment and situation identical with the other one?

entical with the other.

Mr. JONES. Substantially so.

Mr. JONES. Substantially so.

WIGE PRESIDENT. The ruling will be the same, then. 4, page 59.

Mr. DU PONT. I make a similar point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And the ruling will be the same, assuming it is a similar amendment and the situation is the

Mr. WORKS. -I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 38, line 17, after the words "Fort Leavenworth, Kans.," insert:

For the construction of a general administration building at Fort Mason, San Francisco, Cal., to provide office accommodation for division headquarters, $200,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DU PONT. I object. Mr. BACON. I wish to offer an amendment that I hope the committee will accept.

Mr. DU PONT. I had no opportunity to object to the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware object to the amendment?

Mr. DU PONT. I object to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

Mr. DU PONT. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not press the point of order until I can say a word in respect to it. Mr. DU PONT. I withhold the point of order, with great

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the amendment that I offer is, as I think, a matter of economy. The proposed amendment relates to that portion of the bill providing for the expenses of barracks and quarters. The amendment is intended to supply a permanent building for that purpose instead of renting quarters. At the last session of Congress I introduced a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon the Secretary of War to furnish an itemized statement of the amounts that were being expended by the Government in renting offices and other places for officers and employees of the department not upon Government-owned land. The Secretary of War made his report with respect to that matter, and it shows, amongst other things, that in the city of San Francisco the Government is paying as rental for offices for the division headquarters the sum of $19,560, and for offices and storehouses, Quartermaster's and Medical Departments, $18,000. It also shows that numerous other buildings and offices are rented by the Government for that purpose.

The report also shows, in explanation of the amount that is being paid for those purposes, as follows:

This office has made repeated efforts to secure an appropriation of $200,000 for the construction of a general administration building at Fort Mason, to provide office accommodation for division headquarters—which covers the offices that are now rented in the Chronicle Building in that city. It would enable the Government to house the numerous other officers and employees of the department and save an immense amount of money that is being paid out

I call attention to the summary contained in this report, showing the amount of money that the Government is now paying out for this purpose, which, I think, should be seriously considered. It shows that-

Making a total paid for rent for these purposes____ 395, 666. 10

Now, so far as San Francisco is concerned, there is no excuse for the expenditure of money for any such purpose. Fort Mason and the Presidio are both close to the business portions of the city, and the Government might, with the expenditure of a very small sum of money, provide quarters for the officers and save this immense amount of money which is being paid for This report, submitted in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate, is somewhat long, and I should not like to take up the time of the Senate in reading it or having it read, but I ask that it may be included in my remarks and printed in the RECORD without reading. It contains, I think, quite valuable information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 123, Sixty-second Congress, second session.] ARMY QUARTERS RENTED IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting information in response to Senate resolution of July 28, 1911, relative to buildings and offices rented for the use of the War Department in the city of San Francisco:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 4, 1911.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

The President of the Senate.

Sir: In response to Senate resolution dated July 28, 1911, directing the Secretary of War—

"to inform the Senate what buildings, rooms, dwelling houses, and offices are rented, leased, or otherwise acquired in the city of San Francisco, Cal., for the use of the Army or War Department, the amount paid for each, for what purpose the same and each of them are used, and also to inform the Senate what provision is made by the Government or the War Department for residences, offices, and all other uses, for the officers of the Army and other persons employed in the Army and the War Department, in or on the Presidio, or other Government-owned property in or near said city of San Francisco, and if homes and offices and other facilities for the use of such officers and employees on or in said Government-owned property are not provided, why the same have not been so provided.

"Also to inform the Senate whether dwelling houses, rooms, offices, or other places are being rented or leased in any other city or cities in this country for the use of such officers or employees; and if so, what properties are so rented or leased, the price paid for each, and for what each is used.

"Also to inform the Senate what is the total sum per annum now being paid by the Government for rented or leased property for the use of Army officers and employees of the Army and War Department"—

I have the honor to transmit herewith reports of the several bureaus and offices of the department furnishing the desired information.

Very respectfully,

H. L. Stimson,

H. L. STIMSON Secretary of War.

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, August 15, 1911.

To the SECRETARY OF WAR.

OFFICE OF THE QUARTERNASTER GENERAL,

Sir: I have the honor to return herewith resolution of the Senate of the United States dated July 28, 1911, directing the Secretary of War to furnish to the Senate the following information:

1. What huildings, rooms, dwelling houses, and offices are rented, leased, or otherwise acquired in the city of San Francisco, Cal., for the use of the Army or War Department, the amount paid for each, for what purpose the same and each of them are used.

2. What provision is made by the Government or the War Department for residences, offices, and all other uses, for the officers of the Army and other persons employed in the Army and the War Department, in or on the Presidio, or other Government-owned property in or near said city of San Francisco, and if homes and offices and other facilities for the use of such officers and employees on or in said Government-owned property are not provided, why the same have not been so provided.

3. Whether dwelling houses, rooms, offices, or other places are being rented or leased in any other city or cities in this country for the use of such officers or employees; and if so, what properties are so rented or leased, the price paid for each, and for what each is used.

4. What is the total sum per annum now being paid by the Government for rented or leased property for the use of Army officers and employees of the Army and War Department.

In reply to the foregoing questions I have the honor to submit the following:

(A) Statement showing what buildings, rooms, dwelling houses, and offices are rented or leased in the city of San Francisco, Cal., for use of the Army, the amount paid for each, its location and the purpose for which each is used, the total yearly cost of which is $72,622.20.

(B) Memorandum showing what provision is made by the Government for residences, offices, and all other uses for officers of the Army and other persons employed in the Army, in or on Government-owned property in or near the city of San Francisco, Cal., and the re

In regard to the subject of rented buildings in San Francisco, attention is invited to the fact that for the last three years this office has made repeated efforts to secure an appropriation of $200,000 for the construction of a general administration building at Fort Mason, to provide office accommodation for division headquarters. Should this building be provided it will save approximately $20,000 per annum.

Two storehouses are now in progress of construction at the Army supply depot at Fort Mason, and two others are contemplated and will be constructed if the funds asked for in the estimates to Congress for the fiscal year 1913 are allowed. This will entirely do away with the rental of the Fontana warehouse, and offices and storehouses for the Subsistence Department, making a total approximate saving of $24,000 per annum.

The status of Fort Mason as a post for mobile troops is not definitely understood in this office, but it is thought that the battalion headquarters and company of Infantry now there will ultimately be removed, and that the quarters there will be utilized for the staff of the commanding general.

The transport wharves at the Army supply depot at Fort Mason are practically completed, and will be occupied in a short time. This will render the lease of Folsom Street wharf no longer necessary, and result in a saving of $18,000 per annum.

No buildings or rooms are rented or leased for use as quarters for civilian employees of the Army employed in San Francisco or on Government property in the vicinity thereof, there being no appropriation of the Quartermaster's Department available for that purpose. Respectfully,

J. B. ALESHIRE, Quartermaster General, United States Army.

Presidio of San Francisco, Cal.: Quarters are available at this post for G2 officers and 14 noncommissioned officers.' No additional quarters are necessary for officers for the present garrison at the Presidio of San Francisco, but as a number of noncommissioned officers are assigned to duty in connection with the general hospital, it is necessary to hire quarters for 10 such officers.

Additional noncommissioned officers' quarters have not been constructed at this post, as funds have not been available for the purpose. Fort Barry, Cal.: This post has accommodations for 7 officers and 5 noncommissioned officers. There are sufficient officers' quarters available, but there is a lack of quarters for noncommissioned officers, making it necessary to hire quarters for 2 additional noncommissioned officers on duty there.

Additional quarters have not been constructed for noncommissioned officers at this post owing to the fact that funds appropriated under the appropriation "Barracks and quarters, seacoast defense," have been required for more important projects elsewhere.

Fort Mason, Cal.: There are 5 sets of quarters at this post for officers and 5 sets of quarters for noncommissioned officers. There are now stationed at this post, including the commanding general of the western division and his aids, 10 officers, making it necessary to hire quarters in San Francisco for 5 officers.

Additional quarters have not been constructed at Fort Mason for the reason that it is contemplated to abandon the same as soon after the completion of the Army supply depot as practicable, as the buildings at this post are very old and of frame construction and are fast becoming uninhabitable.

No quarters are being rented for noncommissioned officers at this post, as quarters already constructed are ample for that purpose.

coming uninhabitable.

No quarters are being rented for noncommissioned officers at this post, as quarters already constructed are ample for that purpose.

Fort Miley, Cal.: Quarters are available at this post for 8 officers and 6 noncommissioned officers, which are sufficient for the company of Coast Artillery stationed there, and no additional quarters are being rented either for officers or noncommissioned officers.

Fort Winfield Scott, Cal.: Construction work at this post has not yet been completed. Accommodations are nearing completion for 10 companies of Coast Artillery, and it is thought that with the 25 sets of officers' quarters and 14 sets of noncommissioned officers' quarters provided for no additional quarters will have to be rented.

Quarters for 13 noncommissioned officers on duty at headquarters, western division, at San Francisco, are rented for them at that place for the reason that there are no owned quarters in that city for their use nor accommodations for them at the Presidio or other posts in the vicinity.

War Department,
Office of the Chief of Engineers,
Washington, D. C., November 10, 1011.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR. 1. Complying with Senate resolution 123, Sixty-second Congress, first session, adopted July 28, 1911, copy of which was referred to this office by the War Department on August 16, 1911, I have the honor to submit herewith statements giving the information called for by the resolution, as follows:

1. A statement marked "A," showing what provision is made by the Government for residences, offices, and other uses of officers of the Corps of Engineers and employees of the Engineer Department at Large in or on the Presidio or other Government-owned property in or near the city of San Francisco, Cal. There are no buildings, rooms, dwelling houses, and offices rented or leased in the city of San Francisco for the use of the Engineer Department at Large, and no provision is made for otherwise acquiring such properties, except the statutory provision for the payment of commutation of quarters to officers not furnished with quarters in kind.

2. A statement marked "B," showing dwelling houses, rooms, offices.

quarters in kind.

2. A statement marked "B," showing dwelling houses, rooms, effices, and other places rented or leased in other cities within the continental limits of the United States for the use of officers of the Corps of Engineers or employees of the Engineer Department at Large, the price paid for each, and the purpose for which each is used. All of these leased properties are at present needed for the conduct of the business of the Engineer Department at Large, in connection with river and harbor work, fortification work, and other matters committed to the charge of the Chief of Engineers.

3. A statement marked "C," showing the total sum per annum now being paid by the United States for rented or leased property for the use of officers of the Corps of Engineers and employees of the Engineer Department at Large.

Very respectfully,

W. H. Bixby,

Chief of Engineers, United States Army

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, November 10, 1911.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

The Secretary of War.

Sir: 1. In connection with my report of this date on Senate resolution 123, Sixty-second Congress, first session, I have the honor to submit the following supplementary remarks upon the question asked in the last three lines of the first paragraph of the resolution, as follows:

"If homes and offices and other facilities for the use of such officers and employees on or in said Government-owned property are not provided, why the same have not been so provided."

2. As this is a question of War Department policy rather than of fact, the Chief of Engineers deems it proper that his remarks upon this subject be submitted separately from his formal report upon the facts of the case.

3. The officers of the Corps of Engineers on duty in San Francisco are not on duty with troops, but are engaged in directing works of river and harbor improvement, fortification work, and operations under the control of the California Débris Commission, and one is Chief Engineer Officer of the Pacific Division; and while it would be permissible and proper that the officer in charge of fortification work and the chief engineer officer of the division should have quarters on the Presidio or other Government-owned reservations in San Francisco, if there were available quarters not needed for military purposes, the policy of constructing quarters on a military post, and presumably from military funds, especially for the occupancy of officers engaged primarily on work not connected with troops, does not appear to be advantageous. These officers are stationed, not at the Presidio, but in the city of San Francisco. Except for a comparatively small amount of fortification work, their present duties are performed elsewhere than at the Presidio, and there is no public necessity for their residing on or near that or any other military reservation. Considering the initial cost of suitable quarters and the annual cost of upkeep, it is believed that the construction and maintenance of quarters for these officers on a Government arrangements.

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION,
Washington Office, December 4, 1911.

Memorandum for the assistant and chief clerk, War Department:
In response to the request from your office for information regarding the lease of offices by the Isthmian Canal Commission, I beg to state that the Isthmian Canal Commission occupies, under a lease from Gen. Anson Mills, the five lower stories and basement of the eight-story steel structure on G Street, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth Streets NW., Washington, D. C., known as "Mills addition," at a rental of $7,500 per annum.

The United States has the right to renew the lease from year to year for 10 years from April 1, 1905, by giving the lessor 30 days' notice.
The building is used for the offices of the Isthmian Canal Commission at Washington.

The statutory authority under which the lease was made will be found in section 7 of the act approved June 28, 1902. (See U. S. Stats., 481.)

JOHN T. DILLON, Chief Correspondence Division.

Mr. DU PONT. Even admitting that there would be a local economy in San Francisco by the adoption of this amendment, it is evident to my mind that any question of this kind should be considered as a whole all over the country and with reference to all parts of the military establishment, and that the War Department should have an opportunity to pass upon it war Department should have an opportunity to pass upon it and express its judgment.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DU PONT. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware yield.

ware what consideration has been given to that portion of the report of the War Department which I have just read recommending the construction of this very building?

Mr. DU PONT. I did not understand that the War Department had recommended its construction. At all events it has not been estimated for; the subject has not been considered by the committee or reported by any standing committee of the Senate, and I therefore make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BACON. I send to the desk an amendment which I ask may be read.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

Sec. 2. That the fourth section of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," be amended by adding the following as a proviso thereto: "Provided, That the call for militia from any State shall be made by requisition made by the President upon the governor of said State, in which the number of troops required from such State shall be specified and the length of the service required of them."

Mr. President, I want to say just one word. I recognize that the amendment proposes general legislation. I think the present law is defective. Of course if the amendment is ruled out I shall introduce it as a separate bill, and I simply want to call attention to it because possibly it might be accepted and make the matter more easily disposed of.

The fourth section of the Dick Act is in this language:

It shall be lawful for the President to call forth, for a period not exceeding nine months, such number of the militia of the State or of the States or Territories.

And so forth.

Now, the proviso which I suggest and offer as an amendment to this bill simply describes the way in which the call shall be made. I think two things are manifest. In the first place, the proviso prescribes the manner which has been followed for over a hundred years up to the passage of the Dick bill. I want to say that I had a considerable part in the discussion when the Dick bill was passed.

But there were other features which were more directly within my contemplation at the time and that escaped me. I did not notice it at the time it was passed. Aside from the fact that it is the present provision in law, contrary to the practice of over a hundred years, I think it is important that we should conform to that form of practice for several reasons. I can not elaborate them all. I will not do it, because I do not know whether the Senate is disposed to accept it as an amendment now or to rule it out of order.

There is one consideration of a practical character, though, outside of all others, which it seems to me ought to commend this provision to the committee charged with the military affairs of the Senate. The present law contemplates necessarily only the calling out of such portion of the militia as may be organized. Manifestly the President would have no opportunity to call out any other part of the militia. That portion of the militia which is thus organized is an insignificant portion of the general militia of the States, and may upon occasion be utterly insufficient to meet the requirements of the call. I do not know how many, but I suppose the enrolled Organized Militia of the United States consists of certainly a very small number compared with what would be required if there was an emergency upon us.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator suspend for a moment? The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated. The Secretary. A bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, on the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. It must be apparent that if an emergency would arise in which there should be a greater number required than is now found in what is known as the Organized Militia or the National Guard it would be impracticable to call for the or the National Guard it would be impracticable to call for the required number through the machinery of this law. Necessarily it would have to be done through the operation of the States in the organization of additional troops. That has occurred, of course, frequently, or several times, at least, in our history in the past. At the time of the outbreak of the Civil War, when Mr. Lincoln called for 75,000 troops, which was his first call, there was not that number of Organized Militia in the United States, and all the troops which were called out in the Civil War, both in the Union Army and in the Confederate Army, were called out in the way that this amendment provides they shall be called out—by a requisition upon the governor. they shall be called out—by a requisition upon the governor. If there are organized National Guard companies sufficient to meet the demand, of course the governor will order them out. If not, there is always a provision in the laws of the several States for the organization of companies, and in that way, the call being made by the governor, whatever the number may be, if it were a million men, the States could, through their proper organizations, or, rather, through the laws providing for the organizations, meet that demand. But as it now stands, if a call were made which exceeded the number, it could not be met; there would have to be some other rule.

There are a great many other considerations, Mr. President, which I will urge later if the committee is disposed to accept the amendment, but I will not take the time of the Senate now unless I find a disposition on the part of the committee to act

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I find myself in entire agreement with the Senator from Georgia upon the question of the propriety and desirableness of continuing to follow the traditional custom in regard to the calling out of the militia; but there are many things to be said regarding the particular change of the statute which the Senator from Georgia proposes, many things which would probably have to be said regarding any kind of a change that we should make. It is a large subject, a subject that ought to be very fully considered, and I do not think that we can properly consider it now. Therefore I feel disposed to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I recognize that it is general legislation. simply desire to say that I will introduce a bill to the same effect and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in order that the matter may have the consideration which the Senator from New York suggests.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order raised by the Senator from New York is sustained. Are there other amendments to the bill? Mr. SWANSON. Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts I said that the bill that we were considering was properly prepared under the rules of the House. He thought otherwise.

Mr. LODGE. No, Mr. President; I did not mean to question the Senator. He is undoubtedly right. The Holman rule has been readopted.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply wish to request that the rule of the House be put in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the number What is the number of the rule?

Mr. SWANSON. It is Rule XXI.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter indicated by the Senator from Virginia will be inserted as a part of his remarks

The matter referred to is as follows:

RULE XXI .- ON BILLS.

1. Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and, if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its manded by a Member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

2. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such amendment, which amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall retrench expenditures. (House Manual and Digest, p. 399f.)

Mr. LODGE: It was a change was it not from the previous

Mr. LODGE. It was a change, was it not, from the previous

Mr. SWANSON. It was a change, rather, going back to the previous rule.

Mr. LODGE. It was a reversion to the Holman rule.

Mr. SWANSON. The old Holman rule. I wish to say in justification of its being in accordance with its rules, that the Committee on Rules cut the expenditures from the estimates about $9,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments to be offered as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that the Senator from Virginia was talking about the provision striking off the Cavalry regiments. If that is the case, that was in order in the House and it was not a supercession of the rules, not only under the old Holman rule, but the rule which prevailed under Speaker Reed, Speaker Henderson, and everybody else. amendment in the House is a limitation upon the expenditure of the money it is not obnoxious to the general rule about new

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have an amendment which is on the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which will be read.

The Secretary. On page 7, line 4, after the word "dollars," insert the following words:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which any other officer by his order shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I offered an amendment in the Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Wyoming made the objection to it that if no money should be paid out to the officer who was detached from the organization it would work this injustice, that some superior officer would order him detached and keep him there beyond the period of the law, and that instead of punishing the guilty party we were punishing the officer for obeying orders. My reply to that, you will remember, was that I did not believe the superior officer, if that were the law, would give the order. But I have changed this now, so that the money shall not be paid to the officer giving the order during the period in which the officer subject to his command is by his order violating the law.

I hope the amendment will pass.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that the Senator offers that as a new amendment to come in at the end of page 7.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is offered as an amendment to the Senate committee amendment, striking out the Senate committee amendment and substituting the language which has just been read, and I was explaining its effect.

Mr. WARREN. The Senate committee amendment striking out the House paragraph is mixed up more or less with the one that follows. I have no objection, if the Senator will offer it as a separate amendment, and let it go in with the other, and then it will be in a position where the conferees can have possession of the whole subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If you do that, it seems to me that you would have two provisions in the bill which are not in accord with one another.

Mr. WARREN. That is exactly what I want to avoid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, yes; but— Mr. WARREN. I feared that the Senator, in striking it

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait until I explain it. Mr. WARREN. May I have the Senator's attention for a moment? I feared that in striking that out the Senator might interfere with the amendment which followed, and therefore if he would put in his amendment before or after the other the conferees could make it all harmonious.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can explain what I mean to the Senator. The language which is now in the bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate is the language of the Senate committee's amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole, and it reads:

Provided, That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached or permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least three years of the preceding period of six years prior to such detachment with the regiment or regiments of Cavairy, Field Artillery, or Infantry, or with the organizations of the Coast Artillery Corps, to which he shall have been assigned by the War Department; but this shall not apply to officers detailed in the Ordanace Department and the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as authorized by the acts of Congress approved June 25, 1906, and March 2, 1907.

Now, then, my amendment is to restore the House provision with a change. The House provision reads:

That no money appropriated-

My amendment is to strike out this proviso and restore the House provision with the change

Mr. WARREN. Let me get an understanding of what the Senator proposes to strike out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just what I read. Mr. WARREN. The one paragraph, but not the last part that he read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All that I have read.
Mr. WARREN. That will not do.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not?
Mr. WARREN. Because that leaves it where we would not have possession of the second Senate amendment in conference. If the Senator will move that in place of the first paragraph that we have stricken out, there would be no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, then, I will word the amendment this way. I want to accord as far as possible with the wish of the Senator from Wyoming. I move to strike out this language; the clerks will follow the reading:

Provided, That hereafter in time of peace no officer of the line shall be detached or permitted to remain detached from his regiment or corps who has not served for at least three years of the preceding period of six years prior to such detachment with the regiment or regiments of Cavalry, Field Artillery, or Infantry, or with the organizations of the Const Artillery Corps, to which he shall have been assigned by the War Department.

And, stopping right there, then substitute for that language stricken out the following:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which any other officer by his order shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator listen to me for a moment? If he would strike this out:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which he shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than—

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not my amendment.

Mr. WARREN. And put the Senator's amendment in, he would then leave this subject to action in conference, and it goes further in the line the Senator wants than does his own amendment. If he would strike out the upper paragraph and not strike the other out-

Mr. WILLIAMS. I catch the idea now. I did not at first catch it. I think we can agree upon it. I move, immediately following the period after the word "dollars," in line 4, on page 7, that there be inserted the following language, to wit:

That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which any other officer by his order shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

Mr. WARREN. That is all right. The Senator should, per-haps, put the word "Provided" at the commencement of his amendment

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see no necessity for it, but I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see no necessity for putting in the word "Provided" at the beginning.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, I must object to that, because as long as the word "organization" is put in it will fail to stop the very abuse we are trying to regulate. An officer now is commissioned in the Infantry, and he might be kept away indefinitely from his regiment by a process of favoritism if it is left in that way, and precisely the difficulty the Senator's amendment is to regulate will occur.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified.

Mr. WARREN. I think the chairman of the committee misunderstands the situation, or proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Secretary first report the amendment.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the amendment may be read. Possibly I misunderstood it.

The Secretary. On page 7, line 4, after the word "dollars," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following words:

Provided, That no money appropriated by this act shall be paid to any officer for any period during which any other officer by his order shall have been detached for any duty of any kind for more than four of the preceding six years from the organization in which he is commissioned, unless such continuous detachment from such organization for more than four years shall have been specifically authorized by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In line 14 I ask that the word "three" be stricken out and "two" inserted. I believe there is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 7, in the committee amendment, line 14, before the word "years," strike out "three" and insert "two."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to. Without objection, the amendment as amended is agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MEAT-INSPECTION SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 694).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The Secretary of Agriculture, with my consent, has sent through the Secretary of the Treasury to the Congress an estimate for an appropriation of $1,000,000 beyond the present permanent appropriation for the meat-inspection service in the Department of Agriculture. The increase is necessary to enable the department to inspect microscopically the flesh of hogs that is to be converted into meat food products which ordinarily are eaten without cooking. Several deaths have resulted from eating such products which contained triching. The Swiss minister is now seeking reparation on account of the deaths and serious illness of several citizens of Switzerland. These deaths and serious illnesses are claimed to have been caused by eating American meat which contained triching. The Department of Agriculture has issued warning circulars and caused notices to be printed in the newspapers of the country concerning the danger of eating such uncooked products. The microscopic inspection of the flesh of all hogs would require an increase of $4,000,000 in the appropriation. This is not deemed necessary. There is ample authority in the meat-inspection act to make the microscopic inspection, but no money has ever been provided. Therefore I urge upon the Congress the appropriation of $1,000,000 for this purpose on the ground that the emergency demands such action.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 12, 1912.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2. An act supplementary to and amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Nation of Indians in Oklahoma," approved June 28, 1906, and for other purposes; and H. R. 20190. An act to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rock River, Ill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 12371. An act for the relief of Spencer Roberts, a member of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 14094. An act declaring the carrying concealed about the person any pistol, bowie knife, dirk or clasp knife or razor, blackjack, dagger, sword cane, slung shot, brass or other metal knuckles, in the District of Columbia a felony.

LANDS AND WATERS NEAR CITY OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 22642) providing for the protection of the interests of the United States in lands and waters comprising any part of the Potomac River, the Anacostia River or Eastern Branch, and Rock Creek and lands adjacent thereto, was read twice by its title.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, some time ago the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia reported unanimously a bill almost identical with that bill, and it is now on the calendar. For that reason, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which has come from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am informed that a party connected with the office of the Attorney General has suggested to a member of the committee that a slight amendment is desired in this bill. I will therefore ask that it may lie on the table for the present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will lie on the table.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY AND WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, some days ago when the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] reported the bill (S. 5382) to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries, resulting in disability or death, to employees of common carriers by railroad engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, I gave notice that I would at some convenient time submit minority views, or, rather, my individual views, in opposi-tion to the passage of the bill. I do that now and ask that the manuscript may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be printed, without objection, as Part 2 of Senate Report No. 553.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 5382, to which the Senator from Texas has just referred.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEA. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 17029) authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post.

Mr. WARREN. There is an appropriation bill ready for action, and I shall have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to call up House bill 19212, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for just a moment to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a little cannon bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Objection was made a moment ago to the consideration of a bill on the calendar, and that having been done in one case I hardly think it would be fair to have another bill taken from the calendar and considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was not objection made to going to the calendar generally? I did not know that there was objection Was not objection made to going to the

to a particular bill.

Mr. CURTIS. That was the case. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading of the bill, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be disposed of as they are reached.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be followed. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 20, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "seven," so as to make the clause read:

Agent and consul general at Cairo, $7,500.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask whether or not the changes which have been made are in accord with the general bill, which I am not sure has been passed, but certainly it has been agreed upon by the Committee on Foreign Relations, classifying all the consuls and fixing their salaries. I would merely like to know if the rule of the committee has been followed.

Mr. LODGE. This is the particular case of Cairo. The Senator will remember that the consul general at Cairo is a diplomatic agent also, and he is appropriated for separately and not in the general consular bill.

Mr. BACON. Yes. The Senator from Massachusetts is, of course, familiar with the bill that we passed in the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Senator will understand the reason which prompted my inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. I agree with the Senator entirely. We have no minister, of course, in Egypt. The consul general at Cairo is a diplomatic agent and he is so designated hereas agent and consul general.

Mr. BACON. I have not had an opportunity to go through There is no change made that will interfere with the the bill. general bill?

Mr. LODGE. There are no changes from the consular bill at all.

Mr. CURTIS. None whatever. The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The reading of the biff was resulted.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Salaries of ambassadors and ministers," on page 3, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

Chargés d'affaires ad interim, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty-one," so as to make the clause read:

Total, $561,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I will make the same inquiry about those mat-I think they were generally passed upon, were they not, I will ask the Senator from Massachusetts, in our consideration of those matters?

Mr. LODGE. These diplomatic posts we have never arranged in the bill.

Mr. BACON. It is only the consular matters? Mr. LODGE. Only the consulships in the law.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Salaries of secretaries of embassies and legations," on page 3, line 10, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three thousand six" and insert "four thousand five," so as to make the clause read:

Japanese secretary of embassy to Japan, $4,500.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, of course I do not make inquiries for the purpose of interfering with the passage of the bill, but, as we are to vote on the appropriations, we ought to know something about the reasons for the changes in the law.

That is what I speak of.

Mr. CURTIS. The increases in these three items, for Japanese, Turkish, and Chinese secretaries, were made upon the recommendation of the State Department. They wanted $5,000 appropriated for each of them. We did not give all that was estimated. The increase named in the bill was made because the agents there must understand the language of the countries to which they are assigned. They are Americans who are filling those places. The different messages must be translated into the language of the country, and the department thinks it important to appropriate a sufficient amount in order to get the right class of men to fill the places.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that statement is very satisfactory, but the Senator will recognize the importance of Senators being informed of the fact which he has just stated.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I will say, however, as suggested to me by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Shively] sitting near me, that the same reasoning will apply, I presume, to the officers of almost every foreign country, though not to the same degree, I recognize, where they have not what might be called occult languages.

Mr. CURTIS. Not in the same degree as in those three countries.

Mr. BACON.

Mr. BACON. That is true. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three thousand six" and insert "four thousand five," so as to make the clause read:

Turkish secretary of embassy to Turkey, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three thousand six" and insert "four thousand five," so as to make the clause read:

Chinese secretary, legation to China, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 11, before the word "hundred," to strike out "thirty-nine thousand one" and insert "forty-one thousand eight," so as to make the clause read: Total, $141,875.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries of diplomatic and consular officers while receiving instructions and making transits," on page 5, line 20, before the words "as may be," to strike out "or so much thereof" and insert "so much," so as to make the clause read:

SALARIES OF DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS WHILE RECEIVING INSTRUCTIONS AND MAKING TRANSITS.

To pay the salaries of ambassadors, ministers, consuls, and other officers of the United States for the periods actually and necessarily occupied in receiving instructions and in making transits to and from their posts, and while awaiting recognition and authority to act, in pursuance of the provisions of section 1740 of the Revised Statutes, so much as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the subhead of "Salaries of interpreters to embassies and legations," on page 6, after line 7,

Assistant Turkish secretary to the embassy to Turkey, to be appointed from the corps of student interpreters, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 13, before the word thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "thirtyseven," so as to make the clause read:

Total, $37,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, foreign missions," on page 9, line 6, before the word "postage," to strike out "repairs"; and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to insert "and seventy-five," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, compensation of kayasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, $375,000.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Kansas to state why that $75,000 is to be added.

Mr. CURTIS. It is added upon the very urgent request of the department. I should like to read the letter of the department asking for the increase, because, I believe, that will explain it in fewer words than I can. The department says:

plain it in fewer words than I can. The department says:

Contingent expenses, foreign missions: The present appropriation of $375,000 for contingent expenses was reduced to $300,000 in the bill as reported to the House of Representatives. The amount so reported is far below the actual expenses of the Diplomatic Service, which were last year, with the exercise of the greatest economy, over $351,000. It is from this fund that rent of the diplomatic missions must be paid, and leases once entered into can not be terminated except upon due notice, in accordance with the requirements of local law. Typewriters, postage, stationery, and furniture must be provided. At the present time a large part of the business of the Diplomatic Service is necessarily carried on by telegraph. Other nations use the telegraph, and if the United States would not sacrifice the interests of its citizens it must do likewise. The amount of expenditure for this purpose can not be foreseen, and hence the fund at the disposal of the department should be satisfactorily large to provide for all ordinary contingencies. With conditions as they are at present in various quarters of the world, the expense of telegraphing is not likely to decrease, and, in general, it is to be said that the business of our diplomatic missions is steadily increasing in consequence of the growth of our commerce and interests abroad, and therefore it can not be expected that an efficient service can be maintained at less than the present cost. Viewing the matter in the most conservative manner, it is my conviction that the present standard of efficiency in the Diplomatic Service can not be maintained with less than $375,000 for contingent expenses—the appropriation for the current year.

The Senator will recall that $351,000 was used last year for

The Senator will recall that $351,000 was used last year for such expenses

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment

is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Transportation of diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts," on page 9, line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty," so as to make the clause read:

To pay the cost of the transportation of diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts, or when traveling under the orders of the Secretary of State, at the rate of 5 cents per mile, but not including any expense incurred in connection with leaves of absence, $50,000.

Mr. CURTIS. That item was increased upon the recommendation of the department, because the allowance is fixed by law and the department can not meet the requirements with the appropriation as it was made by the House of Representatives. The Secretary urges very strongly that $50,000 will be required.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I will state a matter which is familiar to all members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but which possibly was not brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations.

This item, I am satisfied, has been very largely increased over what the estimate of the other House called for, because of the very general habit of transferring these officers from one post to another, with very short service at any one particular post. I do not make this statement for the purpose of opposing the increase, but simply for the purpose of emphasizing what I know was the general feeling of the Committee on Foreign Relations, that the practice of transferring consular officers from one post to another after a very short service-in some instances less than one year at a particular post—is not only undesirable for other reasons, but is certainly undesirable because of the fact that it imposes additional expense upon the Government in order that that may be done. I only call attention to it now because my so doing may have an influence upon the practice of the department in the future or in any legislation that we may be called upon to enact in pursuance of that practice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment

is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, line 1, after the word "for," to strike out "legation" and insert "embassy," so as to make the subhead read: "Steam launch for embassy at Constantinople."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service," on page 11, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert "together with the unexpended balances of appropriations made for this object for the fiscal years 1910, 1911, and 1912, which are hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $50,000, together with the unexpended balances of appropriations made for this object for the fiscal years 1910, 1911, and 1912, which are hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

Mr. BACON. I hope that amendment will be explained.
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the department estimated for $90,000 for this work, and state in their report, in the hearings, and in a letter to the committee that they can not get along with less than $90,000 unless the unexpended balance be reapported. We find more examination and estimating the halong accordance in the committee of the strength propriated. We find upon examination and estimating the balance for the present fiscal year that there are about $44,000 of unexpended balance. That may be a little high, but the amount is substantially that. The Secretary of State says in his letter:

Is substantially that. The Secretary of State says in his letter:

It is proposed by the bill as reported to the House to reduce the appropriation for this purpose from $90,000 to $50,000. The appropriation has been $90,000 for several years, and experience has shown that while during several years the expenditures have been much less, in other years the exigencies have been such as to require practically the entire appropriation. As already explained to the committee of the House, many of these expenditures are of a temporary nature and are ultimately reimbursed and deposited to the credit of the appropriation in the Treasury. During the past two years these reimbursements have amounted to more than $20,000 a year. The good that results from a judicious expenditure of this fund and the vital importance of having at the discretion of the President ample means with which to meet the unforcescen and exigent expenditures growing out of foreign relations lead me strongly to recommend that the amount of $90,000 be appropriated, or, at least, the $50,000 with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the current year.

So the committee thought, under the circumstances if was

So the committee thought, under the circumstances, it was best to reappropriate the unexpended balance.

Mr. BACON. The question I wish to ask the Senator is this, Is the Senator prepared to tell us what were the appropriations for the same purpose during the several years when there was an unexpended balance?

Mr. CURTIS. The appropriation, as I am informed, has been $90,000 for several years. In 1910 it was $90,000, and there was a surplus of $14,000. We appropriated $90,000 last year and had a surplus of $25,000; and the surplus for the present fiscal year can not, of course, be stated now, but it will be about $30,000.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that is the point to which I wish to call attention. Of course, the Senator from New York [Mr. Root], who occupied the distinguished office of Secretary of State before he honored us by coming into this body, is very familiar with the details as to the year 1910, for instance, when he was Secretary of State. It seems that for the present fiscal year, with an appropriation of $90,000, it is estimated that there will be an unexpended balance of $30,000; in the year before, with an appropriation of $90,000, there was an unexpended balance of $25,000; and in 1909, when the distinguished Senator from New York was Secretary of State-I beg the Senator's pardon; I believe I am mistaken as to that, for the Senator went out of the office of Secretary of State, I think, about January, 1909; but, at any rate, under the present Secretary of State there have been two years that I have spoken of where there was a large unexpended balance, and in 1910 a balance, I think the Senator from Kansas said, of some $13,000-

Mr. CURTIS. Fourteen thousand dollars for 1910.

Mr. BACON. So that now the amount of unexpended balance is in the neighborhood of $68,000.

Mr. CURTIS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I said the unexpended balance for 1911 was $25,000, whereas it was only $25. Mr. BACON. That makes quite a difference.

Mr. CURTIS.

I beg the Senator's pardon. Mr. President, I am not going to make any Mr. BACON. point on it, but I do not understand why, if in one year the amount necessary to be expended for this work was only $60,000. out of an appropriation of $90,000, leaving a balance of some $30,000, we should now be required to appropriate between $90,000 and $100,000.

I want to say, in all courtesy to the Committee on Appropriations, recognizing its very great ability and great industry and fidelity, that I think this appropriation bill, with the various items we are called upon to consider, illustrates and emphasizes the fact that the appropriation bill for the Diplomatic and Consular Service ought to be committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations, for the reason that the Committee on Appropriations, not being brought actually in direct touch with the details of the foreign service, are confronted here and there with an isolated item, upon which they are called upon to pass without general information and with only such detailed informa-tion as they can get from the department, whereas the Foreign Relations Committee, having within its knowledge and daily touch the entire range of the foreign service, when a particular item is presented are in a position to judge of that item in the light of that general knowledge and without being confined to that particular item. I repeat that I make this statement in the utmost deference to the Committee on Appropriations, and that my suggestion is only based upon the fact that necessarily, being in charge of other matters, the Committee on Appropria-tions are not in a position to judge of these increases as the Foreign Relations Committee would be under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "International Bureau of Weights and Measures," on page 12, line 8, after the word "Measures," to strike out "for the year ending June 30, 1913," so as to make the clause read:

Contribution to the maintenance of the International Bureau of Weights and Measures, in conformity with the terms of the convention of May 24, 1875, the same to be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to said bureau on its certificate of apportionment, $2,895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 9, to insert: REPAIRS TO LEGATION AND CONSULAR PREMISES.

To enable the Secretary of State to keep in repair the legation and consular premises owned by the Government of the United States and occupied by its agents, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Institute of Agriculture," at the top of page 17, to insert:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 4, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL BAILWAY CONGRESS.

To pay the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress for the year 1913, $400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Sanitary Bureau," on page 17, line 11, after the word "Bureau," to strike out "for the calendar year 1913," so as to make the clause read:

For the annual share of the United States for the maintenance of the International Sanitary Bureau, $2,830.79.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 19, to insert: INTERNATIONAL SEISMOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission, $1,300.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas what the obligations of the United States are with reference to this association?

Mr. CURTIS. The United States has joined the association as a member and agreed to keep up its membership until 1916. Until that time the Congress is really obligated to make the appropriation to pay our share of the expenses.

Mr. JONES. There has been no congressional action with reference to the matter, has there?

Mr. CURTIS. There have been several appropriations.

Mr. JONES. Yes; but there is no continuing law with reference to it'

Mr. CURTIS. There is no existing law; but the item has been appropriated for, and the United States, through its representatives, has been a member and agreed to keep up that membership until 1916.

Mr. JONES. That is through the representatives of the State Department?

Mr. CURTIS. This is what the department says regarding it:

Inasmuch as the Government of the United States, by its formal notification of adherence to this association, became a member of the association, its status is determined by the agreement regarding the organization of the association, according to article 5 of which those nations are members of the association which have declared their adherence thereto, and by article 16 of the agreement which provides that the agreement is concluded for a period of 12 years, beginning April 1, 1904. Consequently, the earliest date on which this Government could withdraw from the association is March 31, 1916.

Mr. JONES. Has this agreement been ratified by the Senate in the shape of a treaty?

Mr. CURTIS. Not as a treaty, but by the fact that appropriations have been made to carry out the agreement.

Mr. JONES. Who made the agreement? Mr. CURTIS. As to that I am unable to advise the Senator definitely, but I understand the President authorized it.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment

is agreed to

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator as to the portion of the bill on page 17, as it came from the House, making provision for traveling expenses of the judge and officers of the United States court in China. I will ask the Senator if the language of that provision corresponds to the similar provision in the case of our judges at home, and whether there is any provision as to how the accounts shall be rendered? I do not mean to say that it does differ, but I think the same provision ought to be included in that provision of law that is included in the provision of law relative to the accounts to be rendered by the judges of our circuit courts of appeal and district courts.

Mr. CURTIS. They are allowed, as I understand, from the hearings

Mr. BACON. It is the same allowance—I recognize that.
Mr. CURTIS. The allowance is the same and the money is paid upon vouchers in the same way as in the case of Federal judges in this country.

Mr. BACON. Does not the law as to judges in the United States make reference to vouchers, while this provision makes none? That is the point I do not recall.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is provided for in the law establishing the court. That is my memory, and I am speaking only from memory.

Mr. BACON. I had something to do with the making of that law. I know the matter was referred to former Senator Spooner and myself, and all the provisions of the law were worked out as well as we could work them out; but whether there is a general provision in that law that vouchers shall be rendered, I do not distinctly remember.

Mr. CURTIS. The department requires vouchers. Secretary Knox stated in the hearings before the House committee that no money for this purpose was paid out except on duly authenticated vouchers.

Mr. BACON. I presume, of course, that that regulation will be enforced; but I think when we do specify what shall be done in the case of district judges and judges of the circuit courts of appeal in the United States, we ought to have a similar provision as to the judge of the United States court in China. It may be that the provision in this bill does correspond with the law to which I have referred. I do not recall, but the language ought to be the same.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the subhead "Arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain," on page 19, line 7, after the name "Great Britain," to strike out "including" and insert "in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, including office rent in the District of Columbia, and," so as to make the clause read:

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, including office rent in the District of Columbia, and the compensation of arbitrator, umpire, agent, counsel, clerical and other assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be immediately available, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "International Congress of Hygiene and Demography," on page 20, after line 16, to strike out "For the continuance of the preliminary work necessary in preparing for the meeting in the United States in the fiscal year 1913 of the Fifteenth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography in pursuance of the invitation. Hygiene and Demography, in pursuance of the invitation ex-tended by the President of the United States in virtue of the joint resolution of the Congress thereof approved February 26, 1907, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary," and insert:

To enable the Government of the United States suitably to participate in the Fifteenth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography which is to be held at the city of Washington, D. C., in 1912, in pursuance of the invitation extended by the President of the United States in virtue of the joint resolution of the Congress thereof, approved February 26, 1907, and to meet the expenses that will actually and necessarily be incurred by the United States by reason of such invitation and meeting, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 10, to insert: PERMANENT INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL FOR THE EXPLORATION OF THE SEA.

For the pro rata share of the United States in the administrative expenses of the Permanent International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, in the interests of the commercial fisheries, $5,956; for the necessary expenses of an expert official representative in attendance at the annual meeting of the council and clerical and other expenses connected with the investigations, $1,200; in all, $7,156.

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas how long we have been making appropriations for this purpose?

Mr. CURTIS. Since 1900. It originated in 1899 by an invitation of the British Government to the other States. This is our first appropriation.

Mr. JONES. We have never heretofore made any appropriation? Have we never before participated in this council?

Mr. CURTIS. The Government has participated-Mr. JONES. What is the purpose of the council.

Mr. CURTIS. It is in the interest of the fisheries.

Mr. JONES. What does the council do and how does it do it?
Mr. LODGE. It is really for the protection of and for information in regard to fisheries. It is a matter of great value to the fisheries. The expense is very small, and all maritime nations interested in that subject are represented in the council. The destruction of deep-sea fish is a very serious matter to all countries, and this is an attempt to get information on the sub-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 20, after line 21, to insert:

SECOND PAN AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS.

To enable the Government of the United States suitably to participate in the Second Pan American Scientific Congress, to be held at the city of Washington, D. C., in 1914, and for the necessary expenses for clerks, printing (including the publication of the proceedings of the congress in English and Spanish), stationery, and supplies, and other incidental expenses, including rent in the District of Columbia, and for the entertainment of the delegates, $50,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; and the Secretary of State is hereby authorized to invite the Governments of the American Republics to be represented by delegates at the said congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to inquire about this Pan American conference which is to be held here. It would seem that the United States is calling for this Pan American Congress. Is it a regular congress, called every few years? would seem so from the reading of the section:

The Secretary is hereby authorized to invite the Governments of the American Republics to be represented by delegates at the said congress.

Mr. ROOT rose.

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator from New York. Mr. ROOT. For many years the South American countries have been having a conference, an annual or biennial conference, in which they discuss a great variety of questions that are of common interest to the different countries-sanitary questions, international sanitary questions, quarantine, the protection of countries from disease, the attempt to do away with disease that is likely to be communicated to other countries, the simplification of customs laws and of the regulations which impede intercourse, and a great variety of questions that are of very great practical importance.

Some three or four or five years ago, acting under a newborn impulse of friendliness to the United States which arose about that time, they resolved to ask the United States to become a party to this regular meeting, and Congress authorized it and made an appropriation to enable the United States to We sent down to Chile at that time a very strong take part. representation, leading Americans from all parts of the country.

Mr. WARREN. At this point, does the Senator from New York remember what appropriation Chile made for this same purpose?

Mr. ROOT. I do not remember the exact figures, but it was very large.

Mr. WARREN. I understood it was $150,000.

Mr. ROOT. That would agree with my recollection. were very much pleased; indeed, our participation in that congress had a very marked effect in convincing the people of South America of our respect and regard for them and our desire to cooperate with them in a friendly way, so much so that at the close of the congress it passed a resolution to meet here next

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the point I want to get at.

Mr. ROOT. They passed that resolution. It is to give effect to that that this clause is in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. May I add that 21 countries have already accepted the invitation?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am very glad to receive that information. I am heartily in favor of doing everything in our power to encourage friendly relations with South American countries, but from this language I could not understand whether the congress was ordered to be held here or whether we are now pro-It seems from the remarks of the Senator from New York that a resolution for the assembling of the congress has already passed, and I have no objection to the item.

Mr. ROOT. They responded in the most generous and friendly spirit to our advances, and this is to enable us to be polite and friendly toward them.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if this conference is composed of persons officially appointed by the different Governments?

Mr. ROOT. Yes. It includes representatives officially appointed by the Governments, and it also includes representatives of the leading universities and scientific institutions of the different countries.

Mr. JONES. It is not composed purely of individuals voluntarily coming together?

Mr. ROOT. Oh, no; it is official.
Mr. WARREN. Our appropriation in 1908, let me say to the Senator from North Carolina, was $35,000. It was on the sundry civil appropriation act. Mr. OVERMAN. I am very glad to have the information from the Senator from New York, because I think it is a very important conference, and I heartily indorse the whole proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 10, to insert:

COMPILATION OF CHINESE TREATIES.

For the printing and binding of a compilation by the Department of State of the treaties, contracts, and international arrangements entered into by the Empire of China with other Governments, $2,500.

Mr. BACON. Let us have an explanation of that item, please.

It is a large sum of money.

Mr. CURTIS. That is for the printing and binding of a compilation by the Department of State of the treaties, contracts, and international agreements entered into by the Empire of China with other Governments.

It is the desire of the Department of State to recompile and publish the treaties, contracts, and other international and quasi international arrangements entered into during the period from the close of the Sino-Japanese War, in 1895, to the present time, which determine the rights and obligations of the Chinese Government in relation to the foreign powers and define the interrelations of those powers in the Chinese Empire.

The compilation has already been prepared, and the money is needed to print and bind it. It was prepared by W. W. Rockhill, or at least it is an extension of his publication.

Mr. BACON. Doubtless the Senator from New York can give us some detailed information in regard to the character of these documents and their volume. It is a large sum of money to be appropriated unless there is to be a large edition, and I would be very glad if the Senator would give us that information.

Doubtless he has it.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from Georgia will doubtless recall the fact that we now have a volume which was authorized by Congress a number of years ago containing the treaties between China and other powers. But since that volume was printed a great deal has happened. China has entered into a great number of treaties with other civilized powers that modify and change very materially her relation to them, and it is a day's work to get together all those papers, even if you have access to the publications in which they are—and some of them are not actually published in accessible form—and to trace down the relation between China and other powers, in order to determine what the present situation is.

Now, of course China's relations to other countries are not Now, of course China's relations to other countries are not separate and distinct as are the relations of a European country. It has relations with the treaty powers. Each treaty power has certain rights which depend upon and are affected by the treaties that China makes with other powers. We have the compound at Shanghai; we have the legations in Peking; and, under the favored-nation clauses, we are entitled and bound to see what China is doing with other countries. We exercise the right of extraterritoriality there; the matter is always complicated; and it is of really serious importance that our representatives, when called upon to maintain and assert American rights or to consider whether they shall interpose warning or suggestion in regard to anticipated movements, shall be able readily and without delay to ascertain what the real be able readily and without delay to ascertain what the real relation is. I think it is of very great importance, and that the facts stated by the Senator from New York. I was anxious, however, that there should be a statement made, because to the ordinary reader it might appear like an exorbitant sum to print certain treaties, but I understand from what the Senator from New York says that it embraces really a very large number of treaties which, when bound, will constitute a very considerable volume. I presume, of course, the Committee on Appropriations has looked into the question whether the amount proposed to be appropriated is requisite for the purpose.

Mr. CURTIS. May I add that the department desires to print about 500 copies, and there will be maps and illustrations. The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 21, after line 15, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON MARITIME LAW.

For participation by the United States, by officially appointed delegates, in the International Conference on Maritime Law to meet at Brussels, Belgium, in September 1912, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 20, to insert: INTERNATIONAL RADIOTELEGRAPHIC CONFERENCE.

For the expenses of expert delegates to the International Radiotele-graphic Conference, to be held at London in June, 1912, $5,000, and for the payment of the share of the United States in the necessary expenses of the conference and in the necessary expenses of the radiotelegraphic service of the International Telegraph Bureau at Berne, $900; in all, $5,900, to be immediately available.

The arsendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Expenses of consular inspectors," on page 23, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen," so as to make the clause read:

For the actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses of consular inspectors while traveling and inspecting under instructions from the Secretary of State, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries to consular assistants," on page 22, after line 24, to insert:

For 10 additional consular assistants, $10,000.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
Mr. CURTIS. The Secretary informed the committee that these assistants are very greatly needed, and with the permission of the Senate I will read the brief statement he makes in regard to it:

In regard to it:

In the estimates it was recommended that the corps of consular assistants be increased by the addition of 10, the object being to supply a large number of young men of suitable qualifications, who can be trained to act as vice and deputy consuls in places now too frequently filled by foreign subjects. The vast amount of valuable commercial data now being collected by our consulates can not with safety to our own people be accessible to vice consuls and clerks not in sympathy with American commercial expansion. Moreover, it is economy to increase the number of consular assistants, because, since they enter the service after examination, with the intention of winning advancement, they are more useful than clerks, and the experience which they accumulate greatly contributes to the efficiency of the service when they are ultimately advanced to the grade of consul. The gradual increase in the number of consular assistants will lead to a corresponding reduction in the expenditure for clerk hire. It is hoped that this recommendation will commend itself to the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I desire to make a remark in connection with

Mr. BACON. I desire to make a remark in connection with that. We now have a general law which provides for 30 of these assistants. This is an illustration of what I have previously said as to the propriety of these matters being considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The question whether we should have 30 assistants or whether we should have 40 is one which properly should be considered by the Foreign Relations Committee. It is a matter with which the Appropriations Committee is not properly charged. The Appropriations Committee is not properly charged. The Appropriations Committee is not properly charged. mittee is charged with the question as to what is the proper amount of money required for the service.

Here, it will be seen, is a change made in the general law, and the subject matter is entirely taken away from the committee which is charged specifically with that duty. While, of course, it is a comparatively small matter, and I shall not interpose any objection, it is one which ought to have been referred, even if it was to be acted upon by the Appropriations Committee, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment was under the subhead "Allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates," on page 23, line 5, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty," so as to make the clause read:

Allowance for clerk hire at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $350,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

the money will be well invested.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am quite sure of the importance of it, having a general but not a detailed knowledge of the word "dollars," to strike out "thousand" and insert "and seventy-one thousand six hundred," so as to make the clause

Expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent (allowance for rent not to exceed in any case 30 per cent of the officer's salary), postage, furniture, including typewriters and exchange of same, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular assistants, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the Fresident may think necessary for the several consular as and consular agencies in the transaction of their business, $471,600.

Mr. CURTIS. This gives the department the amount of their estimate. Last year they used $50,486 more than was allowed by the House. They used $450,000 and over last year, and the Secretary in his letter to the committee says that, in his judgment, it is absolutely necessary to have this amount for the

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator whether in that paragraph there are detailed estimates for these various items or whether it is all lumped together just as it is here.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course we had it from the House only. My recollection is that it is a lump estimate, but in the hearings before the House committee the matter was gone into very exhaustively and the expenditures were explained very fully.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator whether there was any evidence brought before the Senate committee that was not before the House committee; and I will state afterwards my reason for making the inquiry.

Mr. CURTIS. There was simply a letter calling the chairman's attention to the fact that this amount had been reduced. If the Senator desires, I will read to the Senate that part of the Secretary's letter.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt the letter is to the effect that there has been a reduction and that the full amount is needed. If so, it is not necessary to read the letter, but we will accept it as a statement from the Department of State. I merely call attention to it for the purpose of repeating what I have frequently had occasion to say in the Senate in regard to these appropriation bills, that the complaint that is made about extravagance is one well founded, I think, and is largely due to the fact that appropriation bills are brought into the Senate with general appropriations of lump sums for two or three different items at one time and all in one paragraph, and all estimated for and appropriated for in one lump sum, under conditions where it is utterly impossible for Senators to judge whether the appropriations are properly made or not, and there is no opportunity for the exercise of judgment and discrimination in determining whether or not there can be any saving in regard to those amounts. So as to all the appropriation bills.

Take this particular paragraph. There are probably 12 or 15 items—typewriters, traveling expenses, and so forth—all mixed together and appropriated for in one lump sum. It is an utter impossibility for any man to put his finger upon any item and say that the appropriation for that purpose is too large. The consequence is we have to swallow it whole and suffer from subsequent indigestion.

I should like to ask the Senator what is the total amount of the increase in this bill over the bill as it was passed by the House?

Mr. CURTIS. $369,556. Mr. BACON. I simply desired to have the amount stated. I did not have it at hand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BURTON. I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 16, after line 11, insert:

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union, for the promotion of international arbitration, at Brussels, Belgium, $2,500.

Mr. CURTIS. In the absence of an explanation, I shall have to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I will state that we appropriated for this union in the year 1911 an equal amount. It is found in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill for that year, on page 10:

For contribution by the United States toward the maintenance of the Bureau of the Interparliamentary Union for the promotion of international arbitration, $2,500.

It is the same sum and in almost exactly the same language. Again, in 1904, the Congress appropriated $50,000 for their entertainment in this country. The union is made up, as is generally known, of members of legislative bodies of countries having legislative bodies, and it has done a very salutary work.

Members of the House and of the Senate belong to the union.
Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the point of order.
The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 13, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 12, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for every great thought spoken or written, for every heroic deed enacted, for every spiritual uplift which has made for the betterment of mankind; and we pray most fervently that Thy spirit may come in all fullness and power to possess our minds and hearts that we may add somewhat to the world's progress and so fulfill the law and the prophets, in Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

CONTINGENT FUND DISBURSEMENT.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the following privileged resolution from the Committee

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 474 (H. Rept. 537).

House resolution 474 (H. Rept. 537).

Resolved, That the sum of $7,500 shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, on vouchers ordered by the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department or any subcommittee thereof, for the purpose of taking testimony in their investigations, as authorized under House resolution 358, adopted January 9, 1912.

That all vouchers ordered by said committee or any subcommittee of said committee shall be signed by the chairman of the committee thereof, approved by the Committee on Accounts, and evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would give the reason for this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentle-Mr. LLOYD. man from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the appropriation is to defray the expenses of a subcommittee to go down to Arizona and probably New Mexico to take testimony there with reference to the condition of some of the tribes of Indians in those States, and also with reference to reclamation projects in those States.

The reason for asking for the money to send the committee down there is merely for the purpose of economy. Some time ago the House appropriated for a subcommittee of this same committee to go to Minnesota. I have before me now some figures with reference to the expenses and the savings effected ngures with reference to the expenses and the savings effected by going to Minnesota instead of bringing the witnesses to Washington. On that trip there were 21 witnesses called, who came from Minneapolis or points beyond it, who, if they had come to Washington, would have traveled in the aggregate 25,376 miles more than they did travel. Ten cents a mile on that would be $2,537.60. There were two witnesses who came to Minneapolis from Oshkosh, Wis., and one from Wausau, Wis.

The saving on them by bringing them to Minneapolis instead of to Washington was $235.80. The committee then went about 220 miles north of Minneapolis, to Detroit, because a great many of the witnesses needed lived near Detroit. Seventy-one witnesses were subpensed to that point. If they had come to Washington the aggregate additional mileage would have been 104,370 miles. At 10 cents a mile that would have aggregated $10,437. That amount was saved by bringing them to Detroit instead of Washington. The total mileage which the committee thus saved aggregates thirteen thousand three hundred and some odd dollars.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Would the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Did those 71 witnesses which the gentleman has referred to actually attend upon the hearings? Mr. GRAHAM. They actually attended, but some of them were not called upon to testify.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. How many of them were called upon to testify out of the 71?

Mr. GRAHAM. All of them but perhaps 15 witnesses who were called at the suggestion of Mr. Beaulieu, representing some Indian interests there. He asked that those witnesses be subpænaed. The committee subpænaed them, lest he should think he was discriminated against if they were not brought in.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In the other calculation there, in which the gentleman figured out a saving of $325, how many witnesses were involved?

Mr. GRAHAM. Only three. Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Did they attend and testify? Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; they attended and testified. Then, on the other side of the account there are of course the personal expenses of the members of the subcommittee who went from Washington to Minneapolis. Only two members went. Mr. Mondell could not go, and did not. The mileage and personal expenses of the committee, the two members who went, aggregated $404.13, which, of course, ought to be taken from the other, leaving an aggregate saving of about $12,800 effected by means of sending a small subcommittee to the witnesses instead of bringing the witnesses here.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly.
Mr. MILLER. As I recall the resolution formerly reported and passed by the House, it authorized the committee to spend $2,500. At that time I thought that was insufficient.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes' additional time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MILLER. At that time I thought the amount was en-tirely insufficient if the committee intended to prosecute an exhaustive investigation of the subject matter.

I would also inquire of the gentleman if any of this $7,500 reported by the resolution this morning is intended to be in payment of expenses incurred in the last trip to Minnesota?

Mr. GRAHAM. There will be a deficit in that. The expenses were more than $2,500. But I would say, further answering that question, that the original amount of $2,500 was not the suggestion of myself or anybody connected with the committee, and at that time the chairman was not aware that out of it would have to be paid stenographers' expenses and the expenses of a deputy sergeant at arms. The stenographers' fees alone will amount to about $1,000.

Mr. MILLER. I will ask the gentleman if any of these 71 witnesses whom he has mentioned who appeared before the committee at Detroit and the twenty-odd who appeared before the committee at Minneapolis have had their mileage paid yet?

Mr. GRAHAM. The mileage has not been paid for the reason that the Clerk of the House refused to pro rate. He has not enough money to pay all of them, and he declines to begin pro rating. He thinks that would involve an unnecessary amount of trouble.

Mr. MILLER. I am sure the House wants the witnesses paid the legal amount. Can the gentleman inform us how much it would require in excess of the $2,500 heretofore allowed to pay in full these unpaid claims for mileage due these witnesses?

Mr. GRAHAM. I can not accurately at this time, because the Clerk has been paying out of that $2,500 expenses upon other matters than the White Earth matter. He has paid some other expenses which the committee incurred, treating that $2,500 as a fund to the credit of the committee to defray expenses incurred from any source.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman tell with reasonable accuracy how much would be required to pay these unpaid bills?

Mr. GRAHAM. At a mere guess, I should think a thousand dollars would be required. There will be that much expended in postage in answering inquiries from these witnesses if the bills are not paid soon.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman will pardon me; if this resolution is passed, will there be enough to pay them?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, Mr. MILLER. I assure the gentleman that I have no objection to that amount being given for the purpose. My only regret is that the original resolution did not provide specifically that a portion of this, at least, should go to pay the expense of the last investigation.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, we did not think it necessary that it should so specify on its face.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman state whether or not the proposed investigation of the Indians in the Southwest will incur a greater expense than the investigation in South Dakota and Minnesota?

Mr. GRAHAM. The expense of the committee will be greater than it was in our case, because the distance is greater. The traveling expenses will be more than ours. But my present information is that there will not be so many witnesses called as there were in the White Earth case, so that we could not make a very intelligent estimate in that regard, because, as these investigations go on, they widen out and you can not at the beginning tell just what ground you have to travel over before you get to the end.

Mr. MILLER. One more question. After this proposed investigation of Indian matters in the Southwest has been completed as contemplated by the resolution, has the gentleman in mind any other resolution contemplating additional investi-gations of Indian matters in other parts of the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM. When the original resolution was up the Crow Indians were spoken of, and the Crow question was one of the matters mentioned as being a subject for investigation.

I am now of the opinion that the amount asked for would probably cover such an investigation; but as to what the future may bring forth, I do not pretend at this time to be able to say.

Mr. MILLER. The purpose of my inquiry is to ascertain if the gentleman is in a position to state whether or not he contemplates a general investigation of Indian matters throughout the United States, wherever he feels that the situation requires it

Mr. GRAHAM. It may be impossible to foretell that. "The gentleman," like a great many others, will have to fight for his political scalp next fall.

Mr. MILLER. I understand the gentleman has been renominated by a handsome majority, and I do not suppose he will have any trouble from the poor Republicans down there.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the Republicans would treat me as well as the Democrats have-if I should have no more competition at the election than I had for the nomination-I might go into the investigation business more extensively; but I can not make any statement about it now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes more

Mr. GRAHAM. It is my present impression that beyond the possibility of an investigation of the Crow Indian affairs it would not be possible, even though the committee wished to do it, to go into anything else in the present session of Congress or before the beginning of the next session.

Mr. MILLER. I will simply state to the gentleman that at the outset, as he well knows, I was opposed to the investigation contemplated at that time, because I did not think it would produce any beneficial results. If it is the intention of the gentleman and his colleagues to have this committee investigate the Indian situation, I have no objection, but I think the appropriation should contemplate that and should be sufficiently large for that purpose. And rather than limit it to $7,500, I for one think the amount ought to be increased by doubling it; because, if the committee is going into the general investigation business, it ought to go into it thoroughly and completely, and not leave unpaid accounts behind. I am frank to say that I have a large number of communications from dissatisfied Indians, who want to know what is the matter with Uncle Sam, who say that they paid their own expenses to go as witnesses and paid 25 cents to the notaries before whom they made their affidavits, and they have not been paid a dollar.

Mr. GRAHAM. They charged the quarter up to Uncle Sam, though, all of them.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think they ought to be put in that embarrassing position.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am glad I do not have to pay postage on my replies to all the inquiries I get about those witness fees.

Mr. HILL. When the gentleman began his remarks I understood that this money was to be used partly for an investigation of the reclamation projects in Arizona and New Mexico. Has the House authorized an investigation into the expenditure of the reclamation fund?

Mr. GRAHAM. As I understand it, it is not necessary that the House should specifically authorize it. The committee has authority under the rules of the House to do it.

Have any charges been made in regard to improper use of the funds or claiming unnecessary or extravagant expenditures?

Mr. GRAHAM. No formal charges; but the group of committees, of which this is one, do not have to wait for charges to be Their duty requires them to take the initiative, and not wait until charges have been made.

Mr. HILL. I understand that. Then the committee is acting purely on its own initiative and without any reason except the natural desire to know from personal observation whether the funds have been properly expended or not.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is not quite accurate. The committee have had many communications which have not been in the nature of formal charges, but have been in the nature of complaints and suggestions as to subjects that ought to be inquired

Mr. HILL. Have the committee made any attempt to verify the truth or the reasons for such complaints by inquiry of the department officials here in Washington?

Mr. GRAHAM. The committee have gone over a great deal of material in the department files with reference to these matters, and are of the opinion that some of the reclamation projects ought to be inquired into.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will my colleague on the committee yield for a suggestion? The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hill] is undoubtedly laboring under the impression that this committee is investigating only expenditures in the Interior Department. As a matter of fact, this committee is investigating any subject under the Interior Department, from a reclamation project up to an Indian question; investigating questions of administration, questions of policy, and subjects that have no relation whatever to expenditures of money, although clearly under the rule that is all the committee can investigate; and I want to say to the gentleman that the committee is doing it against my protest as a minority member.

Mr. GRAHAM. In response to the remarks of my colleague on the committee, I want to say that he has persistently and consistently insisted that our committee had no jurisdiction to do anything but breathe.

Mr. HILL. I know nothing about the facts in this case; but it struck me as a singular proposition that if no complaint had been made and no charges had been brought, if the committee was simply dividing itself up into several committees and going around the country watching where expenditures have been made, that the ultimate logic of the situation would be that the House of Representatives would be divided into 150 or 200 smelling committees, looking to see how expenditures had been made all over the United States, and that unless there was some good reason for it that ought not to be done. I have full confidence in the chairman of the committee, in his integrity, in his honesty, efficiency, and good management, but I really think there ought to be some ground, some reason given, for taking $7,500 out of the contingent fund of the House, aside from the fact that the committee, having good olfactory nerves, want to go around the country looking after the method of expenditures.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why does the gentleman call them smelling committees?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I will say, as I have said before, that without any special appropriation, under the rules of the House, this committee has the power to bring any number of witnesses from any part of the United States to Washington. We needed no appropriation for that.

Mr. HILL. I suppose that is true of every one of the 10 committees

Mr. GRAHAM. That is true of every one of the nine com-But instead of exercising that power the committee mittees. was willing in this case, for the purpose of making a saving to the Treasury, as I have shown has been done, to take this method.

Mr. HILL. But the gentleman evades my point. I want to know if there is any necessity for the committee going to investigate these reclamation projects-if they have any ground for it?

Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman misapprehends the purpose of the committee. Under the rule of the House one object is Under the rule of the House one object is to find out whether there is any reason.

Mr. HILL. Can not that be done in Washington?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not very well.

Mr. HILL. Has the committee tried? Mr. GRAHAM. We have.

Mr. HILL. And failed?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; but we have satisfied ourselves that such an investigation should be made, and so long as the committee believes that it ought to be made it should be made thoroughly and cheaply.

Mr. HILL. I agree with the gentleman,

Mr. GRAHAM. And we believe it can be made more thoroughly and more cheaply by sending three men down there.

Mr. HILL. Very well; I will vote for the resolution or any resolution that will take the entire membership of that side out of this Hall and allow us to transact business here.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the gentleman for his compliment to me and to this side of the House, because this side of the House is well aware that the gentleman from Connecticut would be glad to get his hand into the pockets of the American people and rob them through a protective tariff, which he would be likely to do if this side of the House were vacant. [Laughter.]
Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire first whether, out of this resolution, there might be paid an amount for the services of the attorney who acted last summer for the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. No. Does the gentleman understand? Mr. MANN. I heard the answer, but I understood the gentleman to say that they might pay the expenses of the investigation which he has just been carrying on in addition to the amount which has heretofore been allowed. Hence I assume that the resolution, the terms of which I do not recollect, does not confine it to any particular expense.

Mr. GRAHAM. The resolution does not, but the law and the rules of the House do.

Mr. MANN. I am glad to know it. Mr. GRAHAM. I am glad to be able to give the gentleman information.

Mr. MANN. . Mr. Speaker, I doubt the propriety of sending any committee of the House away from Washington for any purpose, unless there be special reason for it. I think, as a rule, Members of the House ought to be here transacting the business for which they are elected. There may be special reasons for this investigation. I do not When this committee went to make the investigation called the White Earth investigation I did not think that the chairman of that committee treated the minority fairly. There are three minority members upon the committee, and the chairman of the committee was notified that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] could not attend on the trip which the committee made to the Northwest, because his duties required him, in his opinion, to remain in the House, an opinion in which I concurred. I do not believe it is fair for the chairman of a committee appointing a subcommittee to purposely appoint as a minority member of that committee one who has notified him he can not attend. So much for that.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this committee has in its employ in some manner a lady named Mrs. Grey, and I presume from what I have been told that it is not the intention to pay Mrs. Grey out of this fund provided, although I do not know as to that; but I will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether, as a matter of fact, regardless of the sources of pay, Mrs. Grey has been doing work for the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does the gentleman want an answer at this time?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. A lady named Mrs. Grey has rendered the committee some service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is an investigating committee, engaged in ascertaining not only whether money has been improperly expended, but at present engaged in ascertaining what ought to be the policy of the Government concerning Indian affairs-an investigation which really should be carried on by the Committee on Indian Affairs; but, practically having in its employ this lady, Mrs. Grey, with facilities for knowing what is going on in the committee, she has exercised the right of seeking employment outside to represent people who would be affected by the action of this committee.

The gentleman a moment ago said that one of the purposes of the committee had been to investigate the Crow Indians. This lady has protested to the Secretary of the Interior against the employment of other attorneys for the Crow Indians, and has signed herself the representative of the Crow Indians of Mon-She has obtained employment and received pay from other Indians interested in matters which are pending in the department and over which this committee has jurisdiction to act. She has not only received pay in some cases, but she has sought employment in other cases. I do not believe that an employee of the House of Representatives ought to be permitted to obtain pay to represent somebody in matters before the House of Representatives. I do not believe that an employee of a committee of the House ought to be permitted to solicit or receive any employment to act in matters over which that committee has jurisdiction. It seems to me a greater outrage and scandal could not be submitted to Congress or to the House than for an employee of the House or an employee of a committee of the House to take pay to represent an outside party before the House or before that committee. Would anyone justify one of the regular employees of this House acting as a paid lobbyist before the House? Will anyone justify even a clerk of a Member of the House, not on the salary roll himself, taking employment to lobby in the House? Can anyone justify an employee of a committee of the House soliciting employment to represent outside parties before the committee of which he or she is an employee? I think it is due to the House, due to the committee, due to my colleague from Illinois, that all the actions of this lady be disavowed and that she be promptly discharged by the committee with a reprimand for acting as she has. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I want first to answer my colleague's statement with reference to the personnel of the subcommittee which went to Minnesota. The gentleman's statement with reference to the manner of the selection of the gentleman from Wyoming, Mr. Mondell, as a member of that committee has certainly been made under a misapprehension and does not conform to the facts. Mr. Mondell was ranking member of the minority upon our committee. As ranking member the chairman of the committee understood that it was the custom, and that it was the right of Mr. MONDELL to be named as the minority member of the subcommittee. He was so named. At the time his name was informally mentioned as the minority member of the committee Mr. Mondell said that he did not see how he could go, but he did not positively decline to go. He did later write a letter, not declining to serve, but tendering his resigna-

That letter reached me in Minneapolis, and I at once answered, regretting his determination not to act with us, and stating that I did not think I had any power individually to act upon that resignation, and that it would be presented to the full committee at the earliest practical moment. That was done, the resignation was withdrawn, and Mr. MONDELL is still a member of that subcommittee because he did not press his resignation. The gentleman who ranks next to him is now here. I call upon him, if he desires, to answer, to state whether he wanted to go or not. I think I violate no confidence in saying that he did not want to serve upon that subcommittee. He will be appointed as the minority member of the committee to go to Arizona, if such a committee is necessary and is justified by the action of the House.

There was no intention whatever to pick a member of the committee who would not or could not go. Far from it. We had hoped Mr. Mondell would go, and we hope that the minority member appointed with this other subcommittee will go, as I am informed he will, if this committee is authorized to leave soon, because his affairs will permit him to go in that case, but not if the committee's going is delayed further. know of no instance, Mr. Speaker, where the rule I have laid down has been violated—that is, the rule of seniority in the appointment of members of subcommittees-and as Mr. Mon-DELL was the ranking member of the committee with the minorhe was named the minority member of the subcommittee for that reason and no other.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. I think this can probably be cleared up, and it ought to be cleared up even if it takes some additional time. Did not the gentleman know before he left the city of Washington to go to Minnesota that Mr. MONDELL would not serve on that committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not know that he would not serve on the committee; he has since served notice that he would not, but I did believe that he would go to Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER. Does not the gentleman think, even if Mr. MONDELL was the ranking man, it was absolutely obligatory upon him, in view of the practice of the House, that he should have appointed the next ranking man, and, if he would not go, appoint the next ranking man?

Mr. GRAHAM. No; I do not agree with the gentleman in that regard. The chairman had no knowledge that anyone wanted to go; he had some knowledge that none wanted to go. Mr. MILLER. Of course, nobody wanted to go unless it was the chairman of the committee, but they would have gone under a sense of obligation to duty if their duties here had permitted. What I want to get from the gentleman is whether or not some Republican Member on that committee would have gone had he been appointed by the chairman.

Mr. GRAHAM. The chairman is unable to answer the question.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman permit me to put a question to the chairman? I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not informally the minority did not suggest to the chairman that they would confer and suggest a member of the minority who would serve upon the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. That occurred, and the Chair said in response to that that there was a well-established precedent in the House; that there was a custom-

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM. That there was a well-established custom in the House, much older than the chairman's service in the House, and he did not feel justified in breaking away from the precedent established.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Mondell, I believe, was present at that conference.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think so; I do not recall with certainty. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Did not, as a matter of fact, the chairman make this statement: That while in the House a rule had been adopted to allow the minority to choose its membership upon committees; that the Chair did not recognize that rule in the committee, though the suggestor did not have that in mind, but he did have in mind that the majority most naturally would want a minority representation upon the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not recall the latter part of the gentle-man's statement. I do recall that a remark was made to the effect that a majority of the House choose the membership of the House upon committees, but they did not consult the members of the committee as to where they would be placed upon the committee.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And there was no suggestion by the gentleman who mentioned the matter that he intended anything more than to mention that if the minority were given an opportunity to confer, they would probably be able to get one Member to serve, and it was so stated to the chairman.

Mr. GRAHAM. And the Chair at that time said he was not then prepared to decide that question, and it never arose again. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; he appointed the ranking member and immediately left for Minneapolis.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not immediately.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Very shortly. Mr. GRAHAM. Oh, no; nearly a week later. Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the other matter mentioned by my colleague from Illinois. He speaks about Mrs. Grey as an employee of the committee and the House. She was never an employee of the committee. Mrs. Grey gave the committee information that was of material value to it, and the committee will receive such information from the gentleman from Illinois, my colleague, if he will bring information to it

Mr. MANN. I will not take any pay for it—
Mr. GRAHAM. And the committee has been desirous and is desirous to know the facts whatever they are. Mrs. Grev has never to my knowledge received one dollar of public money and is in no way bound, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests that she is; she has never to my knowledge been in the employment of the Government.

What she has or has not been engaged in on the outside I have no knowledge, and I regard it as none of my business or of the committee's business. I repeat that the committee is desirous to know the truth wherever it comes from. They have no desire to know anything but the truth about these matters, and if anyone brings them information that proves to be true, the committee is willing to use it and let Congress and the country know what it is, whether it hurts the gentleman's feelings or not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, Is Mrs. Grey paid for furnishing this information?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mrs. Grey receives no public money whatever that I know of.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do you know who does

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no knowledge of who pays her, and it is none of my business. She is interested in Indian matters, as are dozens of others here who come and bring us information, and if that information appears to be true we are bound to make use of it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. May I ask the gentleman another question? Do you know whether or not she is paid for furnishing this information to the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is entirely immaterial whether I know it The question is with reference to whether she is employed by the committee or by the House and receives public money. I repeat, that, so far as I know, she has never received a cent of public money, certainly not with my knowledge or

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield again? I will ask this question direct: Does not the gentleman know she is paid and know who is paying her?

Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman repeats that he knows she has received no public money. And what other money she re-ceives is no business of the gentleman from Washington or of Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do you know that she has received public money?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have answered the question of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like 10 minutes. Mr. LLOYD. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when the committee was appointed I suggested the names of the members of the minority on this Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, and suggested the names of Mr. Mondell and Mr. Hanna, both of whom are experienced in land matters. I supposed that was what the committee was going to investigate. Subsequently, by reason of a resignation and a transfer of the gentleman from Missouri from this committee to another committee, made at my request, I suggested the name of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. Burke], because he was experienced in matters relating to Indian affairs, and supposing, of course, that in all fairness, when the subcommittee was appointed in reference to expenditures relating to Indians, the minority member who was posted on the subject of Indians would be selected as a member of the subcommittee. When the gentleman named his committee and named the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mon-DELL], that gentleman informed my colleague he could not serve on the committee and go to the Northwest. He came to me and conferred with me in regard to it, and wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Graham], stating that he could not and would not go.

Mr. GRAHAM. He wrote no letter, except the one containing his resignation, of which I have spoken.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman left town, and I think stopped in Illinois on the way.
Mr. GRAHAM. The gentleman is wrong.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman now says he could not accept the resignation. The gentleman had the power of appointing the committee, and the chairman of a committee with power to appoint a committee has the power to substitute some one for a member who resigns, and always has had, and I repeat that it was absolutely unfair to the minority of the House, and, in my opinion, to the majority of the House, to decline to appoint on this committee which took this trip a minority Member who was willing to serve, whom we wanted to serve, and who knew something in reference to the subject matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman says that Mrs. Grey is not paid out of the public funds. I stated I understood that before. Who does pay her? Have we come to that status where an investigating committee has an employee paid by somebody interested in the investigation? Is somebody employing Mrs. Grey to act with this committee, who is afraid of being investigated? The gentleman admits that she is rendering the service. He wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Interior in November last, stating that Mrs. Grey desired access to the records in the Secretary's office. Mrs. Grey admits occupying a desk in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, because they have been informed that she was representing the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior.

Mrs. Grey visited the agency in Arizona last September, and desired to obtain information, and the agent in charge there wired to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, asking whether he could furnish the information to Mrs. Grey, who claimed to represent the Graham committee, and who claimed to be authorized to make investigations, and in accordance with the recommendation which had been made to the officers here the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wired to the agent in Arizona to extend to Mrs. Grey every official courtesy and to give her all the information in his office.

Who pays for that? The people who are being investigated?

Is the committee permitting somebody to act as an employee of the committee who is being paid by the persons who are under investigation?

Suppose the Stanley investigating committee had attached to the personnel of that committee a paid employee of the United States Steel Corporation, with access to all of its papers? Mrs. Grey has done much more than that. In August last Mrs. Grey met an Indian by the name of Denominees and obtained from him a check for $100 for services to be rendered in connection with Indian claims. In August last Mrs. Grey wrote a letter to an Indian which contained this:

I am at present employed by the committee of the House that is investigating the Indian Bureau, having on now an investigation of the Apaches of Arizona and also the White Earth, Minn. Both of these investigations were brought to the committee by me, and I am working with one of the attorneys of the Department of Justice who has charge of the prosecution of the White Earth Reservation in Minnesota.

And then she offers to have the restrictions on this Indian removed if he will pay her $150, and also offers to represent the tribe of Indians at $10 a day.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

In November last she sought the employment of Mr. MANN. another Indian, Henry Standing Bear, from whom she received money, and then stated that she was in the employ of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and could use her influence to obtain what the Indian wanted.

Why, when I was chairman of a committee of this House, if a clerk of mine had offered to represent a railroad company interested in legislation before my committee and it came to my knowledge, the employee would have been discharged at once and the papers referred to the Department of Justice. when my colleague's attention was called to the fact that this lady had obtained $100 to represent Indians, and afterwards that the person who had paid the money became dissatisfied with the prospects and demanded the check back, I am informed by an affidavity which is an effect that the later that this later than the later that the later than the late by an affidavit, which is on file, that my colleague told Mrs. Grey to keep the money.

That is a greater scandal, in my judgment, than this committee will ever turn up [applause on the Republican side] with $7,500 or with $75,000. These investigating committees have already cost the Government close to $100,000, and no scandal has yet been exploited as great as having an employee of the committee soliciting employment for the benefit of the influence which that employee could exert on the committee.

[Applause on the Republican side.]
The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd] has three minutes.
Mr. ILOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.
The SPEAKER. Those in favor of the resolution will say

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there is a committee amendment. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amend-

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question before a vote is taken?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As I understand the statement of Mrs. Grey, and the statement of the chairman of this committee now asking for additional funds, they appear to agree that this lady is in the employ of the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I specifically stated the contrary to that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I understood the gentleman's statement, and it will appear in the Record, I hope, as he gave it. I would like to ask for information from the House before we appropriate further money for this purpose as to how this lady is paid for services to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd] desire to reply to the gentleman from South Dakota?

Mr. LLOYD. I would rather not.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows: Strike out, in lines 8 and 9, the words "or any subcommittee of said committee."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the amended resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. LLOYD. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 67, noes 41. Accordingly the resolution was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that at 5.30 p.m. to-day the House take a recess until 7.30 p. m., the evening session to be devoted to general debate on the Post Office appropriation bill, and that the House adjourn at 11 o'clock

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 21279, the Post Office appropriation bill; and pending that he asks that at 5.30 p. m. the House take a recess until 7.30 p. m., and adjourn at 11 o'clock to-night, the night session to be solely for general debate on this bill.

Mr. MANN. With no other business to be transacted at the evening session?

The SPEAKER. No other business to be transacted, except general debate.

Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Mr. MANN. gentleman from Tennessee expects that general debate will run through to-morrow, I take it? Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, there is an understanding that the bill will not be read under the five-minute rule this week?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not before Tuesday, I think.

The SPEAKER. Is then There was no objection. Is there objection?

The motion of Mr. Moon of Tennessee was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 21279) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with Mr. Hay in the chair.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, it is with a feeling of extreme pleasure that I rise to speak in favor of several sections in the Post Office appropriation bill, which proposes changes in existing law. It is particularly gratifying to me, as I have always been a firm and consistent advocate of the reforms proposed, and it will afford me the greatest pleasure to cast my vote in favor of having them enacted into law.

The provision in the bill instructing the Postmaster General not to approve or allow to be used or pay for any railway post-office car not constructed of steel, steel underframe, or equally indestructible material, will, I feel certain, meet the approval of every Member of this House. The provision has, no doubt, of every Member of this House. The provision has, no doubt, been placed there by the committee for the ultimate protection of the railway mail clerks, whose lives are in constant danger in the discharge of their duties from defective postal-car construction. The duties of railway postal clerks not only require ability of a very high order, but the position is also a hazardous The tendency of the times is to throw all proper safeguard and protection around those engaged in hazardous employment, and the Government should set an example in protecting the lives and limbs of those engaged in the distribution of the mails on the raflroads.

IN FAVOR OF AN EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The section in the bill fixing an eight-hour day for letter carriers in the City Delivery Service and post-office clerks is one that meets with my most hearty approval. It has been the policy of the Government for the past 50 years to further an eight-hour day for all Government employees. Unfortunately and for some unknown reason the post-office clerks of this country have never enjoyed the benefits of an eight-hour law or, in fact, any law that places a limit on the hours of labor they can be employed in any one day. Why this discrimination has existed against these employees of our Government it is hard to understand, as their work is very exacting, and they deserve better treatment than they have received.

until June 30, 1900. When the Post Office appropriation bill was under consideration on April 24, 1900, the chairman of the House Post Office Committee offered an amendment from the floor limiting the hours of labor of letter carriers to 48 hours during the six working days of each week. An objection was made to the amendment proposed, as it would nullify the letter carriers' eight-hour law, but the chairman of the committee arose and assured the House that his proposed amendment was introduced for the benefit of the letter carriers and met with their approval. Accepting the assurance of the chairman of the committee, the objection was withdrawn, and the 48-hour amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent. When the House convened the following day several Members arose and offered a vigorous protest against the manner in which the 48-hour amendment had been introduced on the previous day and stated that the letter carriers were opposed to a change in the eight-hour law, and the chairman of the committee assured the House that he would agree to a separate vote on his amendment. This promise, however, was not kept, and it has always been a sore spot in the minds of the letter carriers of this country when they think of the way in which their eight-hour law was taken away from them. The 48-hour law was only in force for one year, as it proved so unsatisfactory that the Post Office Department made them. no effort to have it replaced in any future appropriation bill. For nine years more the carriers continued to enjoy the benefits of the eight-hour law, until, on May 31, 1910, the Court of Claims, in a test case, decided that the act of June 2, 1900, known as the 48-hour law, superseded the eight-hour law of May 24, 1888, and a return was made to the 48-hour law on July 1, 1910. Judging from the complaints received from the letter carriers in all parts of the country, the 48-hour law is meeting with general disapproval. It appears from these complaints that there is no general rule or system under which the men are employed, and each postmaster is permitted to place his own construction on the law. There is no penalty attached to a viola-tion of the 48-hour law on the part of administrative officers, nor can the carriers collect for any overtime when they are worked in excess of 48 hours.

The Supreme Court of the United States has held that where no provision for extra pay for overtime is contained in an act of Congress, and where there is no penalty attached to an officer of the Government for a violation of the law, that such an act is merely directory and can not be enforced. It can therefore be seen that the letter carriers, while presumably working under a 48-hour law, might just as well not be working under any law at all in so far as their being able to have the present 48-hour law enforced.

I am a firm believer in the eight-hour law and believe it should be strictly enforced in every branch of the Government service. I know, from observation and investigation, the work that the letter carriers and post-office clerks are required to do, and no body of men are more entitled to the protection of an eight-hour law than are these men.

THE RIGHT OF APPEAL TO CONGRESS.

Another section in the bill which meets with my hearty approval is section 6, which grants protection to the postal employees against oppression and gives them the right of free speech and the right to consult their Representatives in Congress. Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House for eight years and during that time I have always tried to study every question that came before this House for consideration in order that I could cast my vote intelligently and for the best interests of the American people. During my first session of Congress I was desirous of learning the needs of the postal service and inquiring into the conditions of the employees. To my surprise I found that under an Executive order these civiiservice employees could not give me any information and always referred me to the postmaster or the Post Office Department. I have always been at a loss to understand why such an order was ever issued, and the more I have studied the subject the more firmly I am convinced that it should be abrogated. There are always two sides to every question, and surely if any man is competent to express an opinion regarding the needs of the postal service it is the men who perform the actual work. anyone is competent to make known unsatisfactory working conditions, who, might I ask, is better qualified to lay his proper grievances before Congress than the men who have complaints to make and who suffer from these grievances? The enactment of section 6 in the pending bill will grant to employees in the postal service the right to be furnished with a written copy of charges preferred against them and will allow the employees a On May 24, 1888, Congress passed a law limiting the hours of labor for letter carriers in the City Delivery Service to eight hours each day. This law was enjoyed by these employees complete record of each case shall be filed in the proper departreasonable time to answer said charges in writing and submit ment and copies shall be annually reported to Congress, and if the employee desires a complete record of his case it shall be furnished him on request. It will also nullify the Executive orders which prohibit employees from presenting their grievances to Congress, except through the head of their respective departments. It will, in other words, give assurance and confidence to the employees that they will at least get a square deal and will not permit of supervisory or executive officers filing charges of one kind against an employee and having him removed from the service or reduced in salary on evidence submitted on matters entirely foreign to the original charges that the employee has answered in writing. Supervisory officials will hesitate to trump up charges against an employee for the purpose of satisfying some personal feeling, as all cases of removals and reductions will be submitted to Congress each year, and if an employee can produce satisfactory evidence that he has not received the protection afforded in this bill his case can be made the subject of special inquiry if Congress so decides.

It will also permit associations of employees in the postal service to present their proper grievances to Congress without danger of the members losing their positions or being reduced in grade or compensation. It will assure the employees that their proper appeals for a redress of grievances will receive the attention they deserve and will allow the representatives of the employees to appear before committees of Congress—such as the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service—to present their side of the case on pending matters affecting the interest of the employees. It will do away with the discontent and suspicion which now exists among the employees and will restore that confidence which is necessary to get the best results from the employees.

SUBSTITUTE LETTER CARRIERS.

Another matter that I desire to speak on to-day is one that should receive the attention of the House. I have repeatedly called the attention of the House to the unsatisfactory conditions surrounding the substitute letter carrier force of this country. I had hoped that the committee in its wisdom could have found some satisfactory solution to this perplexing problem and that something practical could be done for this branch of the service. Mr. Chairman, I submit herewith a statement showing the number of substitute clerks and carriers who have resigned from the postal service during the fiscal years ended June 30, 1909, 1910, and 1911:

	Substitute—
Period.	Clerks.	Carriers.	Total.
July 1, 1908, to June 30, 1909. July 1, 1909, to June 30, 1910. July 1, 1910, to June 30, 1911.	317 417 423	540 698 712	857 1, 115 1, 135
Total	1,157	1,950	3, 107

I am not certain about the actual percentage of resignations, but am of the opinion that about 50 per cent of these who received appointments to the substitute service resign before they receive a regular appointment. I have endeavored in various ways to try and bring about a remedy in the hope that the substitute service could be made sufficiently attractive to induce the proper kind of men to accept these positions, as it is from the substitute force that the regular force of employees is recruited. I do not despair of my efforts, but will continue to draw the attention of Congress to the unsatisfactory condition surrounding the substitute letter carriers of the country until I succeed in bringing about a remedy

To my mind the position should be abolished altogether, as it is a disgrace that men should be required to perform service under the present conditions. I believe that they should receive a regular salary, and that they should be required to work eight hours each day. They should be paid at least $600 per annum during the time they serve as substitutes, as in this way they would be assured of a steady income and not be required to be living in a constant state of uncertainty as to what they will earn. I am further of the firm belief and conviction that it would be wise to abolish the $600 grade altogether, so that when these men are appointed to regular positions after serving their period of substitution that their initial salary will be at least $500 for the first year. If they serve as substitutes for a longer period than one year, I believe that the time they serve as such substitutes should count in their favor when they receive a regular appointment, and that their salary should be regulated accordingly and based on the salary law of March 2, 1907. I hope that the committee in its wisdom will take this matter up after the Post Office appropriation bill is disposed of and that they will bring in a separate measure for the relief of the substitute letter carriers.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Reilly].

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself to one or two of the legislative features of this bill.

The recommendation of the committee for an eight-hour workday for letter carriers and post-office clerks is in conformity with the settled policy of Congress, as indicated by legislation covering a period dating from 1868. The enactment of an eighthour law by Congress was unquestionably for the purpose of protecting the laboring man from the injurious consequences of prolonged physical effort, giving him more time for his personal affairs and more time and energy to devote to the cultivation of his moral and mental powers. This policy must be admitted by all to be a good one. The Federal Government has openly advocated this policy, and therefore the principle of the proposed legislation, I believe, should be considered and settled as approved in this bill.

The act of May 24, 1888, known as the letter-carriers' eighthour law, limited the hours of labor of letter carriers to not more than eight hours each day. Notwithstanding the enactment of this law by Congress, no bona fide effort was made by the Post Office officials to put it into effect until after a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. Post (148 U. S. R., 124), which was a claim of a letter carrier for payment for overtime. The result of the findings of the Supreme Court in this case was that more than $3,000,000 was allowed by commissioners appointed by the Court of Claims to letter carriers in all parts of the country for overtime

After the decision of the Supreme Court was announced Postmaster General Bissell issued an order under date of January 1, 1895, to prevent the further making of overtime, and after this order was issued no overtime was made by letter carriers. Thus it will be seen that for nearly seven years after the enactment of the letter-carriers' eight-hour law the men were required to work more than eight hours each day, but when the court de-cided that the carriers should be paid for the extra service an order from the department stopped this abuse, and the carriers for the first time actually enjoyed the benefit of a law that should have been in force for the seven years previous.

To carry out the instructions of the Postmaster General, it only required a readjustment of the routes and schedules by postmasters, and this was done without materially curtailing the service, and the rearrangement was made in such a way that it hardly attracted any public attention. It was a matter for the postmasters and supervisory employees to arrange districts and schedules so as to utilize the time of the employees to the best possible advantage, and each postmaster was held accountable for bringing about the required change.

The letter carriers continued to enjoy the benefits of the eight-hour law until June 30, 1900. When the Post Office approprintion bill making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, was under considera-tion, Mr. Loud, the chairman of the committee, offered an amendment from the floor on April 24, 1900, which reads as Provided, That letter carriers may be required to work as nearly as Provided, That letter carriers may be required to work as nearly as practicable only eight hours on each working day, but not in any event exceeding 48 hours during the six working days of each week, and such number of hours on Sunday, not exceeding eight, as may be required by the needs of the service; and if a legal holiday shall occur on any working day, the service performed on said day, if less than eight hours, shall be counted as eight hours without regard to the time actually employed.

This 48-hour law did not give satisfaction either to the letter carriers or to the officials who honestly tried to enforce it. fact, it met with such general disapproval that on April 6, 1901, the First Assistant Postmaster General called upon the Assistant Attorney General for the Post Office Department for an opinion construing the proviso in the Post Office appropriation bill. The opinion rendered was that the proviso was temporary in its operation and would end June 30, 1901, and it was left to die a natural death for the reason that the officials who had previously favored it found that it was without merit and could not be operated successfully. During the first year that it was in force and effect there were as many different constructions placed on the law as there were minds to construe it, and the result was that the carriers never knew what their hours of duty were actually going to be.

Beginning July 1, 1901, a return was made to the eight-hour law of May 24, 1888.

Under date of April 8, 1909, the Postmaster General submitted a letter to the Court of Claims, asking for an opinion as to whether the act of May 24, 1888, known as the 8-hour law, or the act of June 2, 1900, known as the 48-hour law, was in force, stating in his communication that there were controverted questions of law involved and asking the court for an opinion. On May 13, 1909, the Postmaster General transmitted to the Court of Claims, for adjudication, the question of the right of a letter carrier in the Washington (D. C.) post office to receive additional compensation for overtime.

The case in issue was that, while the carrier did not work more than 48 hours during the 6 working days of the week, there were separate days in which he worked more than 8 hours. A decision in this case was handed down by the court on May 31, 1910, in which the court decided that the act of June 2, 1900, known as the 48-hour law, was still in force, and decided the case against the carrier. The case in issue was a test case made up by the Post Office Department officials, and there was no contention on the part of the carriers of the country that the 8-hour law was being violated, nor were there any claims pending for any overtime.

The experience of the past two years, judging from the complaints of the carriers, has been anything but safisfactory, and are similar to those experienced during the first year that the law was tried as an experiment. There is no penalty attached to the present 48-hour law that will compel its enforcement either by way of payment for overtime or by compelling a strict enforcement of the law by those intrusted to carry it out.

The enactment into law of the legislation recommended in this bill will give to the letter carriers and post-office clerks the benefits of an eight-hour workday, such as is now enjoyed by other Government employees, and is the well-settled policy of Congress on this important question.

To my mind eight hours are as many as a man of average strength and health can keep up the exertion of his physical and mental forces, doing justice to his work, and retain his powers during the full office working period of a lifetime. The best interests of the postal service will be conserved by placing the clerks and carriers on an eight-hour basis, as the men will then know just how many hours of service they will be required to work and can give a better and more satisfactory service when they know that they will not be required or permitted to work an unlimited amount of time on some days, while not required to do an ordinary day's work on other days.

It is the contention of the Postmaster General that "the mails do not flow evenly or uniform in quantity on each day of the week." That the mail varies in volume is unquestionably true, and is it not a fact that the ordinary commercial business varies in activity from day to day and are not men expected and required to put forth extra effort on busy days while they can relax from their efforts on days when the volume of business is not so great?

It seems to be the contention of the department that the men should be required to work continuously up to the highest pitch of their ability and should not be allowed any breathing spell. A good draft horse would not be treated by its owner in such a manner, for no animal could stand up under a continual grind if taxed to its utmost at all times. Under the present 48-hour law the men are worked as hard as they can peg and are driven to extremes on what the officials are pleased to call a heavy day, and if the next day's mail is not sufficient to load the carrier down and he has made overtime on the previous day why a trip is omitted and he is allowed to lay off a trip, but must take out all the accumulated mail on the following trip. The time he is off duty is of no use to him, as he must report on schedule time, and it is then he receives notice that a trip is omitted and he can lie around either in a room in the basement of the post office, or if there is no waiting room then he must go out in the street and wait until reporting time for his next trip.

In the meantime the business men who received orders in the

In the meantime the business men who received orders in the mail on that light day are penalized and their mail is not delivered to them because of a desire to economize by saving a few cents on the time of the poor letter carrier. The contention is made by the officials that if we put the postal service on an eight-hour basis it will require the appointment of additional men.

Well, supposing it does require the appointment of additional men? The same contention has been made whenever any bill has come before Congress limiting the hours of labor to eight, and it has been prophesied that dire calamity would follow the enactment of such legislation, and when the bills became laws it only required the adjustment of affairs to meet the new conditions required, and this will be the result if this bill passes.

If an emergency arises which will require the employment of clerks and carriers for a longer period than eight hours in order to deliver the mail, provision is made in this bill for just such emergencies, and all that is necessary is to pay these employees for the extra service.

The department, in its desire to discredit the employees and in its opposition to an eight-hour law, makes use of the statement that—there are many who would find in this opportunity to obtain additional compensation for overtime such inducement for loitering and wasting time that the additional cost of the service would be very much.

Mr. Chairman, I consider this a gratuitous insult to these men to say that they would take advantage of this provision to obtain additional compensation. The letter carriers and post-office clerks would prefer to have a strict eight-hour law that would limit the hours of duty to not more than eight hours under any conditions; but realizing that this would possibly curtail the service in emergency periods, they waived their personal desires in order to provide for the prompt delivery of the mail under every possible condition.

There are postmasters, assistant postmasters, and super-

There are postmasters, assistant postmasters, and supervisory employees in all post offices to see that the mail is gotten out on time and that each employee is doing his full duty, and it is a sad commentary on their ability and knowledge of the service if they could not detect loitering or expansion of time on the part of the employees. They are required to do this now under present conditions, and surely the enactment of an eight-hour law would in no way limit the proper supervision of the service.

It is said that "in so far as practicable" letter carriers are now required to work no more than eight hours a day; and under a decision of the Court of Claims, rendered May 31, 1910, they can not be required to work more than 48 hours during the six working days of the week. Well, if this is so, there will need to be but little rearrangement of the service to put an eight-hour law into effect at once. The contention is made by the employees that their hours of service are not only uncertain, but that every principle of the 8-hour law is being violated and that there are as many different constructions placed on the 48-hour law as there are minds in the supervisory force.

Under the eight-hour law, passed May 24, 1888, which the letter carriers only enjoyed for a few years, there was little complaint from anyone, but those who are opposed to the eight-hour day on principle and those men holding official positions who strove to break down the eight-hour law by trying to get the carriers to evade it by working overtime and not recording it. In order to make the eight-hour law as obnoxious as possible the department issued an order that under no circumstances were carriefs to be permitted to work overtime, and when their eight hours was up they should return to the post office with the undelivered mail, which was held until the following day for delivery. Notwithstanding this handicap, the carriers performed their work in such a way that very little complaint came from the public, for the reason that when the men found that they had more mail than they could ordinarily handle they made extra efforts to get rid of all their first-class mail within schedule time.

VACATION AND SUBSTITUTES.

Another system which has been put into effect recently, and which has worked a severe hardship on the carriers, is the doubling up on their districts during the vacation period in order to save the expense of employing substitutes. As a rule the postmaster arranges to give the carriers their vacation during the summer months when it is claimed that the mail is light, and the men are compelled to serve their own district and part of the district of another carrier who is off duty on his vacation. The result is that the men are loaded down in the heated summer season, as they are in winter, with the additional labor of carrying not only their own district but additional territory with which they are unfamiliar. Complaints have been made that the men have been so taxed that they break down under the strain of the extra work placed on them during the summer vacation period and die in the harness.

FALSE ECONOMY.

Congress has appropriated money for the employment of substitutes for regular letter carriers during the vacation period, but the department instead of expending this money for the purpose for which it was appropriated has issued orders to postmasters to curtail the service and add additional territory to the men in order to economize in expenditures. Much has been said about the great economies practiced by the administration, and a publicity bureau seems to have been established to herald to the country the economies in the postal service. I am in favor of economy, as I believe that every Member of this House is also in favor of economizing along proper lines the curtailing of expenditures of public moneys, and particularly in stamping out extravagant expenditures. One serious objection to the present policy of the Post Office Department is that economies are being practiced at the expense of a curtailment of the service to such an extent that the business people have entered serious and emphatic protests against the irregular delivery of the mails; and the economies practiced at the expense of the employees by adding every possible ounce that they can stand to their burdens I feel confident does not meet with public approval. It is always the case that when savings are to be made and expenditures curtailed that the first to feel the effect of it are the hardest worked and poorest paid employees, and this seems to be particularly so in the present management of the postal service, judging from the complaints received from the rural letter carriers, the railway mail clerks, the city letter carriers, and post-office clerks.

The Postmaster General, in his letter opposing the eight-hour law, states that—

It is the policy of the department to arrange the work of clerks and carriers so that their eight hours' daily service will cover the shortest possible period of time, and the hours of duty of the great majority should not extend over 10 hours, but it is not to the interest of the service to limit this employment to any given period of 10 hours, owing to the varying schedule of arrival and departure of mails at the different offices.
